VOL. II.
M. VALERI MARTIALIS
EPIGRAMMATON

LIBER OCTAVUS

IMPORATORI DOMITIANO CAESARI AUGUSTO GERMANICO
DACICO VALERIUS MARTIALIS S.

OMNES quidem libelli mei, domine, quibus tu famam, id est vitam, dedisti, tibi supplicant; et, puto propter hoc legentur. hic tamen, qui operis nostri octavus inscribitur, occasione pietatis frequentius fruitur; minus itaque ingenio laborandum fuit, in cuius locum materia successerat: quam quidem subinde aliqua iocorum mixtura variare temptavimus, ne caelesti verucundiae tuae laudes suas, quae facilius te fatigare possint quam nos satiare, omnis versus ingereret. quamvis autem epigrammata a severissimis quoque et summae fortunae viris ita scripta sint ut mimam verborum licentiam adfectasse videantur, ego tamen illis non permisi tam lascive loqui quam solent. cum pars libri et maior et melior ad maiestatem sacri nominis tui alligata sit, meminerit non nisi religiosa purificatione lustratos accedere ad templa debere. quod

1 This book appears by internal evidence to have been published towards the end of A.D. 93. The epigrams are not, however, in chronological order.

BOOK VIII

TO THE EMPEROR DOMITIANUS, CAESAR, AUGUSTUS, CONQUEROR OF GERMANY AND DACIA, VALERIUS MARTIALIS SENDS GREETING

Of a truth all my little books, Sire, to which you have given fame, that is, life, are your suppliants, and I think will, for this reason, be read. This one, however, which is marked the eighth of my works, enjoys more frequently the opportunity of showing loyalty. Accordingly I had less occasion for the labour of invention, for which the subject-matter formed a substitute; that, however, I have here and there attempted to diversify by some intermixture of pleasantry, so that every verse should not heap upon your divine modesty its meed of praise which would more easily weary you than satiate me. And although epigrams have been written in such a style, even by men the most austere and of the highest position, as apparently to have aimed at the verbal licence of mimes, yet I have not allowed these to speak with their usual playfulness. As part of my book—and that the greater and better—is attached to the Majesty of your sacred name, it should remember that it is unfitness to approach the temple save cleansed by religious purification.² That readers

ut custoditurum me lecturi sciant, in ipso libelli huius limine profiteri brevissimo placuit epigrammate.

I

LAURIGEROS domini, liber, intrature penates disce verecundo sanctius ore loqui.
nuda recede Venus; non est tuus iste libellus:
tu mihi, tu Pallas Caesariana, veni.

II

FACTORUM genitor paresque Ianus victorem modo cum videret Histri, tot vultus sibi non satis putavit
optavitque oculos habere plures, et lingua pariter locutus omni terrarum domino deoque rerum promisit Pyliam quater senectam.
addas, Iane pater, tuam rogamus.

III

"QUINQUE satis fuerant: nam sex septemve libelli

sit pudor et finis: iam plus nihil addere nobis posite ways, i.e. towards the past and the future; or with four to represent the four seasons.

may know I shall regard this obligation, I have determined to make my profession on the very threshold of this little book by a very brief epigram.

I

Thou, my book, who art purposed to enter my Master's laurel-wreathed\(^1\) abode, learn to speak more reverently in modest speech. Undraped Venus, stand back: this little book is not thine; do thou come to me, thou, Pallas, patron of Caesar.

II

When Janus, begetter and parent of our annals,\(^2\) of late saw Hister's conqueror, he deemed his many faces were not enough for him, and wished to possess more eyes; and, speaking alike with every tongue, he promised the Lord of Earth and God of the Universe a Pylian old age\(^3\) four times over. Add, Father Janus, we entreat, your own.

III

"Five were sufficient; for six or seven books are too much: why do you want, Muse, to frolic still? Let there be some stint and an end: now nothing more can Fame give me; my book is thumbed everywhere; and when Messalla's\(^4\) pavements shall lie shivered by decay, and Licinus'\(^5\) towering marble

\(^1\) Nestor's.

\(^2\) M. Valerius Messalla Corvinus, the patron of Tibullus: cf. x. ii. 9. He repaired the Via Latina: cf. Tib. i. vii. 57. Or "saxa" may perhaps refer to his tomb.

me tamen ora legent et secum plurimus hospes
ad patrias sedes carmina nostra feret."
finieram, cum sic respondit nona sororum,
cui coma et unguento sordida vestis erat:
"Tune potes dulcis, ingrate, relinquere nugas?
dic mihi, quid melius desidiosus ages?
an iuvat ad tragicos soccvm transferre coturnos
aspera vel paribus bella tonare modis, praelegat ut tumidos rauca te voce magister,
oderit et grandis virgo bonusque puer?
scribant ista graves nimium nimiumque severi,
quo media miseris nocte lucerna videt.
at tu Romanos lepido sale tingue libellos:
adgnoscat mores vita legatque suos.
angusta cantare licet videaris avena,
dum tua multorum vincat avena tubas."

IV

Quantus, io, Latias mundi conventus ad aras suscipit et solvit pro duce vota suo!
non sunt haec hominum, Germanice, gaudia tantum,
sed faciunt ipsi nunc, puto, sacra dei.

shall be dust, yet me shall lips read, and many a sojourner shall carry my poems with him to his fatherland.” I ended; when thus replied the ninth of the Sisters,¹ her hair and vesture stained with unguent: “Can you, ungrateful man, resign your pleasant trifles? Tell me, what better thing when idle will you do? Wish you to adapt your comic shoe to the tragic buskin, or in even-footed measures² to thunder of rough wars, that a pompous pedagogue may dictate you in hoarse tones, and tall girl and honest boy hate you? Let those themes be written by men grave overmuch, and overmuch austere, whom at midnight their lamp marks at their wretched toil. But do you dip your little Roman books in sprightly wit; let Life recognize and read of her own manners. To a thin pipe you may appear to sing, if only your pipe outblow the trump of many.”

Ho! How great a concourse of the world at Latin altars makes and pays their vows⁸ for their Chief! These are not the joys of men only, Germanicus: nay, the very gods now, I ween, offer sacrifice.

V

While you give rings to girls, Macer, you have ceased, Macer, to possess rings yourself.⁴

¹ i.e. you have lost your qualification as a knight: cf. Juv. xi. 43. The ius anulorum (right to wear a gold ring) was possessed by senators, knights, and magistrates.

BOOK VIII. vi—viii

VI

Than old Auctus' antiques nothing is more odious—I prefer drinking vessels moulded from Saguntine clay—when he prates of the crazy pedigrees of his silver plate, and by his chattering makes the wine vapid. "These are cups that once belonged to Laomedon's table: to win these Apollo by his harp-playing built the walls of Troy. With this mixing-bowl fierce Rhoetus joined battle with the Lapithae:¹ you see the workmanship is dinted by the fight. These two goblets are valuable because of aged Nestor: the dove is burnished by the rubbing of the Pylian thumb. This is the tankard in which the grandson of Aeacus² ordered a fuller draught and stronger wine be mixed for his friends. In this bowl most beautiful Dido pledged Bitias when her banquet was given to the Phrygian hero."³ When you have much admired these ancient chasings, in Priam's cups you will drink Astyanax.⁴

VII

Is this your pleading of causes, is this eloquence, Cinna, in ten hours, Cinna, to say nine words? And just now in loud tones you asked for four water-clocks!⁵ Oh, what store of silence, Cinna, you possess!

VIII

Albeit thou, Janus, givest their beginning to the flying years, and dost with thy visage renew the long ages, albeit pious incense invokes thee, prayers salute thee first, to thee the consul’s joyous purple, to thee every magistrate pays court, yet this thou countest more—it has been thy fortune, Janus, in thine own month to see our god\textsuperscript{1} returning home!

IX

HYLAS, when bleary-eyed, Quintus, was willing lately to pay you three-quarters of his debt; now he is one-eyed he is willing to give half. Take it at once: brief is the opportunity for gain; if he become blind, Hylas won’t pay you a penny.

X

BASSUS has bought a cloak for ten thousand sesterces, a Tyrian of the best colour. He has made a bargain. “Did he buy so cheap?” you ask. Aye, he is not going to pay.

XI

THAT thou hast come to thy city Rhine knows already, for he too hears the voices of thy people: Sarmatian tribes as well, and Hister and the Getae, the very shout of our new-found gladness has affeared. While in the sacred Circus applause long sustained revered thee, no man perceived the steeds had four times been started. No chief has Rome so loved, nor thee so much, Caesar, as now; thee too, albeit she would, she cannot now love more.

"Why am I unwilling to marry a rich wife?" Do you ask? I am unwilling to take my wife as husband. Let the matron be subject to her husband, Priscus; in no other way do woman and man become equal.

XIII

He had been described as an idiot;¹ I bought him for twenty thousand sesterces. Give me back my money, Gargilianus; he has his wits.

XIV

That your orchard trees from Cilicia may not grow wan and dread the winter, nor too keen an air nip the tender boughs, glass casements facing the wintry south winds admit the clear suns and daylight un-defiled. But to me is assigned a garret, shut in by an ill-fitting window, in which even Boreas himself would not care to abide. Is it in such a lodging you cruelly bid your old friend dwell? Then as the guest of one of your trees I shall be more protected.²

XV

What time from Pannonian war new glory is added to the tale, and every altar makes fair offerings to greet returning Jove, while the people gives, the grateful knights give, the Senate gives incense, and a third largess makes rich the Latin tribes, Rome

You who were long a baker, Cyperus, now conduct cases, and look to make two hundred thousand sesterces a year; but you squander them, and are continually raising loans. You do not part from your rôle of baker, Cyperus; you make your bread—and make your dust fly too.³

XVII

I have pleaded your case, Sextus, for an agreed fee of two thousand sesterces. What is the reason you have sent me one thousand? “You set out none of the facts,” you remark, “and by you my case was ruined.” You owe me all the more, Sextus; I blushed.

Phosphor, bring us back day; why puttest thou off our joys? Now Caesar comes, Phosphor, bring us back day, Rome begs thee. Doth the sluggish wain of slow-twisting Bootes³ bear thee, that thou comest with too slow an axle? Thou mightest have withdrawn Cyllarus⁴ from Leda's constellation; freely will Castor now yield his steed to thee. Why stayest thou eager Titan? Already Xanthus and Aethon⁵ look for the reins; Memnon's kindly Mother⁶ wakes. Yet the slow stars yield not to glowing light, and the moon longs to see Ausonia's Chief. Now, Caesar, come thou, even by night; let the stars stand still; the people, when thou comest, shall not want for day.

If I may by chance ask for something in my bashful and slender little volume, if my page be not overbold, do thou grant it. And even if thou shalt not grant it, Caesar, allow the asking: incense and prayers never offend Jove. He who shapes sacred lineaments in gold or marble does not make gods: he makes them who prays.

Say, Toga, welcome gift to me of my eloquent friend, of what flock wouldst thou be the fame and glory? Did the Apulian herbage of Spartan Phalanthus flourish for thy sake, where Galaesus² floods the tilth with Calabrian waters? or did Tartessian Baetis, nurse of Hiberian flocks, wash thee too on the back of a Spanish sheep?³ or has thy wool counted the mouths of many-cleft Timavus, whereof trusty Cyllarus,⁴ now amid the stars, once drank? Thee it beseemed not to darken with Spartan dye, nor was Miletus worthy to stain thy fleece. Lilies thou dost outshine, and privet yet unfallen, and the ivory that gleams white on Tibur’s mount; Sparta’s swan shall yield to thee and Paphian doves, there shall yield the pearl plucked out from Eastern shoals. Yet, albeit this gift vies with new fallen snow, ’tis not more dazzling white⁵ than Parthenius its giver.

What now entertains as a spectacle in Caesar's Arena was in Brutus' days their chiepest glory. You see how the hand grasps the flame and relishes its punishment, and bravely lords it amid the astonished fire! His own spectator is he, and he admires his right hand's noble death; in the full sacrifice that hand delights. Had not, against its will, that penalty been denied it, his left hand—fiercer still—was ready to pass to the sated hearth. I care not, after such a feat, to learn what was its crime before: enough for me to have known the prowess of the hand I saw.

Otherwise, after deserting your wife at such a distance and for so long, while you are seeking three sons you will discover four!

Gliding down through the still air, a winsome dove fluttered into Arethusa’s very bosom as she sat. Chance might have played the freak had not the bird stayed, all unguarded, and refused to take the flight permitted to it. If a loving sister may hope for happier things, and prayers avail to move the Master of the World, belike from Sardinia’s shores this bird came to thee, the exile’s messenger, to herald thy brother’s return.

XXXIII

From your praetor’s crown, Paulus, you send me a leaf and require this to be called a bowl. With this film your platform was lately coated, and the pale stream of red saffron washed it away. Or rather was it a flake—I think, belonging to the leg of your couch—scraped off by the nail of a cunning slave? It can from a distance feel the fluttering of a gnat, and be wafted by the wing of the very smallest butterfly; it floats in air, kept up by the heat of a tiny lamp, and, splashed with wine even lightly sprinkled, it dissolves. With such a layer is coated on the Kalends of January the nut which a shabby client brings as a gift together with small coin. Pliant

Egyptian beans grow with a less slender filament, of thicker mould are lily leaves that fall beneath the overpowering sun; nor does the spider dart about a web so slender, nor the pendulous silkworm ply a work so light. Denser stands the chalk on old Fabulla’s face, denser swells the bubble in tumbled water, and stronger is the bladder-net that confines knotted locks, and the Batavian pomade¹ that transforms Latin tresses. With skin like this is clothed the chick in a swan’s egg, such are the patches that rest on a crescent-plastered² brow. Eastern work. How small a part of the Palatine hall¹ would Egypt’s toil achieve! Nothing so grand the eye of day sees in all the world. You would believe the seven hills uprose all together; Ossa with Thessalian Pelion atop was not so high;² Heaven it so pierces that, hidden amid the lustrous stars, its peak echoes sunlit to the thunder in the cloud below, and is sated with Phoebus’ mystic power ere Circe³ views her sire’s springing face. And yet, Augustus, this palace that with its pinnacle touches the stars, though level with Heaven, is less than its lord.

Titullus, I warn you, live your life: ever this comes late; though you begin under a pedagogue, 'tis late. But you, wretched Titullus, do not live even in old age, but wear out every threshold at levees, and sweat at daybreak beslavered with the kisses of the town; and in the three Forums, mud-bespattered in front of all the Equestrian statues, and the Temple of Mars, and the Colossus² of Augustus, you hurry ever from the third to the fifth hours.³ Plunder, hoard, rob, possess: you must resign it all. Let your proud money-chest be yellow with crowded coins, an hundred pages of debts due on the Kalends be opened, your heir will swear you have left nothing. And even when you are laid out on bier or stone, while, stuffed with papyrus, your pyre is growing high, he will in insolence kiss the weeping eunuchs; and your mourning son, whether you wish it or not, will the first night sleep with your favourite.

Whose labour is in the bowl? was it of artist Mys or of Myron? Is this Mentor's hand, or, Polyclitus, thine?¹ No darkness gives it a dull leaden hue, nor is it a cloudy mass that shrinks from assaying fires. True amber is less radiant than its yellow ore, and the fine frosted silver surpasses snow-white ivory. The workmanship yields not to the material: even so the moon rounds her orb when she shines in fullness with all her light. There stands a he-goat pranksd in the Aeolian fleece of Theban Phryxus²; by such his sister would more gladly have been borne; such a goat no Cinyphian barber ³ would deform, and thou thyself, Lyæus, wouldst consent to his cropping thine own vine.⁴ A Love in gold, two-winged, loads the back of the beast; the pipe of Pallas sounds from his tender lips; in such wise the dolphin, blithe with the burden of Methymnaean Arion,⁵ bore him, no unmelodious freight, o'er tranquil seas. Let no hand from the master's crowd of slaves, only thy hand, Cestus, first fill this peerless gift for me with fitting nectar; Cestus, the banquet's pride, mix thou the Setine: the very boy, the very goat, methinks, is athirst. Loud as is heard the roar through Massylian wilds, oft as the woodland riots with countless lion-hordes, what time the pale shepherd recalls to his Punic stead the startled bulls and flock dismayed, so great a terror roared but now on Ausonia’s sand. Who but would deem it a herd? 'Twas a single beast, but one whose laws even the very lions would tremble at, to whom marble-dight Numidia would assign a crown. Oh, what glory, what dignity did not the tawny cloud of his curved mane, when it stood erect, shed upon his neck! How that broad breast became mighty spears, and how great joy he won by his noble death! Whence came, Libya, so blest an honour to thy woods? Had he come down from Cybele’s yoke? BOOK VIII. LIX—LXI

Don’t despise the man, he is thievishness itself; Autolycus’ hand was not so sharp. When he is your guest remember to watch him carefully: then he runs amok and, though one-eyed, sees with either. Cups and dessert-spoons the anxious servants lose, and there lurks many a napkin in his warm bosom; nor is he ignorant how to withdraw by stealth even the mantle slipt from your elbow, and often he goes away clad in two cloaks; and the cunning thief does not blush to rob a sleeping home-born slave of his lamp, although it is alight. If he has seized nothing, then with crafty skill he circumvents his slave and filches his very own slippers!

LX

You might reach to the top of the Palatine Colossus if you, Claudia, were to grow shorter by a foot and a half.

LXI

Charinus is green with envy, is bursting, raging, weeping, and is looking out for high boughs to hang himself from; not now because I am acclaimed and read through the whole world, nor because, smart with bosses and cedar oil, I am spread abroad over all the nations Rome sways, but because I have in the suburbs a summer country house, and am drawn by mules no longer, as before, hired. What curse shall I utter, Severus, on his green looks? I wish him this: let him possess mules and a suburban property!

Picens writes epigrams on the backside of his paper, and complains that when he does so the god\(^1\) turns his.

LXIII

Aulus is fond of Thestylus, and has no less warmth for Alexis; perhaps now he is fond of my Hyacinthus too. Go, now! doubt after that whether my friend Aulus loves the poets themselves, seeing that he loves poets' favourites.

LXIV

That you may demand, Clytus, and exact a present, you are born eight times in a single year, and only three or four Kalends, I think, you do not keep as birthdays. Smoother though your face be than the dry beach's wave-worn pebbles, blacker your hair than a mulberry ripe to fall, though you surpass feathers in fluttering softness, or a lump of newly curdled milk, and though such a rounded fullness swells a breast as the virgin bride keeps for her spouse, yet you seem to us, Clytus, already old; for who would believe so many birthdays were Priam's or Nestor's? Let there be at length some decent limit and measure to your rapine. But if you still play with us, and a single birth in one year is now not sufficient for you, I shall regard you, Clytus, as not having been born even once.\(^2\)

\(^1\) "To regard a person as not born" was a common phrase to express that the person alluded to was a nobody: cf. iv. lxxxiii. 4; x. xxvii. 4; Petr. 58.

LXV

Here, where far-gleaming shines the sable of Fortune that gives return, was of late, happy in its lot, an open space; here, graced by the dust of Northern war, stood Caesar, shedding from his face effulgent light; here, her locks wreathed with bay, and white of vesture, Rome with voice and hand greeted her Chief. A second gift, too, attests the high merit of the spot: a consecrated arch stands in triumph over the conquered nations; here stand two chariots and many an elephant; he himself in gold is master of the mighty cars. This gate, Germanicus, is worthy of thy triumphs: such an approach it beseems the City of Mars to possess.

LXVI

To Augustus bring, ye Camenae, pious incense and victims on behalf of your Silius. Lo! by a son’s consulship Caesar, our chief and only ward, bids the twice six axes return, and the door of the poet sire resound to the lictor’s noble staff. Yet this remains for his joy to wish for, the blessed purple of a third consul. Though to Pompeius the senate, to his son-in-law Caesar, gave sacred honours, and peaceful Janus thrice enrolled their names, yet thus would Silius rather reckon repeated consulships.

4 M. hopes that Silius’ second son (who, however, died shortly afterwards) may become consul, three consulships thus falling to one house. The father was consul A.D. 68: vii. Ixiii. 9.

The boy does not yet announce to you the fifth hour, and yet you, Caecilianus, come already as my guest, although the fourth hour, hoarse with pleading, has only just enlarged the bail-bonds, and the arena still wearies the wild beasts at Flora's games. Come, run, Callistus, and call back the unwashed servants; let the couches be spread: Caecilianus, sit down. You ask for warm water: my cold has not yet arrived; my kitchen is closed and chill, its fire unlaid. Come rather at daybreak; for why should the fifth hour keep you waiting? For a breakfast you come late, Caecilianus.

He who has seen the orchards of Corcyra's king will prefer, Entellus, the country your house contains. That jealous winter may not sear the purple clusters, and chill frost consume the gifts of Bacchus, your vineyard blooms shut in transparent glass, and the fortunate grape is roofed and yet unhid. So shine a woman's limbs through silk, so is the pebble counted in pellucid water. What power has not Nature wished for mind? Barren winter is bidden to bear autumn's fruits.

Great as is the restraint, so great is the eloquence of placid Nerva,¹ but modesty restrains his power and genius. Though he might have drained sacred Permessis² in full draughts, he chose to slake his thirst with diffidence, content to wreath the poet’s brow with a slender crown, and to leave his sail unspread to the breeze of his own fame. Yet that he is the Tibullus of our time each man knows who keeps in mind the lays of learned Nero.³

Four pounds of silver plate in winter’s season you sent me, Postumianus, ten years ago. While I hoped for a greater weight—for gifts should stand fixed or grow—there arrived two pounds more or less. I came down to an eight-ounce oblong dish in the sixth year; the next was given me a bare half-pound in the shape of a small cup.

While late at night a Lingonian—just returning from the Covered² and Flaminian Ways—was making for his hired lodging, catching his big toe, he put out his ankle, and lay upset all his length on the ground. What should the Gaul do? how could he move? The huge master had a single tiny slave, so thin that he could barely carry the smallest lantern: chance came to the rescue of the wretched man, and brought aid. Four branded slaves were carrying a common corpse—the pauper's burying-ground receives a thousand such—these slaves the weak attendant besought in a low voice to shift the lifeless body wherever they wished. The load is changed and the cargo is lifted high and crammed in—a huge cargo in a narrow bier. This individual seems to me, Lucanus, to be the one of many to whom can justly be said, "O dead Gaul."³

1 Birds are, instead of being scrambled for and so torn to pieces, assigned by lot. Statius (Sylv. i. vi. 75 seq.) describes one of Domitian's Saturnalian shows, where huge clouds of birds descend "subito volat reddis" among the people, birds supposed by Verrall (DiR, Essays, 82) to have been toy ones with tickets for presents attached.

All the female friends you have are either old crones or ugly, and fouler than old crones. These, as your companions, you conduct and drag about with you through parties, colonnades, theatres. In this way, Fabulla, you are lovely, in this way young.

LXXX

Thou restorest to us, Caesar, the wonders of our honoured grandsires' age, and lettest not the times of old die, now that the ancient fashions of the Latin arena are renewed and valour fights with more natural hand. So also for the old-world fanes is kept their honour while thou art Governor, and the Cot under a Jove so worshipped keeps its sanctity; so, while thou dost found the new, thou bringest back, Augustus, the former things: what is, and what was, are owed to thee!

Not by the mystic rites of Dindymene, nor by the bull,¹ the spouse of Nile's heifer, in a word by no gods and goddesses does Gellia swear, but by her pearls. These she hugs, these she kisses passionately, these she calls her brothers, these she calls her sisters, these she loves more ardently than her two sons. If by any chance the unhappy woman should lose them, she says she would not live even an hour. Ah, how usefully now, Papirianus, would the hand of Annaeus Serenus be employed!²

LXXXII

While the throng offers to you, Augustus, its querulous petitions, the reason why we too offer to our Master a few poems, is because we know that a god can have leisure at once for business and for the Muses, and that even this wreath of song pleases you. A name born with the violets and the roses, after which the year’s best part is called, that savours of Hybla and Attic flowers,² that smells of the nest of the lordly fowl;³ a name, sweeter than nectar divine, by which Cybele’s loved boy⁴ and he who blends his draught for the Thunderer, would fain be called; whereto, shouldst thou sound it in the Palatine hall, Venuses and Cupids make answer; a name noble, soft, delicate—this I wished to utter in no rugged verse: but you, an obstinate syllable, rebel.⁵ Yet poets speak of Eiarinos; but they were Greeks, to whom nothing is denied, and whom it becomes to sound Ares short as Ares long.⁶ We cannot be so versatile, who court Muses more unbending.

Si daret autumnus mihi nomen, Oporinos essem, horrida si brumae sidera, Chimerinos; dictus ab aestivo Therinos tibi mense vocarer: tempora cui nomen verna dedere, quis est?

XIII

Nom en habes teneri quod tempora nuncupat anni, cum breve Cecropiae ver populous apes: nomen Acidalia meruit quod harundine pingi, quod Cytherea sua scribere gaudet acu; nomen Erythraeis quod littera facta lapillis, gemma quod Heliadum pollice trita notet; quod pinna scribente grus ad sidera tollant; quod decet in sola Caesaris esse domo.

XIV

Hunc quem mensa tibi, quem cena paravit amicum esse putas fidae pectus amicitiae? aprum amat et mullos et sumen et ostrea, non te. tam bene si cenem, noster amicus erit.

1 The Greek adjectives expressing autumn, winter, and summer are respectively 'Oπωρινόσ, Χειμερινόσ, and 'Επηνόσ. "Of spring" is similarly 'Εαρινόσ.
2 Acidalia was a name of Venus from a fountain in Boeotia. She was also called Cytherea from Cythera, an island off the coast of Laconia.
BOOK IX. xii—xiv

XII

Were Autumn to give me my name, Oporinus should I be, or if rough winter's sky, Chimerinos; named after summer's month, to you I should be called Therinos: who is he to whom spring's season has given his name? ¹

XIII

Thou hast a name that bespeaks the season of the budding year, when Attic bees lay waste the brief-lived spring; a name meet to be writ in colour by Acidalia's ² pen, which Cytherea joys to embroider with her own needle; a name which letters strung of Indian pearls, which a jewel of the Heliades ³ rubbed by the fingers, should mark; which cranes with wings that write upon the skies ⁴ should lift to heaven; which it beseems to be in Caesar's house alone.

XIV

This man, whom your table, whom your dinner has made your friend—think you his heart one of loyal friendship? 'Tis boar he loves, and mullet, and sow's paps, and oysters, not you. Were I to dine so well, he will be my friend.

Revered grandson of Latona, who with the magic of thy gentle herbs dost win over 4 the threads and brief distaffs of the Fates, these locks by his master praised thy 5 boy has sent, his vow's fulfilment, from Latium's city; and to his consecrated hair has he added the bright disk, by whose judgment his happy beauty was assured. I have, too, a small dwelling in the city. But my curved pole and bucket lift with labour from a shallow valley water to bestow on the thirsty garden; the arid house complains that it is freshened by no moisture, though Marcia babbles in my ears with neighbouring fount.¹ The water thou shalt give, Augustus, to my household gods will be to me a spring of Castaly or a shower of Jove.

You extol in infinite verse the baths of Ponticus who gives good dinners, Sabellus. You wish to dine, Sabellus, not to wash!

This spot of earth, which now lies wholly open, and is being covered with marble and with gold, knew our lord’s infant years.² O blessed spot! With wailings of how great a babe it echoed, and what hands it saw and upbore as they crept! Here had stood the house august that made real to the world what Rhodes, what duteous Crete³ made real to the starry heaven. Cybele’s priests guarded Jove with their rattling arms, such arms as Phrygians, but half men, could wield;⁴ but thee the Sire of the gods safeguarded, and for thee, Caesar, thunderbolt and aegis stood for spear and buckler.

¹ i.e. the birth of a god. Pallas (Pind. Ol. vii. 35) was said to have sprung from the head of Zeus at Rhodes. But some commentators think Poseidon is referred to. Zeus or Jupiter was born in Crete.

You believe, Pastor, I perhaps ask for riches for the same reasons as the vulgar and the dense-witted crowd ask, in order that Setia's glebe may wear away my hoes, and Tuscan fields clank with countless fettered slaves; that a hundred round Moorish tables may stand on Libyan tusks, and golden plating tinkle on my couches; that none but large crystal cups be rubbed by my lips, and that my Falernian darken the cooling snow;¹ that Syrian slaves in Canusian² wool may sweat beneath my litter-pole, and my chair be crowded by full-dressed clients; that the tipsy guest may be hot for page of mine, whom you would not barter even for a Ganymede; that a mud-bespattered mule may soil my Tyrian cloak, and the rod of a Massylian³ guide my horse. 'Tis none of those things—I call to witness the high gods and heaven! Then what? To make presents, Pastor, and to build.⁴

Who, portraying in a bust Imperial features, has in Latin marble surpassed Phidian ivory? This is the aspect of a world, this the countenance of Jove in calm: so thunders that god when he thunders in cloudless skies. Not a crown alone has Pallas granted thee, Carus; our master's effigy which thou dost worship has she given.

As often as we have glanced at your Hyllus while he is serving wine, 'tis with a somewhat troubled eye you regard us, Afer. What, what offence, I ask you, is it to gaze on a gentle cup-bearer? We look upon the sun, stars, temples, gods. Am I to turn away my face as if a Gorgon offered me the cup, and were assaulting my eyes and my face? Fierce was Alcides, and 'twas allowed to gaze on Hylas: Mercury is allowed to sport along with Ganymede. If you do not wish your guest to gaze on your youthful servants, Afer, you should invite Phineuses and Oedipuses.²

He who ventures to send poetry to eloquent Nerva¹ will present you, Cosmus,² with pale glaucine unguent, will give to a Paestan gardener violets and white privets, to bees of Hybla Corsican honey.³ Yet even a humble Muse possesses some charm; a cheap olive gives relish to a bass upon the board. Nevertheless you offer me an infinity of delights. But Nature is deaf, and although she may be one-eyed, she sees you anyhow.

Although, Agathinus, you deftly play a game of highest risk, yet you will not achieve the falling of your buckler.¹ Though you avoid it, it follows you, and, returning through the yielding air, settles on foot or back, on hair or finger-tip. However slippery is the stage with a Corycian saffron-shower, and although rushing winds tear at the awning that cannot be spread, the buckler, though disregarded, pervades the boy’s careless limbs, and wind and shower baffle the artist no whit. Although you try to miss, do what you will, you cannot be foiled: art is needed to make your buckler fall.

When Diodorus, leaving Egypt, was travelling to Rome to receive the Tarpeian crown, Philaenis made a vow for the return of her husband that, as an innocent girl, she would put her lips to what even chaste Sabine women love. His ship shattered by grim tempests, though plunged in the waves, and o’erwhelmed by the deep, Diodorus, to claim the vow, swam safe to land. Oh, what a very tardy and sluggish husband! If girl of mine had made this vow on the shore, I should have returned at once!

O Pontico, il perché tu mai immembri, ma usi l’adultera tua sinistra, e l’amica mano serve a Venere, pensi tu che ciò sia niente? È una scelleragine, credimi, ma si grande e tale, che appena tu stesso la concepisci nell’animo tuo. In fatti Orazio immembrò una volta sola perché generasse tre figliuoli; Marte una volta perché la casta Iliadasse i gemelli. L’uno e l’altro avrebbe distrutto ogni cosa se quel masturbatore avesse abbandonato i suoi piaceri alle sue mani. So mayst thou, Apollo, be rich in plains of Myrinal, so mayst thou alway delight in hoary swans, so may thy learned Sisters serve thee, and thy Delphic priestess speak not falsely to any man; so may the Palace court and love thee, if, at thy asking, our kindly Caesar's nod give quickly to Stella the twice six axes. I asked Vindex lately whose art and happy toil fashioned Alcides. He laughed—for this is his way—and slightly nodding, said: “Don’t you, a poet, know your Greek? The base has an inscription and shows the name.” I read “of Lysippus”: I thought it was of Phidias!

Of Democrituses, Zenos, and enigmatic Plato, and of every philosopher shown, dirty and hirsute, on a bust, you prate as if you were successor and heir of Pythagoras; and before your chin hangs a beard certainly no less than theirs. Ma ciò che tardi si senti agli ireosi, e turpemente ai pelosi, tu volenteri lo comporti rigido nelle effeminate coscie. You, who know the origins of the schools and their arguments, tell me this: what dogma, Pannychus, is it to be a pathetic?

XLVIII

Seeing that you swore, Garricus, by your sacred rites and by your head, that I was heir to a quarter of your estate, I believed you—for who would willingly damn his own wishes?—and I kept warm my hope by continual presents, among which I sent you a Laurentian boar of unusual weight: you would imagine it came from Aetolian Calydon. But you at once invited both people and Senate; a bilious Rome is still belching my boar. I myself—who could believe it?—was not added even as your last guest, aye, and not even a rib was given me or tail sent me. Concerning that quarter-estate of yours, what should I expect, Garricus? Not a twelfth of my own boar came to me!

Ingenium mihi, Gaure, probas sic esse pusillum, carmina quod faciam quae brevitate placent. confiteor. sed tu bis senis grandia libris qui scribis Priami proelia, magnus homo es? nos facimus Bruti puerum, nos Langona vivum: tu magnus luteum, Gaure, Giganta facis.

Quod semper superos invito fratre rogasti, hoc, Lucane, tibi contigit, ante mori. invidet ille tibi; Stygias nam Tullus ad umbras optabat, quamvis sit minor, ire prior. tu colis Elysios nemorisque habitator amoeni esse tuo primum nunc sine fratre cupis; et si iam nitidis alternus venit ab astris pro Polluce, mones Castora ne redate.

1 Parthenius (himself a poet: cf. xi. i.) was Domitian’s secretary, his name being derived from παρθενιος (virgin), on which M. plays. The cloak was once young and unspotted: now it is old.
2 i.e. threadbare, and therefore chill: cf. iv. xxxiv. 2.
3 It befits my poverty.
Parthenian was it once, a bard’s memorable gift: in this I went conspicuous as a knight, while it was new, while it brightly shone with glossy wool, and while it was worthy of its giver’s name. Now it is an old crone, and one scarcely to be accepted by a doddering pauper, which you may without contradiction call “snowy.” What does not length of days, what do ye not consume, ye years? This toga is no longer Parthenian: it is mine.

L

You prove to me, Gaurus, that my genius is in this way a puny one, because I make poems that please by their brevity. I confess it. But you, who in twice six books write of Priam’s wars in grand style, are you a great man? I make Brutus’ boy, I make Langon live: you, great man as you are, Gaurus, make a giant of clay.

LI

What thou didst alway crave of the High Gods, though thy brother said nay, this has fallen to thee, Lucanus—the earlier death. He envies thee; for Tullus longed, though younger than thou, to go before thee to the Stygian shades. Thou dwellest in Elysian fields, and, denizen of that pleasant grove, now for the first time desirlest to be without thy brother; and, if Castor has now come alternate from the lustrous stars in Pollux’ stead, thou dost counsel him not to return again.

4 A statuette admired by Brutus, the assassin of Caesar: cf. ii. lxxvii. 4. Of Langon nothing is known.

inspected and devoured with his eyes dainty boys, not those the outer stalls made public, but those who are guarded by the platforms of a secret stand, and whom the people do not see, nor the crowd of such as I. Then, sated with the view, he had tables and round covered table-tops laid bare, and must needs have their high-hung glistening ivory supports brought down; and, after four measurements of a tortoise-shell couch for six, he said with a sigh that it was too small for his citrus-wood table. He took counsel of his nose whether the bronzes smelt of Corinth, and condemned even your statuary, Polyclitus; and, complaInting that the crystal vases were disfigured by a small piece of glass, he put his seal on ten murrine articles, and set them aside. He weighed antique tankards, and any cups made precious by Mentor’s handiwork, and counted the emeralds set in chased gold, and every larger pearl that tinkles from a snow-white ear. Genuine sardonyxes he looked for on every table, and offered a price for some big jaspers. When at the eleventh hour, fagged out, he was at last departing, for a penny he bought two cups—and bore them off himself!

A house renowned stands in the land of Tartessus where rich Corduba woos tranquil Baetis, where fleece are yellow-pale with native ore, and living gold o'erlay the Western flock. In the middle of the house, shadowing all the abode, stands with dense leafage Caesar's plane, which an unconquered Guest's propitious hand planted, and which—then but a shoot—began from that hand to grow. It seems to feel who was its creator and lord; so green it is, and with its boughs it climbs high heaven. Ofttimes under this tree sported Fauns flown with wine, and a late-blown pipe startled the still house; and, while o'er lonely fields she fled by night from Pan, oft under these leaves the rustic Dryad nestled hid. And fragrant has the dwelling been when Lyaeus held revel, and more luxuriant grown the tree's shade from spilth of wine, and the blushing flower has been scattered down from last night's wreath, and none could claim his own roses. O thou dear to the gods! O tree of mighty Caesar! fear not the steel and sacrilegious fires. Thou mayst hope thy leafy honours shall endure for ever: it was not Pompey's hands set thee there!

tumbled by the rippling wave, with all your frets banished afar, may you with measures of dark wine break through the ice¹ while your brow blushes with rose-stitched chaplets; so for you alone may a fair boy-slave and a mistress most pure be eager, if, as I warn and pray you, Flaccus, you beware of Cyprus of evil name in summer’s height, when the threshing-floor shall bray the rustling harvests, and the Lion’s mane² be hot with rage. But do thou, goddess of Paphos, send back to our prayers, send back the youth unscathed; so may March’s kalends³ be in fealty to thee, and with incense, and new wine, and victim, there be offered to thee at thy fair altars many a quarter of parcelled cake.

Thou Appian Way, which revered Caesar in the guise of Hercules² hallows, chiefest glory of Auseonian ways, if thou desirest to know the deeds of the ancient Alcides, learn them. The Libyan he subdued, the golden apples he won; he ungirt the Amazonian targeteer of her Scythian girdle; he crowned the spoil of the lion’s skin with Arcadia’s boar; he freed the woods from the brazen-hoofed hind, the sky from the Stymphalian birds; from the Stygian flood he returned with its hound; the teeming Hydra he let no more grow stronger by death; he laved in the Tuscan stream Hesperian oxen. These things wrought the lesser Alcides; hear what that greater³ did, whom men worship at the sixth stone from Alba’s height. He redeemed the Palatine held by an evil power;⁴ his first wars he waged, a boy, for his own Jove;⁵ albeit alone he already held the reins of Julian power, he gave them up, and in a world that had been his own

If I seem too big a book and long, with my colophon delayed, read a few epigrams: I shall be a little book. Often a page of mine ends with a small poem: make me as short for yourself as you like.¹

II

Too hurried before, the composition of my tenth book has made me now recall the work that had slipt from my hands.² You will read some things you know, but polished lately by the file; the greater part will be new; reader, be kind to both, reader, who are my wealth; for when Rome had given you to me, she said: "We have nothing greater to give you. By him will you escape unthankful Lethe's sluggish stream, and will in your better part survive. Messalla's marble the wild-fig sunders, and boldly the mule-driver laughs at Crispus' steeds broken in two.³ But writings thefts do not injure, and time befriends them, and alone these monuments know not death."

¹ M. is M. Val. Messalla Corvinus, the patron of the poet Tibullus; cf. viii. iii. 5. The Crispus is probably C. Passienus Crispus of the time of Claudius, and stepfather of Nero.

The scurrilities of home-born slaves, low railing, and the foul insults of a hawket's tongue, which the broker of shattered Vatinian glasses would reject as the price of a sulphur match, a certain skulking poet scatters abroad, and would have them appear as mine. Do you believe this, Priscus? that a parrot speaks with the voice of a quail, and Canus longs to be a bagpipe-player? Far from poems of mine be black repute, poems which lustrous fame uplifts on pinions white. Why should I toil to be known so evilly when stillness can cost me nothing?

IV

You, who read of Oedipus and Thyestes neath a darkened sun, of Colchian witches and Scyllas—of what do you read but monsters? What will the rape of Hylas avail you, what Parthenopaeus and Attis, what the sleeper Endymion? or the boy stript of his gliding wings? or Hermaphroditus who hates the amorous waters? Why does the vain twaddle of a wretched sheet attract you? Read this of which Life can say: "Tis my own." Not here will you find Centaurs, not Gorgons and Harpies: 'tis of man my page smacks. But you do not wish, Mamurra, to recognize your own manners, or to know yourself. Read the Origins of Callimachus.

Who'er he be who, scorner of either stole or purple, has wounded with his wicked verse those he should respect, let him wander through the city, exile from bridge and hill, and, last amid the hoarse-throated beggars, pray for dogs' morsels of vile bread. To him may December be long and winter wet, and the shutting of the archway prolong his miserable chill; let him call those blest, and acclaim those fortunate, who are carried on the litter of Orcus. But when the threads of his last hour have been spun, and his lingering day has come, let him feel the wrangling of dogs, and flap away noxious birds with waving rags. Nor let his punishment, despite his prayers, be closed by death; but now scored by the scourge of stern Aeacus, now o'erwhelmed by the mountainous stone of restless Sisyphus, now parching amid the waters of the blabbing old man, may he weary out all the fabled torments of the poets; and when the Fury shall bid him confess the truth, may he shriek, his conscience betraying him: "I wrote it."

drink into your greedy pores the fullness of the sunshine—oh, how comely you will be while you are abroad! And you will return not to be recognized by your white-faced friends, and a pallid crowd will envy your cheeks. But Rome will quickly efface the tan your tour will have given you, though you came home swarthy with an Egyptian’s face.

XIII

Although a travelling-coach carries your lolling minions, and a Libyan outrider sweats in a long trail of dust, and your cushioned couches surround more than one warm bath, and your sea-bath is pale with the tinge of your perfumes; although draughts of Setine fill to bursting your transparent crystal, and in fairer down Venus herself does not repose; by night you lie on the threshold of a capricious mistress, and her deaf door is wet, alas! with your tears, and sighs do not cease to scorch your unhappy breast. Do you wish me to say why it is ill with you, Cotta? Because it is well.¹

XIV

You say that you yield to none of my friends in love. Yet to make this true, what, I ask, Crispus, do you—do? When I was asking you for a loan of five thousand sesterces you refused it, although your heavy coffer could not hold your moneys. When did you give me a peck of beans, or of spelt, although a tenant by the Nile tills fields of yours?

You wish in vain, Muse, to defraud Macer of his Saturnalian tribute: it can’t be; he himself asks for it, and he claims the customary jokes and no melancholy poems, and complains that my flippancies have become dumb. Marius invites no one to dinner, and sends no presents, and is surety for no one, and is unwilling to lend—in fact he has nothing. Yet a crowd is at hand to court so unprofitable a friend. Alas! what dolts, O Rome, your clients are!

XIX

This little book, not learned enough, nor very strict in tone, yet not all unrefined, go, my Thalia, and carry to eloquent Pliny: short is your labour, when you have crossed the Subura, in breasting the steep path. There you will at once notice Orpheus, spray-sprinkled, crowning his drenched audience, and the wild beasts marvelling at his song, and the Monarch’s bird that bore to the Thunderer the ravished Phrygian; there stands the modest dwelling of your own Pedo, its frieze graven with eagle of lesser wing. But take heed you give no drunken knock on Eloquence’s door at a time that is not yours; all the day he devotes to serious study, while he prepares for the ears of the Hundred Court that which time and posterity may compare even with Arpinum’s pages. Safer will you go at the time of the late-kindled lamps; that hour is yours when Lyaeus is in revel, when the rose is queen, when locks are drenched. Then let even unbending Catos read me.

That Celtiberian Salo draws me to gold-bearing shores, that I fain would see on the hillside the roofs of my native land, you are the cause, Manius, dear to me from my ingenuous years, and wooed with boyhood's friendship; than whom none else in Hibernia's land is more sweet to me, and of genuine love more worthy. At your side could I have welcomed the sun-parched Carthaginian's Gaetulian huts and the hospitality of Scythian steads. If your heart be as mine, if you have a mutual love for me, then, in whatever place, for us twain it will be Rome.

Now in his placid age happy Antonius Primus reckons fifteen Olympiads gone, and he looks back upon past days and the vista of his years, and fears not Lethe's wave now drawing nigh. A good man widens for himself his age's span; he lives twice who can find delight in life bygone.

Ocean’s surface is ruffled by a gentle breeze; yet is not the sea-floor still, but a slumberous swell bears on the gaudy shallot with the assisting air, as from the fluttering of a girl’s purple fan, when she shuns the heat, there comes refreshing cool. The line seeks not its prey in the distant sea, but the fish, descried from above, draws down the cord cast from bed or couch. If ever Nereus feel the power of Aeolus, the table, safe-supplied from its own store, laughs at the storm; the fishpond feeds turbot and home-reared bass; to its master’s call swims the dainty lamprey; the usher summons a favourite gurnard, and, bidden to appear, aged mullets put forth their heads. But when dost thou, Rome, permit to enjoy those delights? How many days of Formiae does the year put to the credit of one tied to city business? O happy porters and bailiffs! Those delights are procured for your masters, they belong to you!

XXXI

You sold a slave yesterday for twelve hundred sesterces, Calliodorus, that you might dine well once. You have not dined well: a four-pound mullet which you bought was the ornament and chief dish of your dinner. A man may cry, “This is not a fish, not a fish, you profligate: ’tis a man; a man, Calliodorus, is what you eat.”

He who shall weigh well her poems will say no maid was so roguish, will say no maid was so modest. Such—I would believe—were Egeria's³ pleasantries in Numa's dripping grot. With her as your school-mate, or with her as your teacher, you would have been more learned, Sappho, and have been chaste; but coy Phaon, had he seen her with Sappho and by her side, would have loved Sulpicia. BOOK X. xxxviii—xli

XXXVIII

Oh, those fifteen years, rapturous to you, Calenus, those wedded years which, along with your Sulpicia, the god accorded and accomplished! O nights and hours, each marked with the precious pebbles of India’s shore! Oh, what conflicts of endearments, what rivalry of love between you did your happy couch witness, and the lamp o’ersated with showers of Nicerotian perfume! You have lived, O Calenus, three lustres: this is all the life you sum, and you count your married days alone. Of them should Atropos restore you even one long asked for, you would choose it rather than four spans of Pylian old age.

XXXIX

You swear, Lesbia, you were born when Brutus was consul: you lie. Were you born, Lesbia, when Numa was king? There, too, you lie; for—as your generations declare—you are said to be fashioned of Promethean clay.

XL

Since my Polla was always being reported to me as consorting in secret with a ——, I broke in upon them, Lupus. He was not a ——

The purple robe of the Megalensian\textsuperscript{2} festival was likely to cost a hundred thousand sesterces, should you give even a too thrifty show, and the Plebeian festival\textsuperscript{3} would have run off with twenty thousand. This is not divorce, Proculeia: it is good business.

So shadowy is the down on thy cheeks, so soft that a breath, or the sun, or a soft breeze, rubs it away. With such a fleecy film are veiled ripening quinces, that gleam brightly when plucked by maiden fingers. Whenever I have too strongly impressed upon thy cheek five kisses, I become, Dindymus, bearded from thy lips.

back in your old age? Enjoyment you put off, but Atropos does not also put off her spinning, and every hour is scored against you. You will have shown to your dear friend—who would not praise this?—that your sacred word is more to you than life; yet return to your Sabine farm, and there at length abide, and count yourself one of your own friends.

XLV

If my little books contain anything delicate and toothsome, if my flattering page has any ring of eulogy, this you call tasteless and prefer to gnaw a rib, although I offer you the loin of a Laurentine boar. You may drink Vatican if you are pleased with vinegar: my wine-jar does not suit your stomach.

XLVI

You want all you say to be smart, Matho. Say sometimes what also is good; say what is middling; say sometimes what is bad.

XLVII

The things that make life happier, most genial Martial, are these: means not acquired by labour, but bequeathed; fields not unkindly, an ever blazing hearth; no lawsuit, the toga seldom worn, a quiet mind; a free man's strength, a healthy body; frankness with tact, congenial friends, good-natured guests, a board plainly spread; nights not spent now returns to camp and another takes its place.

This hour tempers the warm baths, the hour before the excessive heat of Nero’s baths. Stella, Nepos, lacious herb; sliced eggs shall garnish lizard-fish served with rue, and there shall be a paunch dripping from the tunny’s brine. Herein is your whet:

LET Victory sadly break her Idumaean palms; beat, Favour, with cruel hand thy naked breast; let Honour change her garb; and do thou, sorrowful Glory, cast on the cruel flames the offering of thy crowned locks. Ah, crime of fate! Robbed, Scorpus, of thy first youth, art thou fallen, and so soon dost yoke Death's dusky steeds! That goal, wheroeto thy car sped ever in brief course, and swiftly won, why to thy life also was it so nigh?

The calm retreat, Faustinus, of Anxur by the sea, and a nearer Baiae, and a house by the shore, and the wood which the troublesome ² cicadas have not discovered when Cancer flames, and the fresh-water canal—while I frequented these I had leisure along with you for allegiance to the learned Muses; now mightiest Rome wears us out. Here when is a day my own? I am tossed on the deep ocean of the city, and life is wasted in sterile toil while I maintain ³ stubborn acres of suburban land and a house near to you, holy Quirinus. But he is not alone a lover who day and night haunts thresholds, and such loss of time ill befits a poet. By the Muses’ rites, to be hallowed by me, by all the gods I swear: careless client as I am, I love you yet.

You set watchers over your husband, Polla, but do not receive them yourself. This, Polla, is to take your husband to wife.

Because scarcely one book of mine is published in a whole year, I am by you, learned Potitus, accused of laziness. But how much more justly should you wonder that one is published at all, when often whole days of mine slip away. Before daybreak I call on friends who do not return my call, and I offer congratulations to many: no one, Potitus, offers them to me. Now my signet-ring seals a document at the temple of Diana the Light-bringer; now the first hour, now the fifth hurries me off. Now consul Who'e'er thou art who for thy parents prayest for a happy and a late death, regard with love this marble’s brief inscription. In this earth Rabirius has hidden dearly-loved shades: with fairer lot none of the old lie in death. Twice six lustres of wedded life one night, kindly and their latest, closed; on one pyre two bodies burned. Yet he looks for them as if they had been snatched away from him in early years: naught more unwarranted can be than such a lament.

The letter of my eloquent friend has brought me a welcome pledge of love, the staid gift of an Italian toga, which not Fabricius, but Apicius would have been glad to wear, glad too Maecenas, Caesar's knight. Less prized would it have been if another sent it: 'tis not the victim slain by every hand that wins favour. By you 'tis sent and comes; if I could not love your gift, Marcus, I could love at least my own name. But more than the gift, and more welcome than the name itself, is the attention and judgment of a learned man.

LXXIV

At length spare, O Rome, the weary congratulator, the weary client! How long, at levees, among the escort and the full-dressed throng, shall I earn a hundred worthless farthings in a whole day, whereas in a single hour, Scorpus, a winner of the race, bears off fifteen bags of gleaming gold? I would not as reward for my little books—for what do they deserve?—wish for Apulian plains; nor does Hybla
or corn-bearing Nile allure me, nor the dainty Setine

Galla formerly demanded of me twenty thousand sesterces, and I allow she was not too dear. A year goes by: “You will give ten thousand?” she said;
she appeared to me to be demanding more than before. Then after six months, when she demanded two thousand, I offered a thousand: she would not accept them. Two, or perhaps three kalends had passed, and voluntarily she herself asked for four gold pieces:² I did not give them. She bade me
send her a hundred sesterces, but this sum, too, seemed to me stiff. A starving allowance of a hundred farthings allied me with a patron: this she wanted; I said I had given them to my slave. Could she come down to lower depths? She achieved this.
Galla offers me her favours for nothing, offers of her own accord: I decline.

LXXVI

Does this, Fortune, seem to you to be fair? Here is a citizen, not of Syria or Parthia, no knight from Cappadocian slave-stands, but home-born, one of the crowd of Remus and of Numa, a friend pleasant, honest, blameless, learned in either tongue, whose one fault—and that a great one—is that he is a poet: ’tis Maevius,³ who shivers in a black cowl.
Incitatus, the mule-driver, shines in scarlet.

² The aureolus was a gold coin worth 25 denarii, intrinscally about a pound of British money. Four, in terms of sesterces, would be 400.

BOOK X. xcvi–xcviii

A fruitful country-house. That land is dear to me wherein small means make me rich, and a slender store is luxury. The soil is maintained here, there it maintains you; here your hearth is scarcely warm with its grudging fire, with a mighty blaze it shines there. Here hunger is dear and the market makes you bankrupt, there stands a table covered with its own country's wealth. Here four togas or more grow threadbare in a summer, there during four autumns one covers me. Go to, now! and pay court to great men, when a place can afford you, Avitus, whatever a friend does not afford!

xcvii

While the lightly-heaped pyre was being laid with papyrus for the flame, while his weeping wife was buying myrrh and casia, when now the grave, when now the bier, when now the anointer was ready, Numa wrote me down his heir, and—got well!

xcviii

When an attendant more voluptuous than the cupbearer of Ida pours out my Caecuban, one than whom your daughter or wife, or mother or sister, is no smarter as she reclines at table, do you wish me instead to look at your lamps, or at your antique table of citrus-wood and its ivory legs? Nevertheless, that I may not be suspected by you at your table, produce for me from the throng in your rough farmstead some short-haired, unkempt, clownish, puny fellows, sons of a malodorous swineherd. This jealousy of yours will betray you! You cannot, Publius, possess such morals and such servants at once.

XCIX

If this face of Socrates had been a Roman's, it would have been just what Julius Rufus presents in his Satires.1

C

Why, you fool, do you mix your verses with mine? What have you, wretched fellow, to do with a book that is at odds with you?2 Why do you try to herd foxes with lions, and to make owls like eagles? You may possess one foot as swift as Ladas,3 yet, you stupid, you run in vain with a leg of wood.

CI

If, by chance sent back from the Elysian fields, the old Gabba,4 fortunate in his master, Caesar, were to return, he who hears Capitolinus5 and Gabba in a jesting match will say: "Boorish Gabba, hold your tongue!"

CII

Do you ask how it comes that Philinus, who never sleeps with his wife, is yet a father? Gaditanus must answer that, Avitus: he writes nothing, and yet he is "a poet."

hurrying waters, does the glad renown of your bard delight you? For I am your glory and repute, and your fame, and his own Verona owes no more to elegant Catullus, and would wish me to be called no less her own son. A thirtieth summer has been added to four harvests since without me you offered to Ceres rustic cakes, while I have so-journed within the fair walls of mistress Rome; the realm of Italy has grizzled my locks. If you greet me with gentle will on my return, I come to you; if you carry churlish hearts, I can go back.¹

Go, fellow wayfarer of my Flavus; go, little book, over the wide sea—but when the wave befriends you—and, on easy course and with breezes all your own, seek the heights of Spanish Tarraco. From there the wheel will carry you, and, rapidly borne, you will perchance at the fifth stage see high-set Bilbilis and your Salo. Ask you what is my charge to you? That you greet, even as you are on the way, my comrades—few are they, but old ones, and last seen by me now thirty and four winters back—and now and then remind my Flavus that he procure for me at a wholesome price some retreat, pleasant and not hard to keep up, which may make a lazy man of your begetter. This is my charge. Already the skipper calls in blustering tones, and is blaming the delay, and a fairer wind has opened the harbour. WHERE, where are you going, idle book, smart in purple not of every day? Can it be to see Parthenius? No doubt: go and return unopened; publications he does not read, only petitions,¹ nor has he leisure for the Muses, or he would have leisure for his own. Do you not think yourself fortunate enough if lesser hands may await you? Make for Quirinus' Colonnade² hard by; a crowd more idle not Pompey contains, nor Agenor's daughter, nor the inconstant captain of the first ship.³ There are two or three there who may unroll my twaddle; fit only for worms, but only when the bet and languid tales about Scorpus and Incitatus⁴ are done with.

As great is thy reverence for right and justice, Caesar, as was Numa's, but Numa was poor. 'Tis a hard task this, not to sacrifice manners to wealth, and, though thou hast surpassed many a Croesus, to be a Numa. Were our sires of old, mighty names, to return, were it allowed to empty the Elysian grove, to thee Camillus, liberty's unconquered champion, will pay his court, gold at thy giving will Fabricius accept, in thee as captain will Brutus be glad, to thee bloody Sulla will resign his power when he shall seek to lay it down; and thee the Great Captain, allied with Caesar, only a private citizen, will love, and Crassus will bestow on thee all his wealth. 1 The pilleum, or cap of liberty worn by manumitted slaves (cf. II. lxviii. 4) was also generally worn at the Saturnalia. It was a symbol of licence. Thus, on the death of Nero, the common people assumed it, and ran about the clad Rome, allow me, I wot, to trifle in verse untolksome. You have smiled: I may then, I am not forbidden. Ye pallid cares, far hence away! whatever comes to my mind let me speak without wrinkled meditation. Blend, boy, cups half and half, such as Pythagoras offered Nero; blend them, thou, Dindymus, and that more oft; nothing sober can I do: as I drink a fifteen-poets power will bear me up. Give me kisses now, and by Catullus’s measure; if they be as many as he said, I will give thee a Sparrow of Catullus.

Now at least you will not say, Paula, to your dolt of a husband, every time you want to go to a lover at a distance, "Caesar bade me come in the morning to his Alban villa, Caesar bade me come to Circeii." Now such a manœuvre is off. 'Tis lawful for you to be a Penelope under Nerva as chief, but your itch and inveterate bend forbid you. Unfortunate woman, what will you do? Will you pretend the sickness of a friend? Your husband in person will cling to his dame’s skirts, and will go with you to brother and mother and father. What fraud then would your ingenuity devise? Another wanton would perhaps say she is hysterical, and wished to sit in Sinuessa’s baths. How much better is your practice whenever you have a mind to stray! You, Paula, prefer to tell your husband the truth!

3 M.’s attendant: cf. x. xlii.

BOOK XI. xviii

XVIII

You have given me, Lupus, a suburban farm, but I have a bigger farm in my window. A farm can you call this, style this a farm, wherein a plant of rue forms a grove of Diana, which the wing of a shrill cicala covers, which an ant eats up in a single day; for which a shut rose's petal would be a canopy; wherein grass is no more found than a leaf for Cosmus' perfumes or green pepper; wherein a cucumber cannot lie straight, nor a snake harbour its whole length? The garden gives short commons to a single caterpillar; a gnat, when it has consumed the willow, expires, and a mole is my ditcher and ploughman. No mushroom can swell, no figs can split, or violets expand. My borders a mouse ravages, and is feared by the tenant as much as a Calydonian boar, and my crop, lifted by the claws of flying Procne, lies in a swallow's nest; and, though he stands shorn of his sickle and his appurtenances, there is no room by half for Priapus. My harvest, when gathered, hardly fills a snail-shell, and we store the must in a pitch-sealed nut. You have made a mistake, Lupus, but only by one letter; for when you gave me a fee I would you had given me a feed.

3 Lupus gave a praedium (land), and M. wanted a prandium (lunch), the difference being the letter n. "Fee" in law means an estate in land that descends to the holder's heir; here used in the sense of landed property.

You justify for certain my sprightly little books, Augustus, who know how to speak with Roman bluntness.

Lydia is as widely developed as the rump of a bronze equestrian statue, as the swift hoop that resounds with its tinkling rings, as the wheel so often cameo by Arelius, probably the painter mentioned by Pliny, N.H. xxxv. 37, as having outraged his art by depicting prostitutes. Fulvia is represented as sitting nude upon a bed, and holding Octavius by the arm. He is in full armour, and is beckoning to two soldiers in the rear. The cameo has been reproduced in a rare book published at the Vatican Press in 1786, and entitled "Monumens de la vie privée des douze Césars d'après une suite de pierres gravées sur leur règne."

1 A very obscure line, which may mean "so often struck by the acrobat in his flight." The nature of the petaurum has never been clearly known; sometimes it seems to be a kind of springboard or seesaw, sometimes a wheel suspended in the air: cf. ii. lxxxvi. 7. The performance was dangerous:
Fest. xiv. s.v. Petaurista, quoting Arist. Fr. 234.
struck from the extended springboard,\(^1\) as a worn-out shoe drenched by muddy water, as the wide-meshed net that lies in wait for wandering field-sares, as an awning that does not belly to the wind\(^2\) in Pompey's theatre, as a bracelet that has slipped from the arm of a consumptive catamite, as a pillow widowed of its Leuconian stuffing,\(^3\) as the aged breeches of a pauper Briton, and as the foul throat of a pelican\(^4\) of Ravenna. This woman I am said to have embraced in a marine fishpond: I don't know; I think I embraced the fishpond itself.

XXII

That with your hard mouth you rub the soft lips of white-cheeked Galaesus, that you consort with a naked Ganymede, 'tis too much—who denies it?—but let that be enough; at least refrain from waking passions with lascivious hand. Towards beardless boys this is a greater sinner than your yard, and your fingers create and hasten manhood. Thence comes a goatish odour, and quick-springing hair, and a beard, a wonder to mothers, and baths in broad day are displeasing. Nature has separated the male: one part has been produced for girls, one for men. Use your own part.

\(^2\) cf. ix. xxxviii. 6. \(^3\) cf. xiv. clivx.

\(^4\) Described by Pliny, N.H. x. 66. By "throat" M. means the large pouch under the mandibles (the alterius uteri genus of Pliny's description), where the pelican stores its catch of fish previously to consumption.

Sila is ready to marry me on any terms, but on no terms am I willing to take Sila to wife. Yet, when she urged me: "You shall bring me, as bride's dower, in gold a million sesterces," I said: "What can be smaller than that? And I will have no marital relations with you even on the wedding-night, nor shall my bed be the same as yours; and I will embrace my mistress, and you shall not forbid me, and, if hidden, you shall send me your own maid. Before your eyes an attendant shall give me wanton kisses, whether he is my own or yours. You shall dine with me, but you shall recline so apart from me that my robe is not touched by yours. Kisses you shall give me but rarely, and you shall not give them uninvited; and you shall not give them like a bride, but like an aged mother. If you can suffer that, if there be nothing you refuse to endure—you will find a man, Sila, who is willing to marry you!"

XXIV

While I escort you and bring you home, while I lend my ear to your babbling, and praise whatever you say and do, how many verses, Labullus, might have seen the light! Does not this seem to you an injury if, what Rome reads, the stranger asks for, the knight does not laugh at, the senator knows by heart, the pleader praises, the poet carps at—this because of you is lost? Is this fair, Labullus? Is this what any man would endure? That the number of your wretched clients should increase, of my books the number decrease? 'Tis now almost thirty

If, to crown these, thou shalt add love's true joys, then should I say Jove's lot with Ganymede is not more blest.

XXVII

You are a man of iron if you can show any amorous power, Flaccus, when your mistress prays you for six helpings of fish-pickle, or asks for two slices of tunny, or a skinny lizard-fish, and does not think herself worth a whole bunch of grapes—a woman to whom her maid delightedly carries anchovy sauce in a dark earthenware platter, to be immediately gulped down; or, who, when she has hardened her brow and laid aside all shame, solicits five greasy skins to make a small mantle. But let my mistress demand of me a pound of nard,1 or emeralds, or a pair of sardonyxes, and not look at any but prime silk from the Tuscan street, or let her beg a hundred gold coins just as if they were pence. Now do you imagine I am willing to give these things to a girl? I am not; but that a girl should be worthy of these things, I do wish.

From these are turned out the cook's various mincemeats, so that you believe lentils and beans are set before you; he imitates mushrooms and black-puddings, and tunny's tail, and tiny sprats. On these the store-keeper tries his art, with various flavours wrapping up—cunning man!—Capellian sweetmeats¹ in a leaf of rue. You were the rocker of my cradle, Charidemus, and guardian of my boyhood, and my constant companion. By now the napkin grows black from the shavings of my beard, and my mistress complains of being pricked by my lips. But to you I have not grown: from you my steward shrinks, at you my treasurer, at you my very house is in a panic! You don't allow me to frolic, nor do you allow me to woo: you wish me to have no liberty, and wish to have all liberty yourself. You take me up, watch me, grumble, heave sighs, and your wrath scarce keeps your hand off the ferule. If I have put on a purple dress or anointed my hair, you cry out: "Never did your father do that"; and with knitted brow you count my cups, as if the jar they came from were one from your own cellar. Desist: I cannot stand a freedman Cato. That I am now a man my mistress will inform you.

XL

Lupercus loves the beautiful Glycera, and he is her sole possessor and her sole commander. When he was sadly regretting that for a whole month he had not enjoyed her favours, and wished to give the reason to Aelianus who asked him, he replied that Glycera had the toothache.

There is not an hour comes amiss to you, Phyllis, for plundering me in my infatuation: with such cunning do you rob me. Now your lying maid laments because a mirror has been left behind, or a jewel drops from your finger, or a stone from your ear; at one time silks lost by theft may be a means of profit, at another there is shown to me an empty casket of Cosmus’ perfumes; now a crumbling jar of dark Falernian is asked for that a chattering wise-woman may exorcise your dreams; now, to induce me to buy, either a huge bass or a two-pound mullet, a rich woman friend has proposed a dinner at your house. First, there will be given you lettuce useful for relaxing the bowels, and shoots cut from their parent leeks; then tunny salted and bigger than a small lizard-fish, and one too which eggs will garnish in leaves of rue. Other eggs will not be wanting, roasted in embers of moderate heat, and a lump of cheese ripened over a Velabran hearth, and olives that have felt the Picenian frost. These are enough for a whet: do you want to know the rest? I will deceive you to make you come: fish, mussels, sow's paps, and fat birds of the poultry-yard and the marsh, which even Stella is not used to serve except at a special dinner. More I promise you: I will recite nothing to you, even although you yourself read again your "Giants" straight through, or your "Pastorals" that rank next to immortal Virgil.

Though Claudia Rufina has sprung from the woad-stained Britons, how she possesses the feelings of the Latin race! What grace of form has she! Mothers of Italy may deem her Roman, those of Attica their own. May the Gods bless her in that she, a fertile wife, has borne children to her constant spouse, in that she hopes, though youthful still, for sons- and daughters-in-law. So may it please the Gods above she should joy in one mate alone, and joy ever in three sons!

And unless I swear when I say "I will give it," you withdraw those charms that give you much licence with me. What if a barber, when his drawn razor is over my head, should then ask me for his liberty and for wealth? I will promise it; for it is not a barber who asks on that occasion, a highwayman asks; a thing imperious is fear: but when his razor is safe in its crooked case, I will break the barber's shanks and his hands to boot. No poems win your favour that speed on a gentle path, only those that fall over rough places and high cliffs, and this appears to you finer even than Homer's song:

Aeolis' child, Canace, lies buried in this tomb, little Canace, whose seventh winter came her last. Ah! for the guilt, the crime! you are keeping a kiss for your bride. A head shrouded in a cowl will not free you, nor a litter defended with head and curtain; nor will a sedan, though oftener closed, protect you: through any chink the kisser will enter. Not even the very consul's office, not the tribunate, nor the six fasces, nor the lordly rod of the clamorous lictor,\(^1\) will drive off the kisser: you may be sitting on a high tribunal, and from curule chair be declaring the laws to the nations, the kisser will climb up to that place and to that. When you are fevered he will kiss you, and when you are in tears; he will give a kiss to you when you are yawning, and when you are swimming; he will give it when you are in the jakes. Remedy for the evil is this alone: make a friend of a man you don't want to kiss.\(^2\)

XCIX

Whenever you get up from your chair—I have often noticed it ere now—your unhappy garments, Lesbia, treat you indecently. When you attempt with your right hand, attempt with your left, to pluck them away, you wrench them out with tears and groans; they are so gripped by the straits of your mighty rump, and enter a pass difficult and Cyanean.\(^3\) Do you wish to cure this ugly defect? I will instruct you: Lesbia, I advise you neither to get up nor to sit down!

Valerius Martialis to his Priscus sends Greeting

I know that I ought to offer some plea in defence of a most obstinate three-years' indolence; yet no such plea could have secured an acquittal even amid those City pursuits in which we more easily succeed in appearing troublesome than dutiful;¹ much less in this provincial solitude, where, unless we study even immoderately, retirement is at once without solace and without excuse. Hear, then, my reasons. Of these this is the most important and first of all: I miss that audience of my fellow-citizens to which I had grown accustomed, and seem to myself a pleader in a strange court; for whatever is popular in my small books my hearer inspired. That subtlety of judgment, that inspiration of the subject, the libraries, theatres, meeting-places, where pleasure is a student without knowing it—to sum up all, those things which fastidiously I deserted I regret, like one desolate. Added to this is the back-biting of my fellow-townsmen, and envy ousting judgment, and one or other evilly disposed persons—a host in a tiny place—a circumstance against which it is

1 The cena adventoria was a dinner given to one arriving from abroad. The phrase here represents a book of epigrams which was handed to Terentius Priscus on his arrival in Spain in the winter of 101, and immediately forwarded to Rome. This book, having been written paucissimis diebus, is probably the brevis libellus of xii. i. 3, and not Book XII. as we have it, which was probably an enlarged edition, perhaps compiled even after Martial’s death, and which difficult every day to keep a good stomach; do not wonder therefore that occupations have been cast aside in repugnance which I used to follow with ardour. Yet, not to deny you anything on your arriving from the City and claiming it—and I am not shewing you any fitting thanks if I do only what I can—I have enjoined on myself a task that I used to allow myself as a pleasure, and have devoted a very few days to study that I might greet your ears, my most friendly hearer, with their due feast of welcome. I would wish you not to think it a trouble to weigh with care and to scrutinise those efforts that in your hands alone are in no danger, and—what is most difficult for you—to judge my trifling effusions with especial impartiality, so that, if you decide it should go, I may not transmit to Rome a book, not merely written in Spain, but Spanish.

You that lately used to be sent from the City to the provinces, ho! you will now go to Rome, O foreign book, from the people of gold-bearing Tagus and of rugged Salo, native streams that a great land makes mine. Yet you will not be a stranger, nor can you now be called a visitor, whose many brothers the lofty house of Remus holds. Of your own right make for the reverend threshold of the new temple where a fane has been restored to the Pierian choir.² Or, if you prefer, you will walk through the entrance to the Subura; there stands the high hall of my consul; eloquent Stella inhabits a house crowned with bay—illustrious Stella, who thirsts for the stream of his Ianthis; a fount of Castaly there proudly wells with its glassy torrent, whereof the Nine Dames oft, they say, have drunk. He will give you to people and senate and knight to be read, nor with eyes overtearless will he himself read you through. Why do you require a title? Let two or three verses be read: all will cry that you, O book, are mine.

What time Rome, Goddess of Earth and of the nations, that has no peer and no second, was of late joyfully counting Trajan's² future years through so many generations, and saw a soldier strong, young, and warlike in so great a chief, glorying in such a governor, she said: "Ye rulers of the Parthians and chiefs of the Seres, Thracians, Sauromatians, Getians, Britons, I can show you a Caesar: come."

Palma governs our³ native Iberians, most gentle Caesar, and Peace beyond the sea enjoys his placid sway. Gladly therefore we pay thee thanks for a boon so great: thou hast sent into our land the manners that are thine.

Use more sparingly, I warn you, Priscus, your tearing hunter, nor rush so violently after hares. Often has the huntsman atoned to his prey, and, flung from his mettled horse, fallen to mount no more. Snares even a plain has: though there be no ditch, nor mound, nor stipes, level ground can oft deceive. Never will you lack some one to offer you such a sight, but one whose fall brings lighter

All that glittered in the Palatine hall has been given to our view and to our gods. Jupiter wonders at the flashing of gold set with Scythian emeralds, and is amazed at the toys and grievous luxury of a haughty king; here are cups that befit the Thunderer, here are such as befit his Phrygian cupbearer; we all, together with Jove, are now rich; but of late—'tis shame, ah, 'tis shame to confess it!—we all, together with Jove, were poor.

You have sold, Labienus, three pretty fields; you have bought, Labienus, three handsome slaves. You debauch, Labienus, your three pretty fields.

While perchance you are restlessly wandering, Juvenal, in the noisy Subura, or treading the hill of Queen Diana; while, amid the thresholds of great men, your sweaty toga fans you, and, as you stray, the greater Caelian and the less wears you, me my Bilbilis, sought once more after many Decembers, has received and made a countryman, Bilbilis, proud of its gold and iron. Here indolently, with pleasant toil, I frequent Boterdus and Platea (such in Celtiberian lands are the uncouth names!); I enjoy a huge unconscionable sleep which often not even the third hour breaks, and I pay myself now in full for all my sleeplessness for thrice ten years. Unknown is the toga; rather, when I ask for it, the first covering at hand is given to me from a broken chair. When I get up, a fire, served with a lordly heap of logs from the neighbouring oak-wood, welcomes me, and my bailiff's wife crowns it with many a pot. Next comes my huntsman, and he too a

Who would think, Marcella, 3 that you were a burgess of iron-tempering 4 Salo, who, that you were born in my native land? So rare, so sweet is your quality! The Palatine will declare, should it but hear you once, that you are its own; nor will a daughter of mid Subura, nor a nursling of the Capitoline hill, vie with you; nor soon shall the fairest of foreign birth laugh at one whom it would more befit to be a Roman bride. You bid my longing for the Queen City be allayed: you by yourself make a Rome for me!

Inasmuch as you, though a senator, tread innumerable thresholds in the morning, I, a knight, appear to you slothful because I do not scour the city from early dawn, and wearily bring home with me a thousand kisses. But you do this that you may add a new name to the purple records,¹ or be sent to govern Numidian or Cappadocian tribes. But I, whom you compel to break off my slumber in the middle, and to bear and endure the morning mud, what do I look for? When my protruding foot gapes out of a broken shoe, and a sudden downpour of heavy rain falls, and my home-born slave, who has taken away my cloak, does not appear when I bawl for him, a slave approaches my frozen ear and “Lae-torius asks you to dine with him,” he says. For twenty sesterces a head? Not I: I prefer starvation to getting a dinner as reward, while you get a province, and to our performing the same services and not earning the same recompense.

Hermogenes tantus mapparum, Pontice, fur est quantus nummorum vix, puto, Massa fuit; tu licet observes dextram teneasque sinistram, inveniet mappam qua ratione trahat: cervinus gelidum sorbet sic halitus anguem; casuras alte sic rapit Iris aquas.
nuper cum Myrino peteretur missio laeso, subduxit mappas quattuor Hermogenes; cretatam praetor cum vellet mittere mappam, praetori mappam surpuit Hermogenes. attulerat mappam nemo dum furta timentur; mantele a mensa surpuit Hermogenes. hoc quoque si derit, medio discingere lectos mensarumque pedes non timet Hermogenes. quamvis non modico caleant spectacula sole, vela reducuntur cum venit Hermogenes.

1 Hermes was the thief among the gods: cf. Hor. Od. i. x. 7; accordingly M. invents the name "Sprung of Hermes."
2 Stealing napkins was common, and was satirised by Catullus (Cat. xii.).
3 Probably Baebius Massa, a mountebank of Nero's: Schol. on Juv. i. 35. He was, on the accusation of the younger Pliny, condemned A.D. 93 for embezzlement when proconsul of Hispania Baetica.
4 The left was the thievish hand (Cat. xlvii. 1; Ov. Met. xiii. 110 (natasque ad furta sinistras)); hence M. 's distinction between watching and holding.
BOOK XII. xxix

XXIX

Hermogenes\(^1\) is as great a thief, Ponticus, of napkins\(^2\) as I hardly imagine even Massa\(^3\) was of money. You may watch his right hand and hold his left,\(^4\) he will discover some method of withdrawing a napkin. So a stag's breath sucks up a clammy snake,\(^5\) so Iris\(^6\) plucks up the waters that will afterwards fall from on high. Of late when a discharge was sought for wounded Myrinus, Hermogenes filched four napkins;\(^7\) when the praetor wanted to throw his white napkin,\(^8\) Hermogenes pilfered his napkin from the praetor. When no one had brought a napkin, in fear of theft, Hermogenes pilfered the table-cloth from off the table. If this, too, is not to be found, Hermogenes is not afraid to strip the valance from round the couches and the feet of the tables. Although the arena is burning under an immoderate sun, the awning is drawn back when Hermogenes arrives. Sailors in a panic hurry to brail up their canvas whenever Hermogenes has appeared at the port. Linen-clad, bald priests and the company with the timbrels\(^9\) fly when Hermogenes has taken his stand among the worshippers. To a dinner Hermogenes has never brought a napkin: from a dinner Hermogenes has always carried a napkin home.

Winds failed not didst thou wish to spread thy sails; but thou lovest the shore: herein, too, art thou like thy brother.

Though you have moneys and wealth such as only a citizen here and there owns, you bestow nothing, Paternus, and brood over your treasure like the great dragon that poets sing of as guardian once of the Scythian grove. To this vice you have always been father.

He who bids you, girls, give your favours for nothing, is a most foolish and impudent fellow. Do not give them for nothing, kiss for nothing. This Aegle refuses, this in her greed she sells. But let her sell it: how precious is a good kiss! This she sells, I say, and for no small plunder too; she asks for either a pound of Cosmian unguent, or four times two gold coins of the new mintage, that her kisses may not be silent ones or grudgingly given, that she may not with shut lips deny their approach. Yet this one thing she does graciously; Aegle, who refuses to give a kiss, a single kiss, for nothing, does not refuse to —— for nothing.

Rome gives you as many kisses, when after fifteen years you have just returned, as Lesbia never gave Catullus. Upon you all the neighbourhood presses, upon you the bristly farmer with a kiss like a he-goat's; on this side the weaver crowds you, on that the fuller, on this the cobbler who has just been kissing his hide, on this the owner of a perilous chin; on this side the one-eyed and on that the blear-eyed, and many a rascal with foulest lips. By now you find it was not worth while to return.

LX

Thou day, nursling of Mars,¹ whereon I first saw the rosy light and the mighty visage of the star-encircled god,² if it shall shame thee to be worshipped in the country and at green altars, who wert worshipped by me in the Latian city, grant thy pardon in that I refuse to be a slave on my kalends, but wish to live³ on the day I was born. To grow pale on one's birthday lest Sabellus lack warm water; and, that Alauda may drink his wine strained, anxiously to pass the turbid Caecuban through the bag; and to go to and fro among one's tables; to receive these and those guests, and all through the dinner to be getting up, treading on marble colder than ice⁴—what reason is there why one should suffer and endure these things of one's own accord, which, if your lord and master⁵ bade you, you would refuse?

LXI

You are afraid, Ligurra, I should write verses on you, and some short and lively poem, and you long to be thought a man that justifies such fear. But vain is your fear, and your longing is vain. Against bulls Libyan lions rage, they are not hostile to butterflies. Look out, I advise you, if you are anxious to be read of, for some dark cellar's scottish poet, one who with coarse charcoal or crumbling chalk scraws poems which people read in the jakes. Your brow is not one to be marked by my brand.

Thou in the sixth winter, Father most good, bringest him back to his fatherland from peaceful Numa's Latin city. 1 This term has an indecent sense: cf. xi. lxx. 2.
2 Amoenus disguised the poorness of the house, which was a mere cottage (l. 4), by fine furniture, which was not to be sold with the house. A. asks 200,000, although he had given only half that sum, and would take less (l. 2). M. ironically ignoring the fact that the house was not sold furnished, pretends to agree with A. that the house was cheap.
3 May 15 was the dedication day of the Temple of Merwood; an elaborate sideboard is loaded with silver and gold plate; young slaves are standing there whom I would wish my masters! Then you loudly prate of two hundred thousand sesterces, and say the place is not worth less. Furnished as it is, Amoenus, you are selling your town house cheap.

You, Ides of May, brought forth Mercurius; on August’s Ides return Diana’s feasts; Maro has hallowed the Ides of October. Oft may you keep these Ides and those, you, who celebrate great Maro’s Ides!

Morning client, the cause of my leaving Rome, you would court, were you wise, the halls of greatness. No pleader am I, nor fitted for bitter lawsuits, but an indolent man and one growing old, and the comrade of the Muses. Ease and sleep attract me, and great Rome denied me these; I return if I am sleepless even here.

When of late a bow-legged home-born slave carried his towels for Aper, and a one-eyed old crone sat guard over his scanty toga, and a ruptured anointer offered him his drop of oil, he was a stern and harsh censor of drinkers; he used to shout that the cups ought to be smashed, and the Falernian poured away that the knight, just bathed, was drinking. But after three hundred thousand sesterces came to him from an old uncle, he doesn't know how to go home from the warm baths sober. Oh, how great is the influence of fretwork chalices and five long-haired slaves! Then, when he was poor, Aper was not thirsty!

BOOK XII. LXXIV–LXXVI

LXXIV

While a fleet from Nile is bringing you crystal glass, accept some cups from the Flaminian Circus. Are these the more "dreadnought" or are they who send such presents? But in cheap vessels is a double advantage: these embossed cups attract no thief, Flaccus, and they are not cracked by water too hot. What of this, too, that the attendant is not nervous while a guest drinks, and shaky hands do not fear a slip? This, also, is something: you will drink a health in these vessels, Flaccus, if you have to break the cup afterwards.

VII.—Beans

If pale beans bubble for you in a red earthenware pot you can often decline the dinners of sumptuous hosts.¹

VIII.—Spelt

Flavour common jars with pulse from Clusium, that, after dinner, you may drink from them, when empty, new wine.²

IX.—Lentils

Receive lentils of Nile, a present from Pelusium³; they are cheaper than spelt, dearer than beans.

X.—Flour

One cannot enumerate the properties or the uses of flour, seeing that it is so often handy for the baker and the cook.

XI.—Barley

Receive something for your muleteer to withhold from your mules that will not blab. I have given this to the inn-keeper, not to you,⁴ as a gift.

XII.—Corn

Take three hundred pecks from the harvest of the Libyan farmer, that your suburban land may not grow sterile.⁵

¹ The muleteer steals the barley and sells it to the inn-keeper.
² By being over-cropped, and not allowed to lie fallow. This gift of Libyan corn will maintain the farmer for a time.

LXXIX.—Live Mullets

The mullet breathes in the sea-water brought with him, but, already torpid, he begins to languish. Give him the fresh sea; he will be strong.⁵

LXXX.—Lampreys

The big lamprey that swims in the Sicilian deep sea has not the strength to plunge when its skin is scorched by the sun.⁶

LXXXI.—Turbots

However wide is the dish that bears the turbot, yet the turbot is wider than the dish.

¹ According to Friëdländer fish were brought alive to table in glass vessels and boiled before the eyes of the guests, who observed the changing hues of the dying fish: cf. Sen. Quaest. iii. 17, who observes that it sounds like a fable that the eyes were fed before the throat.

⁵ According to Arist. (H.A. viii. iii. 4) turtles, when their shells were scorched by the sun, were unable to sink, and so were caught; see also Plin. N.H. ix. 12. M. says the same thing of the lamprey. Such animals were called πλωτας or ψαυτας: Macrob. Sat. iii. 15. The best lampreys came from the Straits of Messina: ibid.

4 The scarus is really unknown. It was a favourite fish, brought originally, according to Pliny (N.H. ix. 29), by Tiberius from the Carpathian Sea, and planted by Optatus, graefectus classis, in the sea between Ostia and Campania.
It was preserved for the first five years. Athenaeus (vii. 113) gives a description.

Drunken with the water of Baiae's Lucrine,¹ have I, a shell-fish, just arrived. Now, luxurious that I am, I thirst for the noble pickle.²

LXXXIII.—Prawns

Cerulean Liris,³ which Marica's wood guards, is fond of us: from hence we prawns come in greatest numbers.

LXXXIV.—Sea-bream

Of this sea-bream,⁴ which has come lean from the sea-waves, the entrails are good eating; as to the rest it has poor flavour.

LXXXV.—Coracinus

You of all fish are scrambled for, Coracinus,⁵ in the markets of Nile; to Alexandria's gourmets no fish has renown surpassing yours.

LXXXVI.—Sea-urchins

Although that sea-urchin may prick your fingers with its sharp shell, yet, when it lays aside its husk, it will be soft.⁶

¹ An unknown but valued fish peculiar to the Nile: Plin. N.H. xxxii. 19, who says it was not caught in winter except on the same few days: N.H. ix. 24. See also Athen. vii. 81, who says it was so called from its continually moving the pupils of its eyes (κόραι). It was regarded as in every way superior to the mullus: Athen. iii. 93.
² It was eaten with vinegar and honey sauce, parsley, and mint: Athen. iii. 41. Athenaeus (loc. cit.) tells the story of a Spartan who at a dinner bit a sea-urchin, shell and all, in ignorance and cursed the viand (φάγημα μαρβόν), adding he would not be beaten by it, but would never eat another.

3 A small fish, ordinarily little esteemed, but common in the lagoons of Venice. Inferior to a blenny; Diog. L. ii. 67.
Juv. (xi. 37) treats the price of a gobius as an insignificant sum, as compared with the price of a mullus.
4 The most prized lupi were called lanati or lanei from the whiteness and softness of their flesh: Plin. N. H. ix. 28.
The lupus may have been the bass, one name of which is the sea-wolf, from its rapaciousnes (Grk. ἀδβρακτά); cf. the proverb λάβρακες Μίλησιοι of greedy persons; and generally Athen.

³ According to Pliny (N. H. ix. 27) the fish, though rare, was little esteemed in his time.
⁴ i.e. of the emperor. M. anticipates the English common law whereby “whales and sturgeons are royal fish, and belong to the King by his prerogative”: Coke’s Reports, 16 A. Macrobi., Sat. iii. 16) says that, at a banquet of the Emperor Septimius Severus, the fish was ushered in by crowned attendants to the sound of flutes, quasi numinis pompa.

1 Domitian: cf. xi. vi. 4. The wearing of the pilleum, or cap of liberty, was common at the Saturnalia, as being symbolical of the licence of the season.

2 i.e. when he sees that the time is winter. Lucian, however, says (Saturn. 2) that a common Saturnalian joke was to blacken a man’s face and to duck him in the water. If M. alludes to this, the rendering should be “although he sees” etc.

WHILE the knight and My Lord the Senator rejoice in dinner-dress, while wearing freedom's cap beseeems our Jove,¹ and the home-bred slave, as he shakes the dice-box, does not fear to look the Aedile in the face, when he sees the cold tanks so near,² receive these lots, gifts of rich and poor alternate; let everyone give his own guest his proper prize.³ "They are worthless and gim-cracks, or anything still meaner, if possible." Who does not know it? Or who denies what is so plain? But what else am I to do, Saturn, on the unsober days your son⁴ himself gave you in exchange for Heaven? Do you wish me to write of Thebes, or Troy, or guilty Mycenae? "Play with nuts," you say. I don't want to lose my nuts.⁵

Petr. 40, 56). Martial's couplets describe such gifts, and were clearly intended to go in pairs, one couplet describing something that would be given by a rich man, and the next something similar that would be given by a poor man. But some couplets appear to have been lost or to have got out of order—e.g. lxvii. and lxxi.; but the following are among some of the pairs about which there can be no doubt, viz. v. and vi.; xliii. and xlv.; lxxxix. and xc.; xciii. and xciv.; clx. and clx.; clxi. and clxii. Whether sent to a slight acquaintance or to a dear comrade, this paper is accustomed to address everyone as its “Dear friend.”³

XII.—Ivory Money-boxes

To fill these money-boxes with anything but yellow money is unfitting: let cheap wood carry silver.

XIII.—Wooden Money-boxes

If anything still remain at the bottom of me, a little money-box, it shall be a gift. Is there nothing? The little box itself shall be the gift.

³ Suus was commonly used in the heading to a letter, e.g. C. Plinius Maximo suo S. (salutem). S. is the “felix litera” of vii. xlv. 4.

XIV.—Tali Eborei
Cum steterit nullus vultu tibi talus codem, munera me dices magna dedisse tibi.

XV.—Tesserae
Non sim talorum numero par tessera, dum sit maior quam talis alea saepe mihi.

XVI.—Turricula
Quae seict compositos manus inproba mittere·talos,
si per me misit, nil nisi vota feret.

XVII.—Tabula Lusoria
Hac mihi bis seno numeratur tessera puncto;
calculus hac gemino disolor hoste perit.

XVIII.—Nuces
Alea parva nuces et non damnosa videtur;
saepe tamen pueris abstulit illa natis.

1 The jactus Veneris, or highest throw with the tali, was where each of them turned up a different number. The tali were three or four in number, and on four of the flat sides were marked 1, 3, 4, and 6. The remaining two sides were rounded and blank.
2 Two, sometimes three, dice (tesserae) were used, but four tali.
3 Gambling with dice was for money, and seems to have been a more expensive mode of gambling than with the knucklebones: cf. iv. lxvi. 15.

BOOK XIV. xiv–xviii

XIV.—Ivory Knuckle-bones

When no one of the bones you throw stands with the same face as another you will say I have given you a great present.¹

XV.—Dice

Let us dice be not equal in number to the knuckle-bones,² if only our stakes be often greater than with the knuckle-bones.³

XVI.—The Little Tower Dice-box

If the cheating hand, that knows how to arrange and throw the bones, has thrown them through me, he will achieve nothing beyond prayers.⁴

XVII.—A Gaming-board

On this side of me dice are counted by double sixes: on this other the piece of hostile colour is taken by twin foemen.⁵

XVIII.—Nuts

Nuts appear a small stake, and one not ruinous; yet often has that stake made prize of boys' buttocks.⁶

¹ i.e. his fraud does not succeed. The turricula appears to have been made with internal grooves to prevent cheating.
² The epigram is on a gaming-table suitable both for the game "of the twelve lines" (similar to backgammon), and the game of "robbers" (like chess or draughts): cf. vii. lxxii. 8. In the first game the highest throw appears to have been two sixes: cf. (of three dice) Aesch. Ag. 33. In the second game a piece was taken by being hemmed in by two opposing "robbers": cf. Ep. xx.
³ When they gamble, whereas they ought to be in school: cf. v. lxxxiv. 1, 2. But Gronovius' comment is, "Videtur potius turpe aliquid ac nefandum significari."

XXI.—A Style-case

This style-case, fitted with its proper iron styles,³ shall be for you: if you give it to your boy, it will be no slight gift.

XXII.—A Toothpick

Mastick⁴ is better; but if pointed wood be not forthcoming, a quill can relieve your teeth.

XXIII.—An Earpick

If your ear is troubled with a persistent itching, I give you an instrument appropriate to such vagaries.

XXIV.—A Gold Hairpin

That your moistened hair may not soil your bright silks, let a pin fix and hold up your knotted locks.

XXV.—Combs

XXVI.—Soap

The spume of the Chatti turns to flame Teutonic locks: you can be smarter with the hair of a captive slave.¹

XXVII.—Soap-balls from Mattisacum

If white-haired you are set on dyeing your aged locks, accept—why be hairless?—these balls from Mattisacum.²

XXVIII.—A Sunshade

Accept a sunshade to subdue the overpowering heat; even though there be a wind,³ your own awning will cover you.

XXIX.—A Broad-brimmed Hat

I will be a spectator with you in Pompey’s theatre, for blasts of wind are apt to deny the people an awning.⁴

XXX.—Hunting-spears

They will counter boars, and will wait for the lion’s rush; they will pierce bears if the hand be but firm enough.

XXXI.—A Hunting-knife

If you lament that your hunting spear with its long blade has been struck down, this short weapon will closely engage a huge boar.

² Supposed to be Marpurg or Wiesbaden. It was a town of the Chatti.
³ When the ordinary vela could not be spread, or had to be furled: cf. xxix. 2.
⁴ Therefore the head requires a covering. The caœsæa was a high-crowned and broad-brimmed hat. It came originally from Macedonia: Val. Max. v. i. 4, and was especially worn by fishermen and sailors.

XXXII.—A Belt and Sword

A soldier's decoration\(^1\) is this, and it will be a sign of a prized honour,\(^2\) a weapon worthy to gird a tribune's side.

XXXIII.—A Dagger

This dagger, which a narrow circle marks with its rounded groove, Salo dipt\(^3\) while it was hissing in his chilling waters.

XXXIV.—A Sickle

Me our Captain's assured peace has bent to serve quiet uses: the husbandman's am I now, the soldier's was I aforetime.

XXXV.—A Small Axe

When a melancholy auction for payment of debts was held, this was bought for four hundred thousand sesterces.\(^4\)

XXXVI.—A Barber's Implements

These instruments are suitable for the cutting of your hair; this one\(^5\) is serviceable to long nails, that\(^6\) to your cheeks.

XXXIX.—A Bedroom Lamp

I am a lamp, privy to the pleasures of your couch: you may do what you will, I shall be silent.

XL.—A Candle

The lot has given you the lamp's handmaid, which is awake and dispels complete darkness.

XLI.—A Lamp with many Wicks

Although I illumine whole entertainments with my flames, and carry so many wicks, I am called a single lamp.

XLII.—A Taper

This taper will afford you light by night, for your lamp has been stolen from your slave.

XLIII.—A Corinthian Candelabrum

Candles gave me my name of old; the oil-lamp had no knowledge of our thrifty sires.

XLIV.—A Wooden Candelabrum

You see I am wood; unless you guard the light, a great lamp will be made of your candelabrum.

3 According to Pliny (N.H. xxxiv. 3), there were three kinds of aes Corinthium, one in which silver was the principal ingredient, another in which gold, and a third with equal proportions of gold and silver.

4 The wicks will set fire to the wood.

Myrobalanum is described by Pliny (N.H. xii. 46) as the fruit of a tree found in the Thebais and in Arabia with a leaf like that of a heliotrope, the fruit being of the size of a filbert. From it was extracted an oil used in compounding unguent. The Encyclopaedia calls the tree the horse-radish tree (Moringa pterygosperma), the oil being oil of ben used by perfumers.

CL.—Damask Coverlets

This present the land of Memphis makes you: now has the needle of Babylon been surpassed by the sley of the Nile.

CLI.—A Female Girdle

Long enough am I now; but if your shape should swell under its grateful burden, then shall I become to you a narrow girdle.

CLII.—A Square Woollen Rug

Blankets the country of elegant Catullus will send you: we are from the region of Helicaon.

CLIII.—An Apron

Let a rich man give a tunic: I can gird you in front. Were I rich, I would give both gifts.

CLIV.—Amethyst-dyed Wool

Drunken as I am with the blood of Sidon's shellfish, I do not see why I am called sober wool.

4 Paduan: cf. x. xei. i.
5 "Amethyst" etymologically means "unintoxicated," either, as Pliny says (N. H. xxxvii. 40), because it did not approximate to the colour of wine, or because its possession was supposed to be an antidote against inebriety. There are similar Greek epigrams in Pal. Auth. ix. 748 and 752.

CCXX.—A Cook

Insufficient is his art alone for a cook: I would not have his palate that of a slave; a cook ought to possess the taste of his master.

CCXXI.—A Gridiron with Spits

Let your grated gridiron be unctuous with the rounded cutlet; on the long pointed spit let a foaming boar smoke.

CCXXII.—The Confectioner

A thousand toothsome shapes of handiwork that hand will construct for you; for him alone labours the frugal bee.

CCXXIII.—Rich Dainties

Get up: already the baker is selling to boys their breakfast, and the crested fowls of dawn are crowing on all sides.

AN EPIGRAM OF UNCERTAIN POSITION

O Flavian family, of how much glory has thy third heir robbed thee! Well nigh had it stood us in stead not to have possessed the twain! ¹

¹ These lines (which are amplified by Ausonius, Caes. xii.) mean that Domitian was so evil that it had been better for Rome not to have had Flavian Emperors at all, even good ones like Vespasian and Titus.

I.—Life in the Country

As you ask me what I do while staying in the country I reply shortly. At daybreak I pray to the gods; I visit my servants and afterwards my fields, and to my staff I assign their proper tasks. Then I read and call on Phoebus, and challenge the Muses. After this I rub my body with oil, and with mild gymnastics gladly brace myself, happy in my mind and free from moneylenders. I lunch, drink, sing, play, bathe, dine, go to bed. Provided my small lamp consume but little oil, such lucubrations as these night furnishes to the nocturnal Muses.

II.—Against Varus

Varus happened to invite me lately to dinner: his appointments were rich, his dinner was scanty. The table is loaded with gold plate, not with meats; the attendants set before us much to please the eye, little to tickle the palate. Then I said: “I did not come to stuff my eyes, but my stomach; either provide your provender, Varus, or remove your property.”

age. Among his works were commentaries on Plantus, Horace, Petronius, Seneca, and Martial; and a Philippid, or Epithalamium on the marriage of Philip and Mary. He was the Rector of the College of Harlem, and his library was pillaged by the Spaniards.

III.—Against Ponticus

Ponticus, you run about among great lords, and have an eye for everything going; you pursue, indeed, great things, Ponticus; you are a great man. Ponticus, if you do anything, you do it without a witness, without a crowd round you; you don't make confidants of many, Ponticus; you are a cautious man. Ponticus, nature has fashioned you of remarkable beauty; you would have been worthy of Helen, Ponticus; you are a handsome man. Ponticus, with that voice of yours you might stir adamant; your voice is sweet-toned, Ponticus; you are a sweet man. Ponticus, this error deceives you too as it does other men. Would you have me tell you the truth, Ponticus? You are not a man at all.

IV.—On an Old Woman

To the touch you are pleasing, listened to you are pleasing; if you are not seen, you are wholly pleasing; in neither way if you are seen are you pleasing.

V.—On Milo

Milo is not at home; Milo has gone abroad, and his fields are neglected; yet his wife is no less fruitful since. Why his land is sterile, why his wife is fertile, I will declare: his land has no cultivator, his wife has.

VI.—On an Actor's Punishment

VII.—Against a Shameless Person

You say you have your fourth grandfather's mouth, your father's nose, both your father's eyes, and your mother's carriage. Since you recall your ancestors—and do not describe incorrectly any part of your body—tell me, whose forehead¹ have you?

VIII.—To Mattus

Don't you know what he says who denies himself just when you knock at his door? "To you, Mattus, I am asleep."²

IX.—To Milo

Frankincense, pepper, garments, silver plate, cloaks, jewels you are accustomed to sell, Milo, and the buyer goes off with them. Your wife is as merchandise more useful to you: she, though often sold, never leaves the seller or diminishes his estate.

X.—On a Middle Station

I would not have Fortune set me in the highest or in the lowest place; rather let her moderation grant life's middle station. Envy assails the high, wrong the weak: how happy does he live who escapes both!

² An allusion to the proverb "Non omnibus dormio," said of those that are willing to be blind to the doings of some others, but not of everybody: Fest. xii. 487; Cic. Ep. vii. 24. XI.—To Scaevola

Scaevola, you dine with everybody, no one with you; another man's cups you drain, no one drains yours. Either make return, or give over looking for invitations: it is a disgrace always to take and give nothing.¹

XII.—To Auctus

You claim from us what you pay to no one, love; what you accord to no man you claim, Auctus, trust. You claim from us what you don't deserve, honour; it is wonderful that what you don't give you expect to be given you.

XIII.—On Filus

Filus possesses cloaks, he surrounds his fingers with gold, but yet Filus is poorer than the poor.² Filus has Tyrian mantles, a thousand appointments, clients, but yet he is poorer than the poor. Filus has a hall furnished in royal style, but yet Filus is poorer than the poor. He hungers and thirsts while he is arrayed in jewels and gold; though he is clad in an embroidered robe he hungers and thirsts. His pallor and emaciation bespeak a load of hunger; his gold brooch says there is no load of hunger. The wretched man will then hire himself out in slavery for bread, but his gold amulet prevents him being a slave.³ If, indeed, he assails any man with suppliant prayers, his silken garb is at hand to prevent him to the Lares, or Household Gods. It was gold in the case of children of free birth, leather in the case of children of freedmen. It enclosed an amulet (a phallus) against the evil eye; hence it was worn by a victorious general during a triumph: Macrob. Sat. i. 6.

XIX.—Against Turgidus

Till nightfall you lunch, till nightfall, Turgidus, you dine, and with all sorts of wine day and night you reek. And, although you are careful of your person, you are unwilling to take a wife; your unwillingness says: “A chaste life pleases me.” Turgidus, you lie; this is not a chaste life. Would you have me tell you what is a chaste life? Moderation.

XX.—Against Chloe

You are hot for a wanton Ganymede; you are every man’s goods; even Hippolytuses¹ you make heavy with lust. In the meantime many an adulterer hangs about your threshold; you are exposed for sale to anyone: how popular is your taste! I should have wished to have called you Demophilé,² had not your mother wished you should be Chloe: she is unwise and wise.³

XXI.—Against Lais

Lais, most beautiful of women, when I ask you what is the price of your favours, you at once require a great⁴ talent. At such a cost, Lais, I do not buy repentance.⁵

XXII.—Against Macrinus

You used to deny, Macrinus, that men could become defunct through funguses: mushrooms made room for your heirs!⁶

¹ This is the answer said to have been made by Demosthenes to Lais, the Corinthian courtesan: Gell. i. 8. Perhaps the epigram is put in the mouth of D.
² The pun on leti and boleti can only be paraphrased.
INDEXES
INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

Apicius, M. Gabius, a noted gourmand of the time of Tiberius. According to Seneca (Ad Helv. x.) after spending in gluttony one hundred million sesterces (£800,000), he found himself oppressed by debt, looked into his accounts, and, discovering he had remaining only ten millions committed suicide. Martial alludes to this (III. xxii.), giving the sums as sixty millions and ten respectively. Pliny (N.H. ix. 30) speaks of him as ad omne luxus ingenium mirus, and (N.H. x. 68) calls him nepotum omnium altissimius purges. Athenæus (i. 12) tells how that, hearing lobsters were very large in Libya, he set off at once, but finding from samples that they were of ordinary size, he returned without landing.

Apollinaris, Domitius, a learned friend of M. and a favourable critic of his epigrams (IV. lxvi; VII. xxvi.). M. (X. xxx.) describes his villa at Formiae. He is perhaps the A. alluded to by Pliny (Ep. ix. 13) as consul designatus in A.D. 97.

Auctus, Pomponius, a learned lawyer, and admirer of Martial, whose works he knew by heart, VII. ii.

Avitus, Stertinius, Consul A.D. 92. He placed a bust of M. in his library, of which M. writes (IX. Introd. Ep.) the inscription. M. addresses to him an epigram (X. xxvi.) on the charms of country life in Spain.

Baelis, the Guadalquivir, the principal river in Hispafia Baetica, according to Pliny (iii. 3) the most fertile province in Spain. It flows past Corduba and Hispalis (Cordova and Seville) and falls into the Atlantic N. of Gades (Cadiz). The district was renowned for olives (XII. lxii. 2; XII. xvii. 1), which Martial thinks superior to those of Venafrum: VII. xxviii. 3; and Statius to Attic, Silv. ii. vii. 29; whereas Pliny (iv. 3) thinks the olives of Venafrum superior to those of Baetica and Istrià. The province of Baetica was also celebrated for its wool, to which the waters of the Baelis gave a golden hue, often alluded to by Martial.

Bilbilis, the second city of Hispafia Tarracensis, on the high road between Emerita and Caesar Augusta (Merida and Saragossa). Was a municipium in Imperial times. It stood on a rocky height surrounded by the Salo, a river famed for tempering iron. Its site is at or near Bambola, near Calayud, a Moorish City built by Ayub, the nephew of Musa, the Governor of N.W. Africa at the time of the Arab invasion, who used the remains of Bilbilis as a quarry. Bilbilis was also the scene of a battle between A. Metellus and the insurgent Sertorius in B.C. 74.

Castricus, some friend of Martial; who is addressed in several

epigrams. It would appear from vii. xiii. that he was a poet

Ceratias, a friend of Martial, whom the poet invites to dinner in two epigrams, x. xlviii. and xi. iii. He was a poet and imitator of Virgil, and wrote bucolics and a poem on the war of the Giants, xi. lii. 17, 18. Pliny (Ep. ii. 19) addresses one of his letters to him.

Claudia Rufina, a lady of British birth, whose refinement Martial praises as equal to that of a Roman or a Greek, xi. lii. She may be the same as the Claudia that married Pudens, whose marriage the poet celebrates, iv. xiii.

Crispius, a low upstart who came from Egypt and hawked salt fish in Rome, Juv. iv. 33. He was raised to the Senate by Nero, and was made a knight by Domitian. Juvenal calls him (i. 20) verba Canopi, and (iv. 31) purpureus scura Palati; and speaks of him as matutino sudans amomo, iv. 108. He was commander of the Emperor's bodyguard (praefectus praetorio), an office summus equester gradus: Suet. Galb. 14. Martial alludes to him in two epigrams, vii. xcix. and viii. xlviii.

Decianus, of Emerita, another friend of Martial. He was a Stoic, and is praised for not following the example of suicide, i. viii. His literary works conferred distinction on his birthplace, i. lxi. 10. Martial speaks of his learning, simplicity, and rectitude, i. xxxix.; and addresses to him the Introductory Epistle of his second book. In ii. v. he is rallied on the distance M. has to go to call on him, and the difficulty of finding him at home.

Earinos, the page of Domitian, on whose name M. plays in three epigrams, ix. xi.-xiii.; and whose dedication of his hair to Aesculapius M. celebrates, ix. xvi. and xvii.; see also ix. xxxvi. 3. Statius (Silv. iii. iv.) has a long poem on the latter subject Entellus, a freedman, Domitian's secretary a libellis (petitions). Was privy (with Parthenius) to the Emperor's assassination. M. praises his greenhouses, viii. xviii.

Eration, a little slave girl, whose death M. laments in three of his finest epigrams, v. xxxiv. and xxxvii.; x. lxii. But the second epigram mentioned the harmony of the poem is somewhat spoilt by the sarcastic touch at the end

Etruscus, Claudius, father and son. The father came originally as a slave from Smyrna, and was emancipated by Tiberius, in whose household he was. He was successively in the service of Caligula, Claudius, Nero, and Domitian, being under Nero the head of the Imperial treasury. By Domitian he was banished to Campania: Stat. Silv. iii. 164, who describes him as hospes, non exul. He married a rich wife, and lived to a great age. His son accompanied his father into exile. M. has epigrams on the father's exile and recall, vi. lxxxiii.; and on his death, vii. xi.; and on the son's baths, vi. xiii., which are also eulogised by Statius (Silv. i. v.) who also writes a lament on the father's death, Silv. iii. iii.

Faustinus, Julius, a friend frequently addressed, and a poet whom M. (i. xxv.) advises to publish, and to whom (iii. ii. 6) he sends his third book, and (iv. x.) his fourth. He had villas at Anxur (X. ii.), Tibur (iv. lvii.) and Baiae, the latter of which M. (iii. lviii.) elaborately describes. M. appeals to him (vii. xii.) on the question of the unmalicious character of his epigrams. Nothing more is known of him.

Festus, a friend of the Emperor, who died of a cancer in the face, i. lxviii. If he be the same as the Valerius Festus, spoken of by Pliny (Ep. iii. 7) as guilty per summum facinus of the murder in A.D. 69 of Piso the proconsul of Africa (see Tac. Hist. iv. 49) M. is hardly justified in speaking of his indignas fauces and via ora. Tacitus, supra, describes him as sumptuosae adulcertiae, neque modica cupiend

Flaccus, a native of Patavium, is addressed by Martial in many epigrams; he is a guest in x. xviii., and in xii. lxxxiv. Martial makes him present of "dreadnought" glass. He appears to have been a poet, i. lxi. and lxxvi. Some commentators, on the strength of the two epigrams mentioned, have identified him with Valerius Flaccus, the epic poet of the Argonautica. But it is not certain that Valerius Flaccus was born at Patavium; Setia in Campania contends for the honour of being his birthplace, and the Vatican MS. has appended the words "Setinum Balbus." And Quintilian says (x. i. 90) multum in Valerio Flacco super amissum; consequently V. Flaccus must have died before A.D. 90 or 91. The probable date of Quintilian's great work, in which case none of Martial's last six books at least can refer to him. The note to ix. lv. 2 and xi. lxxx. 3 should be corrected. It is noticeable also that Martial never refers—as might have been expected—to the Argonautica, as he does to the Punica of Silius.

Frontinus, Sextus Julius, succeeded Petilius Cerialis, and was succeeded by Agricola, as Governor of Britain. Tacitus (Ag. 17) describes him as a great man so far as he was permitted to be," i.e. by the Emperor's jealousy. He subdued the powerful and warlike Silures in South Wales in spite of the difficulties of the country (Tac. supra). In A.D. 97 he was curator aquarum, and in 98 Consul (according to M.) for the second time; but his name does not appear in the Fasti (Hoffm. Lex. Unir.). He had been Praetor Urbanus in 70 (Tac. Hist. iv. 39), an office he resigned to Domitian, not then Emperor. He wrote a treatise on the art of war called Strategemata, and a work on the Roman aqueducts, both of which are extant. He died in 106, saying in his will impensa monumenti superavque est; memoria nostri durabil si vita meritus.

Fronto, described by M. (i. lv.) as a distinguished lawyer and soldier. Perhaps the same as T. Catius Fronto, consul in 96, and alluded to by Pliny (Ep. iv. 9 and vi. 13) as an orator.

Fuscus, apparently a lawyer of some eminence and wealth whom Martial (vii. xxviii) begs to read and criticise his seventh book. He is not the Cornelius Fuscus who fell in the Dacian war, vi. lxxxvi; and perhaps not the Fuscus whom M. courts in i. lv.

Ianthis, or Violentilla, the wife of Stella the poet. Martial (vi. xxii.) as well as Statius (Silv. i. lii.) celebrates her marriage. The name is taken from Ιωάνθης, the Greek form of viola. Statius calls her Asteris.

Latinus, a celebrated mime, or comic actor. He was a favourite of Domitian, and a delator, Schoel on Juv. iv. 53. Martial writes an epigram (ix. xxviii), on his portrait. Suetonius (Dom. 15) tells a story how Latinus, when dining with Domitian before the murder of the latter, had disturbed the Emperor, who had been alarmed by various ominous occurrences, by reporting the fulfilment of a prophecy by Asclepius, the astrologer, of the manner of his own death, i.e., being torn by dogs, whereas Domitian to prevent this had commanded him to be buried.

Licinius was born like Martial at Bilbulis. He is spoken of highly by the poet as bringing glory to Spain, I. xlix and I. lxi. He is perhaps the Lucius mentioned in IV. lv. The epigram I. xlix seems to show he was a lawyer.

Licinianus, was originally a Gaulish prisoner taken by Julius Caesar, who gave him his freedom, and made him his steward. Augustus appointed him, in B.C. 15, Governor of Gaul. By extortion during his government he acquired enormous wealth; and Juvenal (I. 109) couples him with Claudius' freedman Pallas as the typical rich man. The magnificence of his tomb on the Via Salaria (as of that of Messalla) was proverbial, VIII. iii. 5, 6

Lucanus, Cn. Domitius Curtius, the brother of Cn. Domitius Tullius. The two brothers were types of fraternal affection, I. xxxvi., and V. xxvii. 3, and Martial (IX. ii.) compares them to Castor and Pollux. He died before his brother, after having held high office under Nero and Domitian. Both are alluded to by Pliny, Ep. viii. 18

Lucanus, M. Annaeus, the poet of the Pharsalia, was the son of Lucius Annaeus Mela, the geographer, and the nephew of Seneca, the philosopher, and was born at Corduba in Spain. At first he was in favour with Nero, but afterwards, from the Emperor's jealousy of his literary ability, fell into disfavour, and was forbidden to recite in public. From pique he joined the Pisonian conspiracy of A.D. 65, and was offered a pardon if he would betray his fellow-con-spirators. He denounced his own mother Atilla. But this did not save him, for he was forced by Nero to commit suicide by opening his veins in a bath: Tac. An. xiv. 70. Martial, who regarded him as next to Virgil, laments his death in three epigrams, VII. xxi-xxiii.; as also does Statius, Silv. II. vii. His first work was on the death of Hector and Priam's recovery of the body, Stat. Silv. II. vii. 54; and his last the Pharsalia; but, according to Martial (X. lxiv.) he did not confine himself to grave subjects. Juvenal (vii. 79) says he was a rich man; and Tacitus (Ann. xvi. 17) that Nero was greedy for his wealth.

Macer, a friend of Martial, and at one time curator of the Appian Way (X. xvii.), and afterwards propraetor of Dalmatia (X. lxxviii.). Martial in two epigrams (V. xxvii. 5, and X. lxxviii. 2) speaks of his honesty and uprightness. He is probably not the Macer who was Governor of Baetica (XII. xxvii.).

Marcella, a Spanish lady from Bilbulis, to whom M. addresses two epigrams, in one (XII. xxi.) praising her mind as truly Roman, and in the other (XII. xxxi.) acknowledging the gift of the country house she gave him when he returned to Spain. Some have supposed she was his wife.

Marcellinus served in the Sarmatian campaign, V. xxv., VII. lxxx.; and in the Caucasus, IX. xlv. Martial sends him his seventh book, VII. lxxx.; and writes on his father's birthday, III. vi. He also warns him against over-rash valour: he should consider his father, as well as his Emperor, VI. xxv. That father is supposed to have been Faustinus. Marcellinus himself is called boni suboles sincera parentis, VI. xxv.
INDEX OF PROPER NAMES

Marsus, Domitius, a poet of the Augustan age, frequently mentioned by Martial, together with Pdeo and Catullus, with whom he compares himself, v. v. 6; vii. xcix. 7. He wrote epics. Ov. Ex. P. iv. xvi. 5; and Martial alludes to an Amazonis (iv. xxix. 8) which, however, he regards as inferior to the satires of Persius. Marsus is chiefly distinguished for his epigrams, which were licentious and biting, one of his books being called cicuta (hemlock). An epitaph of his on Tibullus is extant.

Martialis, Julius, a friend for 33 years of the poet, by whom he is addressed in some of the finest epigrams, I. xv.; v. xx., x. xlvii., and xii. xxxiv. Martial also describes his villa on the Janiculum, iv. lxiv.; and his library, vii. xvii. Paley identifies him with the Julius Martialis mentioned by Tacitus (Hist. I. 28 and 82) as tribunus legionis, when Otho was aspiring to the purple, and as being suspected of complicity with the plot. He appears to have been a good critic, vi. i.; and Martial sends him his sixth book, ibid.; and he is probably also the Martialis to whom is sent the third book from Forum Cornelli, iii. v.

Maternus, a jurisconsult, whom Martial describes as a fellow-townsmen of Bilbells, and an old friend, x. xxxvii. 1, 3. In the same epigram M. compares the charm of life in Spain with life in a Roman villa.

Melitor, Atellius, a bon vivant of the time, called nuditus, iv. xlv. Martial praises him (viii. xxxviii) for his liberality to the Guild of Scribes in memory of his friend Blaesus; and both Martial (vi. xxviii. and xxix.), and Statius (Silv. I. 1.) have written on the death of his freedman Glauclus.

Messalla Corvinus, M. Valerius, the friend of Horace and patron of Tibullus. Was Consul b.c. 31 and Praefectus Urbis in 27. He was a patron of learning and the arts, and was himself a poet, a grammarian, historian, and orator. He took the side of Brutus and Cassius in the civil war, but was afterwards reconciled to Augustus. His tomb (alluded to by Martial, viii. iii. 5 and x. ii. 9) was, like that of Licinus, celebrated for its splendour.

Nomentum, now La Mentana, a town in the Sabine Country, 14½ Roman miles N.E. of Rome. Originally a Latin town, a colony from Alba, it was taken by Tarquinius Priscus, the fifth king of Rome. Martial, and also Seneca, had a house here, vi. xliii. 4, ix. xviii. 2; and here M. retired when he wanted quiet, xii. lvi. 27. Nomentum was celebrated for its wine, which, when it was old, M. praises, i. cv., and offers to his guests in x. xlviii. 19; but the poet in other respects depreciates his property, x. xcv. His fields, he says (vii. xxxi. 8) "produced nothing but himself."

Ovidius, Q., Martial’s friend and neighbour at Nomentum. He had accompanied Caesarionus Maximus into exile, when the former was banished by Nero, for which Martial (vii. xlv. and xlv.) praises him. In his old age he accompanied a friend to Britain, apparently in fulfilment of a promise, or from affection, x. xlv. Martial writes two epigrams (ix. iii. and lili) on his birthday.

Paris, a mime or comic actor, for whom Martial writes an epitaph (xi. xiii). He had great influence at Court, and was the darling of the Roman people. Domitian, on suspicion of his intrigue with the Empress Domitia, caused him to be murdered on the Flaminian Way.

Parthenius, a freedman, and Secretary or chamberlain to Domitian. Though he had been privy to the murder of that Emperor, the mildness of Nerva retained him for a time in his place, but was unable to protect him against the infuriated praetorians who put him to death with nameless indignities in A.D. 97. He seems to have been something of a poet, xi. i. 6; xii. xi. 2, and is constantly flattered by Martial, to whom he gave the celebrated toga described in viii. xxviii.

Paulus, some rich acquaintance of Martial, apparently a lawyer, vii. lxxii. Martial quizzes him on the tenuity of the bowl Paulus had sent him, viii. xxxiii.; and on his greed, ix. lxxv.; and satirises his adulation of great men, although he is himself consul, x. x.; and his false antiques and equally false friends, xii. lxix.; and complains of the trouble of calling upon him at a distance only to find him "not at home," v. xxii. He seems to have been a man of wit, v. xxviii. 6

Peda, Albinoceatus, a poet and epigrammatist of the Augustan age, and a friend of Ovid, who addresses him in one of the Epistles from the Pontus: Ep. ex P. iv. x.; and alludes to his poem on the exploits of Theseus. Martial compares himself with him and with Marsus and Catullus, v. v. 6

Plinius, Caius Caecilius, Secundus, the nephew and adopted son of the historian, born A.D. 61 or 62, probably at Comum. An orator, advocate and man of letters. He studied under Quintilian, and practised before the Centumviral Court, and filled several offices, being Consul in 100 (in which year he delivered his Panegyric on Trajan), and Praetor of Pontica in 103. His works consist of the Panegyric on Trajan above mentioned, and ten books of Epistles, of which the tenth consists of letters to Trajan and the Emperor's replies, two of which (97 and 98) are especially interesting by their allusion to the Christians. He was one of the most learned men of the age. Martial addressed an epigram (x. xix.) to him; but the Secundus alluded to in vii. lxxxiv. (where the note should be corrected) chronology shows not to be the same.

Primus, Marcus Antonius, was born at Tolosa in Gaul (ix. xcix. 3), took a leading part in the Civil war that made Vespasian Emperor, and was the first to enter Rome after the second battle of Bedriacum against the Vitellians. He bore the nickname in his youth of Beccus (beak of a cock, gallus); and Suetonius (Vit. 28) mentions the prophecy that Vitellius would fall into the hands Gallicani hominis. He perhaps gave Martial a toga (x. lxxiii. 2), and he admired his poetry, ix. xcix. 1. M. calls him Tolosae gloria, ix. xcix. 3; and in a fine epigram congratulates him on his well-spent life, x. xxxii.; and in another praises his portrait as a youth, x. xxxii. But Tacitus gives a different account of his character. "Though an offender against the laws, and condemned for forgery in the time of Nero, amongst the other evils of war, he had recovered his place in the order of senators. Though he had been appointed by Galba to the command of the seventh legion, he was believed to have written to Otho, offering himself as an adherent to his party. When the fortunes of Vitellius were tottering he attached himself to the party of Vespasian, and brought to it a great accession of strength. He was energetic in action, ready of tongue, a master of the art of sowing the seeds of suspicion against other men, influential in discords and seditions, a plunderer, a briber, in peace most vile, in war not to be despised."

Hist. ii. 86. "He had a ready audacity," Ann. xiv. 40; and "glibness of speech, and skill and influence in soothing the common herd," Hist. iii. 10. "He was of an arrogance impatient of an equal, much more of a superior," Hist. iv. 80; "success in the case of such a character laid bare his avarice, his inso-ience," and his other hidden vices," Hist. iii. 49

Priscus, Terentius, a fellow-countryman of Martial, to whom he dedicates, on Priscus' return to Spain, the twelfth book. In
xii. xlix. he addresses Saturn on the same subject. Martial calls him (xii. iv.) his Maecenas. In viii. xiv. he celebrates Priscus's return from Sicily; and in another epigram (xii. xiv.) warns him against the danger of too reckless hunting

Proculus, G. Julius, a friend of Martial, to whom he sends
(i. lxx.) his first book, and whose recovery from illness he commemorates, xi. xxxvi.

Pudens, Aulus, of Sassina in Umbria, a friend of Martial, and a centurion. He served in Pannonia. Martial celebrates his marriage with Claudia, iv.
xiii.; and prays (vi. lviii. 10)
that he may return from his campaigns with primipilary rank and the rank of a knight. It may be inferred from i. xxxi. 3,
as compared with v. xlviii. 1,
that he attained the former honour at least

Quintianus, some rich friend of M.
(v. xviii. 9) to whom M. says that, being poor, he will only send his books. In i. iii. M. appeals to him against a plagiarist

Quintilianus, M. Fabius, was born at Calagurris (Calaborra) in Spain. He was the most celebrated of Roman rhetoricians.
Educated at Rome, he returned to Spain, and came back with Galba in 68. He practised at the Bar, but is chiefly known as a teacher of eloquence, the younger Pliny (Ep. ii. 14;
vi. 6) being one of his pupils.
He held the chair of rhetoric founded by Vespasian; and was granted by Domitian the insignia of a consul, to which Juvenal (vii. 197) may perhaps sarcastically allude. After twenty years' tenure of the chair
he retired about 80 A.D., and in two years had completed the work for which he is principally known, the Institutiones Oratoriæ in twelve books. He advised Martial to take up a profession,
ii. xc.

Rabirius, the architect of Do-mitian's palace, vii. lvi. Martial has an epigram on the death of R.'s parents, and praises his filial piety, x. lxxi.

Regulus, M. Aquilius, a celebrated advocate. He was a delator under Nero and Domitian, and attained great wealth. He is disliked by Pliny, but is flattered by Martial, who praises his character (t. cxi.). Pliny ridicules even his oratorical power (Ep.
v. 7), and his extravagant grief for the death of his son,
"a boy of a quick but inscrutable disposition, who yet might have followed the right, had he not been like his father," Ep. iv. 2.
M. congratulates him in two epigrams (t. xii. and lxxxii.) on his escape from death. Pliny describes him as "ricli, factious, courted by many, feared by more; and fear is generally stronger than love," Ep. i. 5;
and remarks his chastened attitude after Domitian’s death, “under whom he had committed no smaller infamies than under Nero, but more covert ones,” ibid. Pliny also (Ep. ii. 20) tells a story of his legacy-hunting even in the case of his enemy’s wife.

Rufus, Canonius, of Bononia, a friend of M. He died at the age of 20 in Cappadocia, vi. lxxv. M. alludes in two epigrams (ix. lxxv. and lxxvi.) to his portrait as a child, and writes an epigram (vi. lxxxv.) on his death.

Rufus, Canius, of Gades, a poet (i. lx. 9) and friend of Martial, who alludes (i. lxix.; iii. xx.) to his geniality, and to his versatility as an author. He married the accomplished Theophila, on whom M. (vii. lxix.) writes an epigram.

Rufus, Instantius, a friend of M., to whom he presented the famous cup elaborately described in viii. li. M. speaks of his sincerity, viii. lxxxii. 1. Perhaps he may be identified with the proconsul of Baetica mentioned in xii. xviii. 5.

Sabinus, Caesius, of Sassina in Umbria, where he built a temple to the Nymph of the Lake, ix. lviii. M. sends him (vii. xvii. 13) his seventh book, and on another occasion a wreath of roses, ix. ix.

Scorus, a famous charioteer on whose death Martial writes two epitaphs, x. 1. and iii.; and of whose immense earnings he speaks, iv. lxvii.; x. lxxiv.; and gilt statue, v. xxv.

Seneca, L. Annaeus, the Stoic philosopher, was born at Corduba in Spain, i. lxi. 7. He was the brother of Annaeus Mela, the geographer, and of Gallio of the New Testament, and uncle of Lucan the poet. He was banished by the Emperor Claudius, but was afterwards tutor to Nero, whose quinquennium, or first five years of good government, was attributed to his teaching. He, however, stained his reputation by condoning Nero’s murder of his mother Agrippina. He was implicated in the conspiracy of Piso in A.D. 65, and, together with his wife, committed suicide, Tac. Ann. xv. 63. He was a man of great wealth.

Severus, a critic to whom Martial submits his poems, v. lxxx.; xi. lvii. As in the last epigram he is called doctus, he may have been himself a poet. In ii. vi. M. chaffs him for his hurried reading of Martial’s slender volume, although he professed to be a great admirer of his poems. There is also an epigram (vii. xxxviii.) on two hideous slaves of his; and Martial frequently addresses him. In vii. xli. he sends him a gift of eggs and apples from the country. It is not certain whether this Severus is identical with the younger son of Sillius, for whom the poet (viii. lxvi.) solicits the consulship; and whose death (ix. lxxxvi.) he laments.

Sillius, C., surnamed Italicus, orator, lawyer, and poet, was born about A.D. 25. Pliny (Ep. iii. 7) gives an account of his life. He was consul in 68, the last of Nero’s consuls, and proconsul of Asia, where he served with distinction. He lost his younger son, for whom Martial solicits (viii. lxvi.) the consulship, and whose death he laments, ix. lxxxvi.; but left the elder a consul. In later life he retired to Campania, where he possessed many villas, including Cicero’s house at Puteoli and Virgil’s house at Naples, xi. xlvi. and xlix. These villas were richly furnished with books, statues, and busts, among which he especially venerated that of Virgil, whose birthday he kept more religiously than his own.

and whose tomb he regarded as a temple. He committed suicide by voluntary starvation in his seventy-sixth year because of an incurable cancer. As a poet Martial (vii. lxiii.) calls him immortal, but Pliny says that his works showed more scholarly care than genius. He is known by his Punica, an epic on the second Punic war in seventeen books, of which Prof. Mackail says: "His Punica War may fairly contend for the distinction of being the worst epic ever written... its author the most striking instance in Latin literature of the incorrigible amateur... without any inventive or constructive power of his own. Silius copies with tasteless pedantry all the outworn traditions of the heroic epic." He is only once referred to in the fifth century; then he fell into complete oblivion till he was discovered in the fifteenth century.

Stella, L. Arruntius, of Patavium, a patron and friend of Martial and Statius, who dedicates to him the first book of the Silvae. Both Martial (vi. xxl.) and Statius (Silv. i. 2) write epithalamia on Stella's marriage with Violentilla, whom M. calls Ianthis, and Statius Asteris. Stella gave games to celebrate the conclusion of the Sarmatian war, viii. lxxviii.; and was consul A.D. 101; an honour for which M. (ix. xlii.) had solicited Apollo. Statius (Silv. i. ii. 177) also says that he was a quindecimvir librorum sibyllinorum. He was also a poet. M. alludes to his Columba, a poem on the death of Ianthis' pet dove, i. vii. 1; vii. xiv. 5; and writes several epigrams (e.g. vi. xlvii.) on a spring in Stella's house.

Sulpicia, a poetess of the time, of whom nothing is known, x. xxxv. She was the wife of Calenus, x. xxxviii. She is mentioned by Ausonius and by Sidonius Apollinaris; and a satirical poem on the expulsion by Domitian of the philosophers from Rome is commonly attributed to her. Paley ascribes to her the poems often contained in the editions of Tibullus.

Sura, Licinius, of Hispania Tarraconensis, held offices under Nerva and Trajan, being under the latter three times consul. Martial speaks (vii. xlvi. 1) of his learning, and (vi. lxiv. 13) of his unexpected recovery from severe illness. He would seem to have been a natural philosopher, for Pliny (Ep. iv. xxx.) consults him as to the unexplained cobb and flow of a spring. On his death Trajan gave him a public funeral, and built baths in his memory. He is perhaps the Sura of i. xlii. 40, but this Sura may be Palfurius Sura, who was removed from the Senate by Vespasian, became a Stoic, was a defator under Domitian, and was after his death condemned by the Senate, Schol. in Juv. iv. 53.

Tullus, Cn. Domitius Currius, the brother of Lucanus (q.v.). He held high office under Vespasian and Domitian. He was a rich man like his brother, and Pliny (Ep. viii. 19) speaks of the disappointment of the captatores when his will was opened, and says of the two brothers that it seemed ordained by fate that they should be enriched even against the will of the donors. He had played upon the expectations of legacy-hunters (se captandum praebuit set) during his life, and by his will left his property to his relations, thus showing himself longe melior morte quam vita. He was a cripple, unable even to brush his own teeth, complaining that 'he daily licked the fingers of his slaves," Pliny, l.c. Pliny speaks of the devotion of his wife

Vestinus, perhaps the Lucius V. described by Tacitus (Hist. iv. 53) as equestris ordinis virum, sed auctoritate famaque inter proceres, to whom Vespasian gave the duty of restoring the Capitol; and perhaps also the son of the consul Vestinus who, being marked for death by Nero, committed suicide by opening his veins in a bath (Tac. Ann. xv. 69). Martial praises him (iv. lxxiii.) for dividing his property amongst his friends when he was on the point of death. Paley suggests that his motive was to avoid making the Emperor his heir, or joint heir; and cites the example of Agricola (Tac. Ag. 43), who had made Domitian joint heir with his own wife and daughter

Zoilus, an anonymous person frequently attacked by M., and to whom is attributed every vice. He had been a slave (III. xxix.) and a runaway one (XI. liv.), and had afterwards become a knight (III. xxix.) It is not improbable that M. borrowed the name from the original Zoilus, a grammarian of Amphipolis who flourished in the time of Philip of Macedon and Alexander the Great, and whose name, because of his attacks on Homer, Plato, and others, became one synonymous with malignant criticism, Ov. Rem. Am. 366. He was called κυνοδρομικός, and ὠμηρομαστιξ, and remains, in the words of Swinburne (Cont. of Shak. II.) "eternally alive (or in Brownings characteristically audacious phrase) immortally immered." Aelian (V.H. xi. 10) reports a remark of his that he always spoke evilly of men because he could not do them evil

INDEX OF FIRST LINES

Quatenus Odrysios iam Pax Romana triones
Quattuor argentii libras mihi tempore bismae
Quem recitas, meus est, o Fidentine, libellus
Quid, Corcyraei vidit pomaria regis
Quia duces vultus et non legis ista libenter
Quia gravis es nilium, potes hiciam, lector, abire
Quia legis Oedipoden, caliginantemque Thyesten
Quia modo per totam flammis stimulus harenam
Quia nondum Stygiar quaerit descendere ad umbras
Quia nunc Caesareae iussu spectatur harenam
Quia Palatiae caperet convivia mensae
Quia plinxt Venerem tuam, Lycori
Quia potuit Bacchi matrem dixisse Tonatem
Quia praestat pietate pertinaci
Quia recttat lana fauces et revinctus
Quia tecum cupis esse meos ubiunque libellos
Quia tonson tota fueras notissimus urbe
Quid cum femineo tibi, Baetice Gallae, barathro?
Quid de te, Line, suspicercit uxor
Quid faciat vult scire Lyris: quod sobria: fellat
Quid factum est, rogo, quid repente factum est
Quid me, Thal, senem subinde dicis
Quid mihi reddat ager quaeris, Line, Nomenatus?
Quid mihi vobiscum est, o Phoebi, novemque sorores?
Quid narrat tua moecha? Non puelem
Quid nobis, inquis, cum epistola?
Quid non cogit amor? secuit nonente capillos
Quid non saeva fugis placidi lepus ora leonis?
Quid promitебas mihi milla, Gaure, ducenta
Quid recitaturos circumdias vellera collo?
"Quid sentis" inquis "de nostris, Marc, libellis?"
Quid, stulte, nostris versibus tuos misces?
Quid te, Tucca, iuvat vetulo miscere Falerno.
Quid tibi nobiscum est, ludi scelerata magister
Quid vellis vetulum, Idia, cunnum?
Quidam me modo, Rufe, diligenter
Quidquid agit Rufus, nihil est nisi Naevia Rufo
Quidquid in Orpheo Rhodope spectasse atroco
Quidquid Parrhasia nitebat aula
Quidquid ponitur hic et inde verris
Quinque satis fuerant: nam sex septemve libelli
Quinte Caledoniis Ovidi visure Britannos.
Quintilliana, vagae moderater summe iuventae
Quintum pro Decimo, pro Crasso, Regule, Macrum
Quintus nostrorum liber est, Auguste, locorum,
Quis labor in phala? docti Myos anne Myronos?
Quis negat esse suum materne lubrico Bacchum?
Quis Palatinos imitatuar imagine vultus
Quis puer hic nitidis absistat Ianthodius undis
Quis, rogo, tam durus, quis tam fuit ille superbus
Quis te Phildacio formam, Iulia, caelo
Quis tibi persuasit nares ascendere moecho?
Quisquis Flaminiam teris, viator
Quisquis laeta tuis et sera parentibus optas
Quisquis stolaevae purpuraevae contempter.
