STATIUS
I
STATIUS

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

J. H. MOZLEY, M.A.

SOMETIMES SCHOLAR OF KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE LECTURER IN CLASSICS AT EAST LONDON COLLEGE, UNIVERSITY OF LONDON

IN TWO VOLUMES

I

SILVAE · THEBAID I-IV

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN LTD
NEW YORK: G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS MCMXXVIII
Printed in Great Britain.
CONTENTS OF VOLUME I

Introduction. . . . . . . . . . vii

SILVAE

Book I—

1. Statius to his friend Stella . . . . . 2
2. The statue of Domitian . . . . . 6
3. Epithalamium in honour of Stella and Violentilla . . . . . 14
4. The villa of Manlius Vopiscus . . . . 38
5. To Rutilius Gallicus . . . . . 46
6. The baths of Claudius Etruscus . . . . 58
7. The Kalends of December . . . . . 64

Book II—

1. Statius to his friend Melior . . . . . 72
2. Glaucias . . . . . 76
3. The villa of Pollius Felix . . . . . 94
4. The tree of Atedius Melior . . . . . 106
5. Melior's parrot . . . . . 112
6. The tame lion . . . . . 116
7. To Flavius Ursus . . . . . 118
8. To Polla on Lucan's birthday . . . . . 128 CONTENTS

Book III—

- Statius to his friend Pollius ........................................ 138
  i. The temple of Hercules at Surrentum ......................... 140
  ii. To Maccius Celer ............................................. 154
  iii. To Claudius Etruscus ........................................ 166
  iv. The tresses of Flavius Earinus ............................... 184
  v. To his wife Claudia ........................................... 192

Book IV—

- Statius to his friend Marcellus .................................. 202
  i. The seventeenth consulship of Domitian ..................... 206
  ii. To the Emperor Domitian .................................... 210
  iii. The Domitian Road ........................................... 216
  iv. To Vitorius Marcellus ....................................... 228
  v. To Septimius Severus ......................................... 236
  vi. The Hercules statuette ....................................... 242
  vii. To Vibius Maximus .......................................... 250 viii. To Julius Menecrates ........................................ 256
  ix. To Plotius Grypus ............................................ 260

Book V—

- Statius to his friend Abascantus .................................. 266
  i. On the death of Priscilla ..................................... 268
  ii. The praises of Crispinus .................................... 288
  iii. A lament for his father ..................................... 302
  iv. To Sleep ...................................................... 328
  v. A lament for his adopted son .................................. 330

Fragment of a Poem on the German War ............................. 336

THEBAID

Book I ................................................................. 340
Book II ............................................................... 394
Book III ............................................................. 450
Book IV ............................................................... 506

Map ........................................................................ 513

at beginning of volume vi
INTRODUCTION

Publius Papinius Statius was born at Naples, probably about A.D. 40.\(^a\) His father was a native of Velia on the Lucanian coast, but had moved to Naples, where as "grammaticus" he conducted a school to which pupils came from all parts of Italy. Here he taught literature, which in the secondary school of the time meant poetry, with exposition of grammar, style, and antiquities; he also instructed his pupils in augury and the various rites of the Roman state religion. He was himself a poet, and had won prizes in the Grecian contests, at Delphi, Nemea, and the Isthmus; he had written a poem on the civil war of A.D. 69, and was planning another on the eruption of Vesuvius in 79, when he died. He was buried on an estate that he possessed near Alba.

The younger Statius owed to his father's personal care and instruction all his education and poetical training, a debt which he acknowledges in terms of the warmest gratitude; he soon gained fame as a poet himself, and won prizes at the local competitions in Naples, held at the festival of the Augustalia. Probably after his father's death he left Naples and \(^a\) See references to his senium in Silv. iii. 5, 13, 24, iv. 4, 70, v. 2. 158; the date also suits his father's lifetime. Other information will be found for the most part in Silv. v. 3, and iii. 5.

INTRODUCTION

went to Rome, where he lived till the year 94, writing poetry and declaiming extracts from his Thebaid before crowded audiences. He was awarded a prize in the annual poetical contest held by Domitian in honour of Minerva at his residence near Alba, but to his great disappointment, when he competed at the important Capitoline "Agon" in Rome, he met with failure. In Rome he married his wife Claudia, a widow with one daughter. The poet himself was childless, and adopted a slave-boy born in his own house, whose early death he mourns with real sorrow in his last, unfinished poem. About 94 he returned in broken health to Naples, where he died, probably in 95 or 96.

Although one may take Juvenal's word for it that Statius, in spite of the large crowds his recitations drew, made no money out of poetry, one need not assume that he lived in poverty and was forced to write libretti for the stage in order to make a living; there is nothing in his own writings that implies it, while from the mention of his father's estate at Alba one would gather that he was at least moderately well off. The poet, at any rate, seems to have lived on terms of familiarity with the wealthy Pollius Felix and others, and his wife was the personal friend of Priscilla, whose husband Abascantus was secretary of state. It seems doubtful whether he formed part of any circle or group of poets; his patrons were those of Martial, Atedius Melior, for instance, and Pollius Felix, but neither writer ever mentions the other, whence some have thought that there was a coolness between the two. This is not unlikely, for from what we know of the two men we should conclude that they were extremely uncongenial to each other. Juvenal indeed, is the only Latin writer before Sidonius Apollinaris who does mention Statius, though his influence upon later poets was strong.

\[a\] See Juv. vii. 82 sqq.

His relations with the Court were those of the humble aspirant to Imperial favour; his poems upon the colossal equestrian statue of Domitian, the Emperor's 17th Consulship, the tresses of his favourite Earinus, and the banquet to which the Emperor invited him, are all marked by the flattery that the subservience of the times was eager to bestow; Domitian affected to be a patron of letters, even a poet himself: it was one of the stock compliments of the time to wonder whether he were more brilliant a poet or a commander.\(^a\) Statius frequently mentions his campaigns, and follows the convention of pretending to be planning a great work on the Emperor's wars, to which the actual epics are only preliminary.\(^b\)

Statius flourished in the middle of the Silver Age of Latin literature, coming after Seneca and Lucan (though born about the same time as the latter), before Juvenal, Tacitus, and the younger Pliny, and contemporary with Martial, Valerius Flaccus, and Quintilian. The later part of his life was thus spent under the Flavian dynasty, which in spite of its faults did really encourage letters. He also lived at a time when the practice of recitation had become a popular rage; his pleasant voice,\(^c\) his poetry, with its subtle effects of alliteration and assonance, its brilliant passages, startling tricks of style and language, its avoidance of the obvious and occasional touches of the pathetic and the horrible, all this combined to tickle the ears and feelings of the popular audiences of the day.\(^a\) Or again, with an Italian's gift of rapid improvisation, he would delight a patron by dashing off a description of his villa in marvellously smooth hexameters, or oblige him with occasional verse on any subject, serious or trivial.

\(^a\) See Achilleid, i. 15. \(^b\) See Thebaid, i. 32. \(^c\) vocem iucundam, Juv. vii. 82: for the dulcedo which Juvenal also mentions (i. 84) see on Statius's versification (below); the word was probably the origin of Dante's line (put in Statius's mouth), "Tanto fu dolce mio vocale spirto" (Purg. xxii. 88).
INTRODUCTION

The poetry of Statius shows many of the characteristics of the Silver Age. (i.) The rhetorical influence is evident, frequency of hyperbole, straining after epigram and point, superficiality and obedience to text-book models. (ii.) There is a tendency to realism which shows itself now in the petty, now in the horrible, as for instance in many of the battle-scenes of the Thebaid. (iii.) There is a general diminution of scale, characteristic perhaps of Silver periods of literature, when the great subjects are exhausted and poets descend to more trivial themes; or, if the grand themes are still attempted, the treatment is unequal to them, and lack of proportion is the inevitable result. The search for new matter takes the form of describing things that the great poets would not have thought worth describing, or not suitable to poetry. The Description, indeed, as such, the ἐκφρασις, becomes a recognized literary form. (iv.) Another note of the age is the conscious learning which obtrudes itself into many a passage; poets could draw on learned compilations of mythological matter and general information, on treatises dealing with anything from astronomy to horse-breeding, while audiences probably relished such compliments to their culture.

\(^a\) See, for a satirical exaggeration of the picture, Persius i. 13 sqq.
INTRODUCTION

THE SILLAE \(^a\)

These are a collection of occasional poems, many of which were written hastily to order or just as the fancy seized the poet; some, on the other hand, like the lament for his father (v. 3), are more carefully constructed. Six of them are Poems of Consolation,\(^b\) for the loss of a father, a wife or a favourite slave; this was a type of composition of which the Romans were very fond, in prose as well as in poetry. They cannot be said to be the most successful examples of Statius's verse; to our taste, at any rate, they appear artificial and exaggerated in tone, and lacking in real sentiment,\(^c\) also for the most part much too long. It should be said, however, that he was following the rules laid down for that type of poem by the schools of rhetoric and obeyed by the poets. This applies also to other literary forms, for example, the

\(^a\) The word means literally "pieces of raw material," from \textit{silva} = Gk. \(\texttt{\delta\nu\nu\alpha\nu}\), \textit{i.e.} pieces ready to be worked up into shape, or impromptu pieces; \textit{cf.} Quint. x. 3. 17 "\textit{diversum est eorum vitium, qui primum decurrere per materiam stilo quam velocissimo volunt, et sequentes calorem atque impetum ex tempore scribunt; hanc silvam vocant.}" "Their fault is different, who wish to run over their material first with as rapid a pen as possible, and write impromptu, following the inspiration of the moment: such work they call \textit{silva.}" \textit{Cf.} also Aulus Gellius, \textit{Noct. Att.} Pref. 6.

\(^b\) Epicedion, or \textit{Et\i\i\i\i\i\i}\textit{\textacuten} from \textit{\kappa\theta\omega\sigma}, mourning, funeral lamentation.

\(^c\) Exceptions are v. 3, v. 5 and the passage at the end of ii. 1 (208-end).
INTRODUCTION

Epithalamion (i. 2), a much more pleasing composition, the Propempticon, or Farewell-piece (iii. 2), the Description ("Ἑκφρωσις, i. 3, i. 5, ii. 2, iv. 6), the Genethliaecon (ii. 7), a name more commonly given to a poem written for the birthday of a living person, while here the occasion is the anniversary of the birthday of the poet Lucan, who has been dead some years.

More attractive again are such pieces as that on Atedius Melior's Tree (ii. 3), where Statius's lightness of touch and fancy appears at its best, or the account of the entertainment given to the people by the Emperor on the Kalends of December (i. 6). The two imitations of Horatian lyric (iv. 5 and 7) are feeble, but the hendecasyllables of iv. 9 are spirited, and in the Lucan ode Statius succeeds in rising above the conventional, and there is real feeling in Calliope's lament for her favourite poet. The piece which he addresses to his wife Claudia is also marked by sincerity, and so are the two poems on the deaths of members of his own family, his father (v. 3) and his adopted son (v. 5): this latter poem is left unfinished, but it seems to have been planned with the same elaboration that we find in the case of the former. Best known of all the Silvae, probably, is the little sonnet-like poem addressed to the god Sleep (v. 4).

Statius's chief merit in this class of poetry consists perhaps, in his descriptive power, and to it we owe much of our knowledge of Roman society in the Flavian era. The scenes are varied, and include a state banquet given by the Emperor (iv. 2), a fashionable wedding (i. 2), country-seats of patrons of literature (i. 3, ii. 2), funeral scenes (ii. 1, ii. 6, etc.), the new road along the coast of Campania recently opened.
(iv. 3), an entertainment in the Amphitheatre (i. 6). Among the personages introduced are the poet's own friend and patron Pollius Felix, wealthy and cultured, the literary Epicurean Manlius Vopiscus, the soldier Rutilius Gallicus, of noble birth and distinguished career, the young Maecius Celer, just off to the Syrian front; the art-collector Novius Vindex, the freedman Claudius Etruscus, who had risen from slavery to the position of secretary of finance to the Emperor Nero, one of the three great secretarialships of the early Empire.

By far the greater number of these pieces are written in hexameters, a metre first applied by Statius, so far as we know, to the composition of genre poems of this kind, and employed with marvellous facility and ease; the lines run smoothly, though without the extreme elaboration that we sometimes find in the Thebaid, and without great attention to variation of pause, or subtlety of alliterative effect. He displays wonderful skill in expression and choice of phrase; when describing, for instance, the water flowing in its silver channels in the Baths of Claudius Etruscus, he says (i. 5. 48):

argento felix propellitur unda argentoque cadit, labrisque nitentibus instat delicias mirata suas et abire reкусat.

and, of the stream outside:

extra autem niveo qui margine caerulus amnis vivit.

In his address to his wife, again, speaking of the peacefulness of Naples, he says (iii. 5. 87):

nulla foro rabies aut strictae in iurgia leges, morum inra viris solum et sine fascibus aequum.
INTRODUCTION

As a poet who depicts the society of his time, Statius compares very favourably with Martial in avoiding the coarseness that was so prominent a feature of it, and his poetry reflects the sensitiveness of his character.

THE THEBAID AND ACHILLEID

To be the author of a great epic poem is to count as one of the few great poets of the world, and it need hardly be said that Statius can make no claim to that honour. He stands with Apollonius, Lucan, and Valerius Flaccus in the second rank. Yet the Thebaid received high praise from the elder Scaliger and the post-Renaissance critics, and the tendency to-day is, if anything, to underrate its merits. It is, indeed, somewhat lacking in unity of theme, yet it must be remembered that much depends on the story chosen, and that of the Seven against Thebes is a difficult one to handle owing to the double interest: the Argive and the Theban strands are hard to combine satisfactorily; in fact, the unity of the plot is a duality, i.e. the conflicting fortunes of the two brothers, and the real interest consists in the gradual approach and closer interweaving of the two "subjects," until, as in the stretto of a fugue, the climax is reached in the great duel of Bk. XI. Here, it is true, Statius might have stopped, with the Aeneid as his model, but the Theban legend is fruitful in incident, and it might be justly urged that the burial of the Argives, with the appeal of Theseus that it involves, together with the striking episode of the "strife of flames upon the funeral pyre" of the two rivals, formed a real part of the story; it must be admitted, however, that the xiv Thebaid does not end satisfactorily: that Statius was worried over it we may gather from a hint in the Silvae (iii. 2. 114). H. W. Garrod has defended the Thebaid as an "episodic" epic, and that is probably its most conspicuous feature; at the same time, though Statius had every right to make his poem episodic if he wished, it would be wrong to overlook the unity that it does possess, even if it is less obvious than in a story like the Argonautica, for example, or the Aeneid.

The same critic has spoken of the poet's "tender-ness, mysticism, and piety—in short, his Christianity"; it is true that the tenderness at times becomes sentimentality, at times a morbid emphasizing of the horrible, yet, generally speaking, Statius responds sympathetically to the tender emotions: Argia as wife and daughter, Hypsipyle in the anguish caused by the loss of the babe Opheltes. Antigone as sister, are faithfully drawn, and the relations of mother and son seem to have had a particular attraction for Statius, e.g. Atalanta and Parthenopaeus, Ismenis and Crenaeus in the Thebaid (notice, too, how many times he refers to Ino and Palaemon), Thetis and Achilles in the Achilleid.a

With regard to the gods, Jupiter and Nature are both referred to by Statius as supreme, quite apart from Fate or Destiny; b he does not actually identify them, but we may see here a tendency to a In Virgil, as Warde Fowler has pointed out, the father-son relation is more prominent. Statius loves to describe children; cf. the Opheltes episode, and the three epicedia (Silv. ii. 1, ii. 6, v. 5), and such touches as "qui pueris sopor" (Ach. i. 229).

b There is also the mysterious triplicis mundi summum of iv. 516, for whom see note ad loc.
INTRODUCTION

syncretism, or the regarding of different deities as so many manifestations of one ultimate Power, characteristic of the time. This probably originated with Stoicism, and Stoicism had become the religion of educated Romans, so far as they had one. "Dieu, c'est-à-dire Jupiter, et la Nature ne sont qu'un. Et cette raison divine, cette loi universelle, c'est le Fatum qui ne fait aussi qu'un avec la Nature et avec Dieu" (Legras, La Thébaïde, p. 160). Another apparent inconsistency has been laid to the poet's account, in making Jupiter first announce his decision to embroil Argos and Thebes, and then attempt to deter the Argives on their march by hostile omens: in this, however, he is doing no more than ancient writers commonly do in accepting both divine warning by omen and divine irrevocable will without attempting to reconcile them. That Statius was not unaware of the difficulty can be gathered from his discussions of divination and of omens (iii. 551, vi. 934).

The divine personages who make up the supernatural machinery of the Thebaid are treated in the familiar, realistic manner of traditional epic; certain personifications take their place among them, such as Sleep, Virtue, Piety; the latter, in her well-meant effort to stop the duel of the brothers, is treated very unceremoniously by Tisiphone, and hustled off the battle-ground whence she flees complaining to the Thunderer (xi. 457 sq.). Yet occasionally the poet strikes a higher note; one of the best known passages of the Thebaid is the description of the altar and grove of Clementia at Athens, in which the poet gives beautiful expression to the old Athenian ideal

\[a\] Cf. also i. 696 sq. where Apollo is identified with Mithras, Osiris, etc.

xvi
INTRODUCTION

of humanity, lines that breathe the spirit of a purer religion than any known to the ancient world, and may well have given rise to Dante's belief that Statius was a Christian.

We may now consider briefly some further characteristics of the Thebaid. (1.) Statius revels in description: in the first book we have the storm that Polynices encounters on his way to Argos, in Bk. II. the exciting narrative of the ambush set for Tydeus on his return from Thebes, in Bk. III. the auspice-taking, in Bk. IV. the neeromancy. The games in Bk. VI. are well done, Statius, no doubt, owing several details to his own close observation in the Roman Circus, as, for example, in the boxing and wrestling matches and the discus-throwing. In Bks. VII. and X. we have two set pieces, the abode of Mars and of Sleep respectively. Battle-pieces since Homer have, as a rule, been failures, in painting as well as in poetry; those of the Silver Latin poets suggest the large canvases of third-rate Italian painters, depicting, for example, the capture of Constantinople by the Latins for the adornment of a ducal palace; the same grim detail, the same hectic fury marks the battle-scenes of Statius. It is in description that his love of hyperbole becomes most manifest: the mountain in ii. 32 sq. is so high that the stars rest upon it, the serpent in v. 550 covers several acres, the Centaur plunging down from the mountain dams a whole river with his bulk, iv. 144, etc.

(II.) Passages of this kind, and also similes, are in many cases borrowed from previous poets, Virgil, Ovid, or Lucan. Statins in borrowing often adds details to fill out the picture, or elaborates the

vol. i

b

xvii
INTRODUCTION

language: often, too, he introduces a sentimental touch, i.e. he either attributes feeling to inanimate objects, or looks at the scene from the point of view of some living person: in ix. 90 the sea-resisting rock "feels no fear," or in the simile of the snake renewing its skin (iv. 93 sq.) a countryman is introduced ("a! miser agrestum;" etc.) Some of his similes are worthy of notice, for example, that which compares the calm produced by the majesty of Jove's utterance to that of lakes and streams under the tranquil influence of summer (iii. 253), or that of Pluto coming into his inheritance of the underworld (xi. 443). But we get rather tired of the endless bulls and boars to which his heroes are compared.

(III.) Of Statius's inequality as a poet it is hardly necessary to speak; he suffers from lack of judgement, rising now to the wildest heights of exaggeration and bombast, and now sinking to trivial and absurd detail, as when persons are described kissing each other through closed visors ("galeis iuvat oscula clausis inserere," iv. 20), or when Mercury's hat gets wet in the rainstorms of Thrace (vii. 39). At the same time there are lines of great poetic beauty: i. 336-341, a beautiful description of the rising moon, "her airy chariot hung with pearly dew" (Pope's transl.), and of Sleep's mysterious influence; or the moonbeams glinting on the bronze armour of the ambuscade (ii. 532), or a picture of sunrise on the fields in winter (iii. 468-9), or the last breeze dying away on drooping sails (i. 479-481); again, in i. 264-5, we seem to hear the beating of the gongs and the wailing of votaries by some sacred river of the East, while the mysterious figure of the Lydian Bacchus, the spirit of the golden river, appears dimly in "aut Hermi de fontibus aureus exis” (iv. 389). There is an effective touch in the duel of the brothers, when the ghosts of Thebans are permitted by Pluto to throng the hills around and watch the combat; in the journey of Argia, too, in Bk. XII. there are some romantic scenes (xii. 228 sq., 250-54, 267-77).
INTRODUCTION

(IV.) His love of epigram and point has already been mentioned; here we may notice that it is frequently seen at the ends of paragraphs, sometimes producing an effect of overstrain, even of obscurity. Examples may be found in i. 335, i. 547 (see note), i. 623, iii. 323, 498, v. 485, 533, vi. 795, x. 570.

(V.) Statius has great skill in versification, which shows itself not perhaps so much in the art of varying the pauses and the rhythm of his lines, though in this respect he has learnt more from Virgil than either Ovid or Lucan, as in his use of assonance and alliteration. The latter especially repays study, both in the single line, e.g. i. 123, ii. 89, v. 14, v. 615, and in passages of two or three lines, in which usually one or two consonant or vowel sounds predominate, with others as subordinate, e.g. ii. 118-19 (“f”), ii. 538 sq. (“c,” “t,” with “f,” “v,” “h”) or even in longer passages, e.g. i. 342-54). There is also sometimes remarkable symmetry in words, see the simile in iv. 93 sq., where the verb “erigitur” connects two groups, each consisting of two sub-groups, in each of which again noun and adjective are arranged in a chiasmus, and he often brackets his phrase between noun and adjective or participle, as in ii. 252-3, 718-9. It was, no doubt, technique of this kind, combined with the pointed phrases, the appearance of familiar similes and descriptions in more elaborate form, and the sprinkling of recondite mythological allusion that made Statius a popular poet with the audiences of Flavian Rome.
INTRODUCTION

(VI.) Statius takes great liberties with the Latin language. There are phrases which it is impossible to make sense of, if taken grammatically and literally. Legras is reduced to despair by some, as by v. 115 "vel iustos cuius pulsantia menses vota tument?" he says "'c'est, si on l'ose dire, un pur charabia"; so too "raptus ab omni sole dies" (v. 364), where the scholiast is compelled to exclaim "nove dictum!" and, perhaps the most untranslatable of all, "viderat Inachias rapidum glomerare cohortes Bacchus iter" (vii. 45). It is impossible, in translating, to do more than give the general sense; the poet is here a pure "impressionist." Postgate has made a similar comment on the style of Propertius (Select Elegies, Introduction, p. lx), "The outlines of his pictures lack sharpness and precision, and the colours and even forms on his canvas tend to blend imperceptibly with each other. Thus it is the general impression that fascinates us in his poems, not the proportion and perfection of the details." Again, speaking of Propertius' excessive subtlety of construction, he says "sometimes the sentence must be read as a whole, as it is almost impossible to give it a detailed construction. . . . Cf. i. 20. 24, where I have compared the tendency of the Greek tragedians to spread the meaning through a sentence rather than apportion it among the words." This very well expresses the character of the Statian phrase, and in this respect Statius is the successor of Propertius. Both poets perhaps were led to write in this way by an attempt to avoid the hard glitter of Latin, so suitable to the clear-cut phrase of Horace or the snap and polish of Ovid or Martial, and a longing for occasional half-tones, for lack of precision. Possibly it is due to Virgilian influence, for part of Virgil’s genius consists in being able to give a soft, mysterious effect without any sense of unnaturalness. Statius aims at a like effect, but fails to avoid unnaturalness.

\(^{a} i.e. \text{"pure gibberish."} \)
INTRODUCTION

(VII.) Psychologically, he is not conspicuous for remarkable insight; it may be said, however, in his defence that the epic does not demand refinement in color drawing, which is rather the business of the drama. In the Thebaid, as, indeed, in the Aeneid, the treatment of character is broad: Amphiaras the seer, Eteocles the fierce tyrant, Capaneus the scioner of the gods, Hippomedon the stalwart warrior, Parthenopaeus the gallant youth, are all true to type; more carefully drawn are Adrastus and his son-in-law Polynices; the former is depicted as an elderly monarch, grave, kindly, diplomatic, and perhaps somewhat lacking in decision, while the latter is shown as not altogether easy in mind, even diffident, about the undertaking, and ready to lapse into utter despair and to contemplate suicide when things go badly; at the same time he is not quite ingenuous (see iii. 381-2), and on comparing him with his brother one feels there is not much to choose.
Tydeus is vigorously drawn, especially in the episode of the embassy; he becomes the mere warrior in Bk. X., and his memory is stained by the inhuman gnawing of his enemy’s skull with which the book, and his career, closes.

a It is not inconsistent with this to point out that Parthenopaeus is modelled on Virgil’s Camilla.
INTRODUCTION

A few touches show some degree of insight: the people of Crotopus, king of Argos (in Adrastus' narrative), have just been saved from the awful pestilence sent on them by Apollo: "stupet Inacha pubes, magnaque post lacrimas etiam nunc gaudia pallent" (i. 619), "the Inachian youth stand appalled and their joy, though great now sorrow is ended, even yet is pale and dim." Capaneus is said to be "largus animae modo suaserit ira" (iii. 603), "lavish of his life, should wrath but urge him." a development of the Horatian "animaque magnae prodigum Paullum." The Argive leaders who have taken the place of those slain in the fight are "haud laeti seque huc crevisse dolentes" (x. 181). "feeling no joy, but grief that they are raised so high." Thetis, urging the boy Achilles to don the girlish clothes, adds "nesciet hoc Chiron" (Ach. i. 274), "Chiron will not know of it."

The plot of the Thebaid was probably modelled on the vast Epic of Antimaechus (fl. c. 400 B.C.), which Cicero calls "magnum illud volumen," and of which Porphyrio tells us that the author had completed twenty-four books before the Argive host had been brought to Thebes. Statius, though he took only six books in doing it, has been criticized for unnecessary delay in arriving at Thebes, but he was probably wise, as twelve books of battle-scenes would have rendered his work as unreadable as the seventeen books of Silius Italicus' Punica.

The following is a summary of the chief events of the Thebaid: i. 1-45. Invocation of the Emperor. 45-311, Oedipus, who has blinded himself, invokes Tisiphone and curses his sons: she hears him and hurries to Thebes: the brothers, full of mutual hate, agree to reign alternately: the lot falls on Eteoeles, xxii
INTRODUCTION

In the concluding lines of the poem Statius exhorts his Thebaid to follow far behind the divine Aeneid xxiii and to reverence its footsteps; from them we may gather that he was humble enough not to think of himself as a rival of Virgil, though acknowledging that poet as the chief inspirer of his work. In fact, the plan and chief incidents of the Aeneid seem to be reproduced with an astonishing scrupulousness in the Thebaid. Virgil, however, was not the only poet whom Statius laid under contribution; an analysis of the Thebaid shows that Ovid and Lucan, and in a lesser degree Seneca and Valerius Flaccus, have incidents, or at any rate, details borrowed from them by our author. In versification he is, on the whole, Ovidian; there is no trace of Virgil’s gravity, or of Lucan’s heaviness, but the hexameter is predominantly the smooth, unelided line of Ovid, though the heptameterimal pause and caesura, characteristic of Silver Latin verse, is frequent.

As for the authorities on whom Statius drew for the actual story of the Seven, we have already referred to the Thebaid of Antimachus; its fragments, how-

---

a nec tu divinam Aeneida tempta, sed longe sequere et vestigia semper adora.

Cf. also references in the Silvae, iv. 4, 53; iv. 7. 25.

b e.g. Virgil: i. 197 sqq. = Aen. i. 233 sqq.; x. 1 sqq.; ii. 183 = Aen. vii. 341; the Argive rush to arms, and Catalogue (Bk. III.) = Aen. vii. 572, etc., the Games. Parthenopaeus = Camilla; Hopleus and Dymas = Nisus and Euryalus, and many others.

Lucan: iv. 369, etc. = Phars. i. 469, 674; iv. 725 = Ph. iv. 324.

Seneca: ii. 269, etc. = Medea, 734 etc.; iv. 443 = Oed. 556.

Homer is also largely followed in the funeral rites and games of Bk. VI., and in the river fight of Bk. IX. (II. xvii., xviii., and xxi.). Also some of the episodes of the night raid (Bk. X.) are from the Dolomeia.

xxiv
ever, are so scanty that any estimate of his debt to it must be purely conjectural, and the same applies to the Oedipodeia and Thebais of the Epic Cycle. Of extant authors, Aeschylus and Sophocles appear to have contributed comparatively little, for, to take one or two instances, the character of Eteocles is quite different in Aeschylus’s Septem, and in Sophocles’ Oedipus Rex Jocasta commits suicide and Oedipus leaves the city immediately after the discovery, while in the Thebaid they are both there all the time. On the other hand the Phoenissae of Euripides is closely followed (probably also the Hypsipyle) and Seneca’s Phoenissae. For the narrative of Hypsipyle both Statius and Valerius Flaccus elaborate considerably on the simpler account of Apollonius of Rhodes.

There is, in fact, little if anything to show that Statius has done more than work on the traditional epic material in a manner that seemed to him best suited to the requirements of his audience; that he was successful and enjoyed considerable popularity as a poet we may gather both from the passage of Juvenal quoted above and from the closing lines of the poem itself (xii. 812-15):

```
iam certe praezens tibi Fama benignum stravit iter coepitque novam monstrare futuris.
iam te magnanimus dignatur noscere Caesar, Itala iam studio discit memoratque iuventus.
```

"Of a truth already present Fame hath of her bounty paved thy way, and begun to hold thee up, young as thou art, to future ages. Already great-hearted

"There are a number of verbal parallels with the Hypsipyle."

xxv
INTRODUCTION

Caesar deigns to know thee. and the youth of Italy eagerly learns and recounts thy verse."

The fame that Statius so anxiously yearned for was his throughout the Middle Ages. His epic, though of the ancient world, seems to herald the new age: Amphiaraus is almost the warrior bishop, Chaucer, indeed, calls him "the bisshop Amphiorax"; dragons, sorcerers, enchanted woods, maidens waving to their lovers from high turrets, and other romantic features fill the pages of his poem, while its actual influence can be traced in medieval literature. All readers of Dante remember the meeting of Statius and Virgil in Purgatory (Cantos 21, 22), and the touching lines in which the poet narrates the recognition of Virgil by his humble and admiring follower. Dante's belief that Statius was a Christian was due, according to Comparetti, to the latter's reverence for Virgil, whom the Middle Ages accepted as a prophet of Christ on the strength of the Fourth Eclogue. Mr. P. H. Wicksteed thinks that the words of xii. 496 "ignotae tantum felicibus araë" ("the altar is unknown only to the prosperous") may have led to an identification with the altar to the Unknown God, "ignoto Deo." seen at Athens by St. Paul (Acts xvii. 23). See also A. W. Verrall's

---

A For Amphiorax see Chaucer, Troilus and Criseyde, ii. 103: dragons, i. 600, v. 505, sorcerers, iv. 443, x. 600, wood, iv. 419, maidens, iv. 89, vi. 516, Ach. ii. 23. Chaucer's Knight's Tale has borrowed largely from the Thebaid (through Boccaccio's Teseide), and its influence is seen in a poem entitled the "Lamentations of Oedipus, King of Thebes" (Anthology of Mediaeval Latin, S. Gaselee, 1925).

b Virgil in the Middle Ages, Chapter vii.

ingenious suggestions in "The Altar of Mercy" (Collected Literary Essays, 1913). Besides this there is a conjecture of Prof. Slater: Statius, as we know from Silv. iv. 4. 53, was in the habit of frequenting the tomb of Virgil outside Naples; he suggests that this fact, together with the well-known tradition of St. Paul's visit to that spot, may have given rise to a story of the meeting of the two, and of Statius's conversion to Christianity as the result.\textsuperscript{a}

It is quite possible, however, that Dante originated the idea for his own purposes; this was the opinion of Benvenuto, the commentator on Dante (quoted by Vernon, Readings on the Purgatorio, ii. 188), and there seems to be no earlier tradition. When Dante and Virgil meet Statius, he is in the Circle of Avarice, where he has been 500 years, having previously spent 300 in the Ante-Purgatory, and 400 in the Circle of Sloth. The latter punishment was due, as he explains, to his unreadiness to declare himself a Christian, the former to his prodigality (by which, apparently, Dante accounts for his poverty, see Juvenal vii. 82). Statius enlightens Dante on two matters, first, the natural causes of winds and earthquakes (C. 21, cf. Theb. vii. 809 sq.), and second, the nature of the soul when separated from the body (C. 25). This latter knowledge depended to some extent on revealed truth, for which Statius needs to be a Christian. If it be asked why Statius was chosen, the answer may be (i.) that he was highly esteemed in the Middle Ages, (ii.) that his Epic contains similar discussions, though certainly none so long (augury, iii. 482, 551, \textsuperscript{a} Introduction to translation of Silvae, Oxford, 1908.

INTRODUCTION

physiology of horses, vi. 333, omens, vi. 934. earthquakes, vii. 809).

THE Achilleid

Owing to the poet’s ill-health and comparatively early death no more than 1127 lines of this epic appear to have ever been written. In them we have the visit of Thetis, anxious for her son at the out-break of the Trojan War, to Chiron, under whose charge he is; she conveys the youthful Achilles to Scyros, disguises him as a girl and entrusts him to the care of King Lycomedes; then come the deception of Deidamia, the discovery of Achilles by Ulysses and Diomede, and his departure for Troy. There the fragment ends.

The poet’s style is simpler and less artificial than in the Thebaid, and the narrative flows more evenly. The most successful part of it is undoubtedly the discovery of Achilles, i. 675-920, while the story of his introduction to and courtship of Deidamia is also well told.

THE MSS. OF STATIUS

The “Silvae”

The only ms. that deserves separate notice is the fifteenth-century ms. at Madrid (hence known as Matritensis), from which it has been proved that all other existing mss. are derived (see Klotz, Introduction to the Silvae, Teubner edition). Besides this ms., designated M, there are a certain number of emendations entered by Politian in a copy of the first edition in the Corsinian library at Rome; some of these he expressly describes as taken from an old ms. he has recently discovered (1494), which ms. he says is that which Poggio, the Renaissance scholar, brought into Italy from Gaul. He also says that from this ms. all other mss. are derived, but although we can say the same of M we cannot identify it with Poggio's ms., for (i.) Politian states that the line Silv. i. 4. 86a, which is in M and subsequent mss., was not in Poggio's. (ii.) Some of the excerpts from the latter differ from M. (iii.) He would not have called a fifteenth-century ms. "vetustus." a This ms. of Poggio is usually identified with the one that Poggio says he sent to Florence in 1416 or 1417, from Constance or St. Gall, which was probably a copy of a much older one that he found there. It is quite possible, however, that it was the original that he sent to Florence, and not a copy, and Politian's description of Poggio's ms. as "vetustus" would help this identification. See the Classical Review, Nos. 15-17, 20, 26, 27, 32. b
INTRODUCTION

M : codex Matritensis M 31, dated about 1430.
M1 : first hand, i.e. transcriber of the ms.
M2 : second hand, i.e. first corrector of the ms.
m : later correctors.
L : codex Laurentianus (only of ii. 7), dated tenth century.

a It should be added that some of Politian's emendations in the Corsinian copy appear to be of the same date as those stated by him to be from Poggio's ms., and may therefore also come from there.

b Also J. S. Phillimore's Introduction to Silvae (Oxford Classical Texts). Prof. A. C. Clark would identify Poggio's ms. with M (Introduction to Asconius, Oxford Classical Texts, p. xxxi); holding that Politian must have been mistaken.
INTRODUCTION

Pol.: emendations of Politian (fifteenth century), if from Poggio's ms., "from P." is added.

Dom.: Emendations of Domitius Calderinus (fifteenth century).

ε: later mss.

The "Thebaid" and "Achilleid"

The mss. of the Thebaid, and in a lesser degree, of the Achilleid are extremely numerous, the former epic especially having been very popular in the Middle Ages. They fall into two well-defined groups, of which one has only one representative, the so-called Puteanus, at Paris, written at the end of the ninth century, and the other consists of a number of mss. of the tenth and eleventh centuries, the offspring of a ms. now lost, but dating from nearly a century before Puteanus. These, following the Teubner and Oxford editions, I have designated P and ω respectively. When any particular one of the latter class is quoted, ω, of course, signifies the other members of the group. Later mss. may be ignored.

There are remarkable differences between the two groups: the most striking will be found at iv. 555, x. 135, xi. 490, but on frequent occasions the difference is one that can hardly be accounted for on grounds of ordinary textual error. H. W. Garrod in his Introduction to the Thebaid and Achilleid a By A. Klotz (Teubner) and H. W. Garrod (Oxford Classical Texts).

---

xxx
INTRODUCTION

suggests that the double tradition may be due to a revised edition made by the poet himself.¹

On the whole the readings of P are to be preferred, and they deserve careful consideration even when they seem most difficult; but in many cases it is only judgement that can decide what Statius could or could not have written. Though the mss. that form the ω-group hang very much together, D and N have perhaps more individuality than the others, see Garrod, Introd. pp. ix, x.

The Achilleid is found in P and in a number of the ω-group; also in a ms. denoted E, in the College Library at Eton.

P: codex Puteanus (Parisinus 8051), end of ninth century.
Q: codex Parisinus 10317, tenth century.
K: codex Gudianus 54, tenth to eleventh century.

(These contain both Thebaid and Achilleid).

S: codex Parisinus 13046, tenth century.
D: ms. at St. John's Coll. Camb., tenth century.
N: ms. at Cheltenham, tenth to eleventh century.
B: codex Bambergensis, eleventh century.
C: codex Cassellanus, 164, eleventh century.
L: codex Lipsiensis, i. 12, eleventh century.

(These contain only the Thebaid).

E: codex Etonensis, tenth or eleventh century

(Achilleid only).

ω: consensus of mss. other than P.

¹ P. viii: he quotes references in the letters to Stella and Marcellus (Silv. i. and iv.), where two editions seem to be implied; also Theb. xii. 812-13 (novam). Klotz dissents, but without giving any satisfactory reason (p. lxx).
INTRODUCTION

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Books 1-5 of the Thebaid were translated into English verse by T. Stephens in 1648, the Achilleid by Sir R. Howard in 1660; Book I. of the Thebaid by Pope in 1703; extracts from Book VI. by Gray in 1736; and all the Thebaid by W. L. Lewis in 1766. A prose translation of the Silvae by Prof. D. A. Slater was published by the Oxford Press in 1908. The only modern edition of the Silvae is that of Vollmer, Leipzig, 1898. There is no modern edition of the Thebaid or Achilleid.

No Index has been made to the poems of Statius. The names that occur in them, and the adjectives formed from names, are so numerous that no good purpose would be served by including them all. The chief characters of the Thebaid and the books in which they occur will be found in the Summary of Events (Introduction, pp. xxii, xxiii), while in the case of the Silvae the individuals to whom the different poems are addressed or those whom they commemorate will be found in the list of Contents of Vol. I (pp. v, vi).

xxxii
Diu multumque dubitavi, Stella, invenis optime et in studiis nostris eminensissime, qua parte voluisti, an hos libellos, qui mihi subito calore et quadam festinandi voluptate fluxerunt, cum singuli de sinu meo prodierint,\(^1\) congregatos ipse dimitterem. Quid enim oportet me huius\(^2\) quoque auctoritate editionis onerari, qui adhuc pro Thebaide mea, quamvis me reliquerit, timo? Sed et Culicem legimus et Batrachomachiam etiam agnoscimus, nec quisquam est illius poetarum qui non aliquid operibus suis stilis remissiore praeluserit. Quid? Quod haec serum erat continere, cum illa vos certe, quorum honoris data sunt, haberetis? Sed apud ceteros necesse est multum illis pereat ex venia, cum amiserint quam solam habuerint gratiam cele-

\(^1\) Lacuna in mss. after pro: prodierint Pol., prodiissent \(\text{D}^\circ\).

\(^2\) Lacuna in mss. after enim: oportet me huius Dom.

---

a One of Virgil’s earliest works, probably to be identified with the extant poem of that name; see note on Silv. ii. 7. 74.

b Usually known as Batrachomyomachia, or Battle of the Frogs and Mice, popularly attributed to Homer, a burlesque of the warlike epic.
SILVAE

BOOK I

Statius to his Friend Stella: Greeting!

Long and seriously have I hesitated, my excellent Stella—distinguished as you are in your chosen branch of our common pursuit—about these pieces of mine, which were produced in the heat of the moment and by a kind of joyful glow of improvisation, whether I should collect them, after they have issued one by one from my bosom, and send them forth together. For why should I burden myself with the responsibility for this additional publication, when I am still apprehensive for my Thebaid, although it has left my hands? But we read the "Gnat," and deign to recognize even the "Battle of the Frogs"; nor is there any of the great poets who has not made prelude to his works in lighter vein. Again, was it not too late to keep these poems back, when others were already in the possession of those in whose honour they were written (yourself among them)? Yet with most people much of their claim to a lenient judgement must disappear, since they have lost their impromptu nature, the only charm that they possessed. For ritatis. Nullum enim ex illis biduo longius tractum, quaedam et in singulis diebus effusa; quam timeo, ne verum istuc versus quoque ipsi de se probent!

Primus libellus sacrosanctum habet testem: sumendum enim erat "a Iove principium." Centum hos versus, quos in equum maximum feei, indulgentissimo imperatori postero die, quam dedicaverat opus, tradere iussus sum. "Potuisti illud" dicit aliquis "et ante vidisse." Respondebis illi tu, Stella carissime, qui epithalamion tuum, quod mihi in unxeras, seis biduo scriptum. Audacter mehercles, sed ter centum tamen hexametros habet, et fortasse tu pro collega mentieris. Manilius certe Vopiscus, vir erudissimus et qui praecipue vindicat a situ litteras iam paene fugientes, solet ullo quoque nomine meo gloriari, villam Tiburtinam suam descripsit a nobis uno die. Sequitur libellus Rutilio Gallico convalescenti dedicatus, de quo nihil dico, ne videar defuncti testis occasione mentiri. Nam Claudi Etrusci testimonium documentum est, qui balneolum a me suum intra moram cenae receptit. In fine sunt Kalendae Decembres, quibus utique creditur: noctem enim illam felicissimam et voluptatibus publicis inexpertam . . . .

1 ter centum tamen Elter: tantum tamen M.
2 convalescenti Scriberius and Heinsius: est valent M (above valent, fce, erased by M2), est valenti Pol.
3 documentum Klotz: domumum M, commodum or idoneum Phillimore.
4 Seven or eight lines of the page left empty in mss.
none of them took longer than two days to write, while some were turned out in a single day. How I fear lest the poems themselves make that only too plain!

The first piece can appeal to a witness of inviolable sanctity: for "from Jove must I needs begin." These hundred lines on the Great Horse I was bidden deliver to our most indulgent Prince the day after he had dedicated it. "Possibly," some one will say, "you had seen the statue already." You will answer him, my dearest Stella, you who know that the Epithalamium you demanded of me was written in two days. A bold piece of work, by Heracles! but all the same it contains three hundred hexameters—and perhaps you will tell a fib for a colleague. Certainly Manilius Vopiscus, a man of great erudition, who is foremost in rescuing from decay our almost vanishing literature, often boasts on my account, and quite spontaneously, that my sketch of his country-house at Tibur was done in one day. Then comes a poem dedicated to Rutilius Gallicus on his recovery from sickness, upon which I say nothing, lest I seem to be taking advantage of the death of my witness to exaggerate. For I can prove my case by the evidence of Claudius Etruscus, who received his "Bath" from me within the interval of a dinner. Last comes "The Kalends of December," which at all events will find credence: for a night so happily spent and so unprecedented for public amusements . . .

---

A solemn formula with which hymns to the gods often began, cf. ἐκ Διός ἀρχώμεσθα (Theocr. Id. 17. 1), "a love principium" (Virg. Ecl. 3. 60).
STATIUS

1. EQUUS MAXIMUS DOMITIANI IMP.

Quae superimposito moles geminata colosso stat Latium complexa forum? caelone peractum fluxit opus? Siculis an conformata caminis effigies lassum Steropem Brontemque reliquit?
an te Palladiae talem, Germanice, nobis effinxere manus, qualem modo frena tenentem Rhenus et attoniti vidit domus ardua Daci?

Nunc age Fama prior notum per saecula nomen Dardanii miretur equi, cui vertice sacro Dindymon et caesis decrevit frondibus Ide:
hunc neque discissis cepissent Pergama muris nee grege permixto pueri innuptaeque puellae ipse nee Aeneas nee magnus duceret Hector!
adde, quod ille nocens saevosque amplexus Achivos, hunc mitis commendat eques: iuvat ora tueri mixta notis belli placidamque gerentia pacem.
nee veris maiora putes: par forma decorque,
par honor. exhaustis Martem non altius armis Bistonius portat sonipes magnoque superbit pondere nec tardo\(^1\) raptus prope fluminam cursu fumat et ingenti propellit Strymona flatu.

\(^1\) tardo \(M\): tanto or -us Pol., tantum Phill.

---

a Two of the Cyclopes who laboured at the forges of Vulcan.

b \(i.e.,\) of Pallas Athene, goddess of handicrafts.

c The reference is to Domitian’s campaigns against the Catti, a German tribe from the Taunus, who were threatening Mainz (A.D. 83–84); for this victory he received the title of “Germanicus”; also to the defeat of the Dacians in A.D. 89. “Arduous,” because their stronghold was in the mountains of Transylvania; hence “montem,” l. 80.

d \(i.e.,\) Thracian.
I. THE GREAT EQUESTRIAN STATUE OF THE EMPEROR DOMITIAN

This statue was dedicated to Domitian perhaps about A.D. 91 (i. 36); its appearance and position are described; it is hailed by Curtius; the poet declares it to be as immortal as Rome.

What mighty mass redoubled by the huge form surmounting it stands gathering to itself the Latian forum? Did it glide down, a completed work, from heaven? Was the effigy moulded in Sicilian furnaces, leaving Brontes and Steropes a weary? or have Palladian hands b sculptured thee for us, Ō Germanicus, in such guise as Rhine of late beheld thee reining thy steed, and the astounded Dacian's arduous home c?

Come, now, let Fame of old time marvel at the age-long wonder of the Dardan horse, for whom Dindymon abased his sacred head and Ida was shorn of her leafy groves. This horse would Pergamum ne'er have held, though wide its walls were rent, nor could the mingled throng of lads and unwedded girls have drawn it, nor Aeneas himself nor mighty Hector! That one, besides, was harmful, and contained fierce Achaean; this one is commended by his gentle rider. 'Tis a pleasure to behold that countenance whereon the marks of war are blended with the guise of tranquil peace. And think not that truth is here surpassed; equal beauty and splendour has he, and equal dignity. Not more loftily does the Bistonian d steed bear Mars when the fighting is done, exulting in the mighty weight, and swiftly flies by the river till he is all asteam and with his strong blowing stirs up the waves of Strymon.
Par operi sedes. hinc obvia limina pandit, qui fessus bellis adscitae\(^1\) munere prolis primus iter nostris ostendit in aethera divis; discit et e vultu, quantum tu mitior armis, qui nee in externos facilis saevire furores das Cattis Dacisque fidem. te signa ferente et minor in leges gener et Cato Caesaris irret.\(^2\) at laterum passus hinc Iulia teeta tuentur, illinc belligeri sublimis regia Pauli, terga Pater, blandoque videt Concordia vultu.

Ipse autem puro celsum caput aere saeptus templaque superfulges ut prospectare videris, an nova contemptis surgant Palatia flammis pulchrioris, an tacita vigilet face Troiens ignis atque exploratas iam laudet Vesta ministras. dextra vetat pugnas,\(^3\) laevam Tritonia virgo non gravat et sectae praetendens colla Medusae: ceu stimuli accedidit equum; nec dulcior usquam lecta deae sedes nee si, Pater, ipse teneres. pectora, quae mundi valeant evolvere curas,

\(^1\) adscitae M; adsertae \(\approx\).
\(^2\) gener et Cato Caesaris irret Scriberius and Housman (see Manilius, p. lxxvii): irret gener et Cato castris M.
\(^3\) pugnas Pol.: pugnes M.

\(a\) The statue is opposite the temple of Divus Julius (the first of the Roman Emperors to be deified), dedicated by Augustus in 27 B.C., on either side of it are the Basilicas of Julius Caesar and Aemilius Lepidus respectively, i.e. on the right and left of one looking down the Forum away from the Capitol; behind it is the temple of Jupiter on the Capitol, and that of Concord.

\(b\) Julius Caesar adopted Octavian, his great-nephew, as his son.
Well suited to the work are its surroundings. Here facing it he opens wide his portals, who weary with warfare, by the gift of his adopted son, first showed our deities the way to heaven; and from thy face he learns thy greater gentleness in arms, who not even against the foreigner’s rage art easily stern, but with Cattians and with Daeians makest bond. Under thy leadership both his son-in-law, now the lesser man, and Cato had bowed to Caesar’s sway. Lengthwise thy flanks are guarded, on this hand by the Julian edifice, on that by the high basilica of warlike Paullus; thy back the Sire beholds, and Concord with tranquil brow.

Thou thyself with lofty head enshrined in the pure air dost tower resplendent over the temples, and seemest to look forth to see whether the new Palace, despising the flames, be rising in greater beauty, or whether the brand of Trojan fire keep silent watch, and Vesta now be praising the proved worth of her ministrants. Thy right hand bids battles cease; thy left the Tritonian maiden over-burdens not, and holding out Medusa’s severed head incites thy steed as with a goad; never had the goddess choicer resting-place, not even if thou, O Father, didst hold her. Thy breast is such as might avail to solve the riddles of the universe, and thereon

c The point is that the son-in-law was Pompey “the Great” (Magnus).

d Domitian had recently punished one of the Vestals for unchastity (Suet. Dom. 8). Domitian, looking slightly to his right, would see the temple of Vesta, and the Palatine rising above it; his new buildings there are referred to by Suetonius (Dom. 5). The sacred fire brought from Troy was kept concealed in the temple of Vesta, cf. v. 3. 178 “facis opertae.”

e i.e., Pallas.
et quis\(^1\) se toitis Temese dedit hausta metallis; it tergo demissa chlamys: latus ense quieto securum, magnus quanto mueronc minatur noctibus hibernis et sidera terret Orion.

at sonipes habitus animosque imitatus equestres aerius attollit vultus cursumque minatur; cui rigidis stant colla iubis vivusque per armos impetus et tantis calearibus ilia late suffectura patent; vacuae pro caespite terrae aerea captivi crinem tegit ungula Rheni.

hune et Adrasteus visum extimuisset Arion et pavet aspiciens Ledaeus ab aede propinqua Cyllarus. hie domini numquam mutabit habenas perpetuus frenis atque uni serviet astro!

vix sola sufficiunt insessaque pondere tanto\(^2\) subter anhelat humus; nec ferro aut aere: laborant sub genio, teneat quamvis aeterna crepido, quae superingesti portaret culmina montis caeliferique attrita genu durasset Atlantis.

Nec longae traxere morae. iuvat ipsa labores forma dei praesens operique intenta iuventus miratur plus posse manus. strepit ardua pulsu machina: continuus se septem per culmina Martis\(^3\) it fragor et magnae vincit\(^4\) vaga murmura Romae.

---
\(^1\) et quis\(^5\): et qui \(M\); et cui\(^6\): it, cui \(Phill.\)
\(^2\) tanto\(^7\): toto \(M\)
\(^3\) Martis Gronovius: montis \(M (from 59)\).
\(^4\) vincit Heinsius: fingit \(M\), frangit conj. \(Phill.\)

\(^a\) A town in Bruttii, on the west coast, famous for copper-mines; \textit{cf. Odyssey, i. 184}.
Temese has exhausted the wealth of all her mines; a cloak hangs from thy shoulders; the sword sleeps by thy untroubled side: even so vast a blade does threatening Orion wield on winter nights and terrify the stars. But the steed, counterfeiting the proud mien and high mettle of a horse, tosses his head in greater spirit and makes as though to move; the mane stands stiff upon his neck, his shoulders thrill with life, and his flanks spread wide enough for those mighty spurs; in place of a clod of empty earth his brazen hoof tramples the hair of captive Rhine. Seeing him, Adrastus' horse Arion would have been sore afraid, yea Castor's Cyllarus fears as he looks forth upon him from his neighbouring temple. Never will this steed suffer another master's rein; this curb is his for ever, one star, and one star only will he serve. Scarce doth the soil hold, and the ground pants beneath the pressure of so vast a weight; and not of iron or bronze: 'tis under thy deity it trembles, ay, even should an everlasting rock support thee, such as would bear the peaks of a mountain piled upon it, or have endured to be pressed by the knee of heaven-sustaining Atlas.

No lengthy tarrying drew out the time. The present beauty of the god itself makes labour sweet, and the workmen intent upon their task marvel at their greater vigour. Towering cranes creak and rattle; continuous runs the roar over the seven heights of Mars, and drowns the wandering noises of mighty Rome.

b The horse of Adrastus, king of Argos, leader of the Seven against Thebes; see Theb. vi. 301. Neptune was supposed to have been his father.
Ipse loci custos, cuius sacra Vorago famosique lacus nomen memorabile servant.
innumerous aeris sonitus et verbere crudo ut sensit mugire forum, movet horrida saneto ora situ meritaque caput venerabile quercu.
ac primum ingentes habitus lucemque coruscam expavit maioris equi terque ardua mersit colla lacu trepidans, lactus mox praeside viso: “salve, magnorum proles genitorque deorum, auditum longe numen mihi! nunc mea felix, nunc veneranda palus, cum te prope nosse tuumque immortale inbar vicina sede tueri concessum. semel auctor ego inventorque salutis Romuleae: tu bella Iovis, tu proelia Rheni, tu civile nefas, tu tardum in foedera montem longo Marte domas. quod si te nostra tulissent saecula, temptasses me non audente profundo ire laeu, sed Roma tuas tenuisset habenas.”

Cedat equus, Latiae qui contra templaque Diones Caesarei stat sede fori—quem traderis ausus Pellaeo, Lysippe, ducei, mox Caesaris ora mirata cervice tulit—vix lumine fesso explores, quam longus in hune despectus ab illo.

\[a\text{ }i.e.,\text{ Curtius who saved Rome by leaping into a chasm in the Forum; for his "devotion" see Livy, i. 12, vii. 6. The place was known as the "lacus Curtius." As one who had saved the lives of citizens he wears the crown of oak-leaves, the "corona civica."}

\[b\text{ }i.e.,\text{ of the Dacians, as frequently.}

\[c\text{ }i.e.,\text{ in the fighting on the Capitol which took place after Vespasian's accession.}

\[d\text{ }An equestrian statue of Julius Caesar in the Forum}
The guardian of the spot himself, whose memorable name the hallowed chasm and famous pools preserve, hearing the ceaseless clash of bronze and the Forum echoing with vigorous blows, raises his grisly visage, venerable even in decay, and his head revered for the well-deserved oak-wreath. And first, affrighted at the huge form and flashing glance of a mightier steed, he thrice in dismay bowed his lofty neck beneath the lake; then, joyful at the sight of his prince: "Hail, offspring and sire of mighty deities," he cries, "whose godhead I heard of from afar! Now is my lake blessed, now is it holy, since it has been granted me to know thee nigh at hand, and from my neighbouring seat to watch thy immortal brightness. Once only was I the author and winner of salvation for the folk of Romulus: thou dost win the wars of Jove and the battles of the Rhine, thou dost quell the strife of citizens, and in long warfare constrain the tardy mountain to submit. But if our age had borne thee, thou wouldest have ventured to plunge into the lake's depths, though I dared not; but Rome would have held back thy rein."

Let that steed give place, whose statue stands in Caesar's Forum, over against Dione's shrine—thy daring work, 'tis said, Lysippus, for the Pellaean chief; thereafter on marvelling back he bore the effigy of Caesar—scarce could your straining sight discover how far the downward view from this monarch to that. Who is so boorish as to deny, Julium opposite the temple of Venus Genetrix, called "Latia" here as being the mother of Aeneas, and so of the Roman race. Both forum and temple were built by Caesar out of his Gallic spoils. Probably Caesar's head was substituted for Alexander's; the practice was common at Rome, cf. Suet. Caligula, 22.
STATIUS

quis rudis usque adeo, qui non, ut viderit ambos, tantum dicat equos quantum distare regentes?

Non hoc imbriferas hicem opus aut Iovis ignem tergeminum, Aeolii non agmina careeris horrect annorumve moras: stabit, dum terra polusque, dum Romana dies. hue et sub noete silenti, cum superis terrena placent, tua turba relicito labetur caelo misebitque oscula iuxta.

ibit in amplexus natus fraterque paterque et soror: una locum cervix dabit omnibus astris.

Utere perpetuum populi magnique senatus munere. Apelleae cuperent te scribere cerac optassetque novo similem te ponere templo Atticus Elei senior Iovis, et tua mitis ora Tarans, tua sidereal imitania flammata lumina contempto mallet Rhodos aspera Phoebus. certus ames terras et quae tibi templum dicanus, ipse colas; nec te caeli iuvet aula, tusque laetus huic dono videas dare tura nepotes.

II. EPITHALAMION IN STELLAM ET VIOLENTILLAM

Unde sacro Latii sonuerunt carmine montes?

Caesar's statue was probably on a lower pedestal; Caesar is as far inferior to Domitian as a ruler as the one statue is beneath the other!

Often for deified members of the Imperial house, cf. Theb. i. 31.

The famous Colossus was a statue of the sun-god. There was a colossal statue of Zeus at Tarentum.
when he has seen both, that ruler differs from ruler as steed from steed a?

This statue fears no rainy squalls of winter or triple fire of Jove, nor the cohorts of Aeolus' prison-house nor the long lingering years: it will stand while earth and sky abide, while Rome's sun endures. Hither also in the silent night, when things of earth find favour with the gods above, will thy kinsfolk, leaving heaven, glide down and join with thee in close embracce. Son and brother, sire and sister will seek thy welcoming arms: about thy sole neck will cluster all heaven's stars. b

Enjoy for ever the people's and the mighty Senate's gift. Fain would the wax of Apelles have portrayed thee, and the old Athenian c would have longed to set thy likeness in a new temple of Elean Jove; yea, soft Tarentum would rather have thy visage, and fierce Rhodes, scorning her Phoebus, d thy flame-like glance. Keep thy affections fixed on earth, and inhabit thyself the shrines we dedicate to thee: let not heaven's high court delight thee, but mayst thou joyously see thy grandsons offer incense to this our gift.

II. AN EPITHALAMIUM IN HONOUR OF STELLA AND VIOLENTILLA

A marriage-song in honour of Lucius Arruntius Stella and his bride Violentilla. Stella was a young noble, a poet and a friend of Statius; he was one of the XVviri (see n. on l. 176), and had held some curule office. The poem contains a long episode relating how Venus and one of her Cupids brought about the match; the usual features of an Epithalamium (praise of the pair, description of the bride, and of the marriage-festival) are freely treated.

Whenee comes this sound of divine melody upon cui, Paean. nova plectra movesumboque eomantifaeundum suspendis ebur: procul ecce canoro demigrant Heliconedeeae quattuorque novena lampadesolemnem thalamis coeuntibus ignem et de Pieriiis vocalem fontibus undam.
quas inter vultu petulans Elegea propinquat celsior adsueto divasque hortatur et ambit altermum fultura¹ pedem decimamque videri se cupit et medias fallit permixta sorores.
ipsa manu nuptam genetrix Aeneia duxit luminademissam et dulci probitate rubentem, ipsa toros et saera parat cinctuque² Latino dissimulata deam crinem vultusque genasque temperatatque nova gestit minor ire marita.

Nosco diem causasque sacri: te concinit iste—pande fores!—te, Stella. chorus; tibi Phoebus et Euhan
et de Maenalia volucer Tegeaticus umbra serta ferunt. nce blandus Amor nec Gratia cessat amplexum niveos optatae coniugis artus floribus innumeris et olenti spargere nimbo.
tu modo fronte rosas, violis modo lilia mixta excipis et dominae niveis a vultibus obstas.

Ergo dies aderat Parcarum conditus albo vellere, quo Stellae Violentillaeque professus clamaretur hymen. cedant curaeque metusque, ecessent mendaces obliqui carminis astus,

¹ fultura $f$: futura $M$, factura $m$, furata Sandstroem.
² cinctuque Barthius: coetuque $M$, cestuque Phill.

The elegiac couplet has the pentameter as its second line, composed of five instead of six feet: cf. Ovid, Am.
iii. 1. 8 "et, puto, pes illi (Elegeia) longior alter erat." The second line, therefore, limps. We may suppose that Stella had written love-poetry in this metre.
the Latian hills? For whom, O Paean, dost thou ply thy quill anew and hang the eloquent ivory from thy tress-strewn shoulders? Lo! far away the goddesses troop down from musical Helicon, and toss on high with ninefold torch the flame that hallows wedded union and streams of song from Pierian fountains. Among them pert-faced Elegy draws nigh, loftier of mien than is her wont, and implores the goddesses as she goes about, fain to support her one lame foot, and desires to make a tenth Muse and mingles with the Sisters unperceived. The mother of Aeneas with her own hand leads forth the bride, downcast of look and the sweet blush of chastity upon her; herself she prepares the couch and the sacred rites, and with a Latin girdle dissembles her deity and tempers the brilliance of eyes and cheeks and tresses, eager to yield before the new bride.

Ah, now do I learn what day is this, what hath caused this solemn rite: 'tis thou, Stella, thou whom that choir—fling wide the gates!—is hymning; for thee Phoebus and Euhan and the swift Tegean from the shades of Maenalus bring garlands. Nor do winsome Love and Grace grow weary in scattering countless blossoms and cloudy perfumes o'er thee as thou holdest close-locked the snow-white limbs of thy longed-for bride. And now roses, now lilies mixed with violets dost thou receive upon thy brow, as thou shieldest the fair face of thy mistress.

This then was the day, laid up in the white wool of the Fates, whereon the marriage-song of Stella and Violentilla should be proclaimed and sung. Let cares and fears give place, and the clever hints

\[ a \] i.e., Venus.
\[ b \] i.e., Venus.
\[ c \] i.e., Bacchus and Mercury.
Fama tace: subiit leges et frena momordit ille solutus amor: consumpta est fabula vulgi et narrata diu viderunt oscula cives.

tu tamen attonitus, quamvis data copia tantae noctis, adhuc optas permissaque numine dextro vota paves. pone, o dulcis, suspiria, vates, pone: tua est. licet expositum per limen aperto ire, redire gradu: iam nusquam Ianitor aut lex aut pudor. amplexu tandem satiare petito—contigit!—et duras pariter reminiscere noctes.

Digna quidem merces, et si tibi Iuno labores Hercoleos, Stygiis et si concurrere monstris Fata darent, si Cyaneos raperere per aestus.
hanc propter tanti Pisaea lege trementem currere et Oenomai fremitus audire sequentis, nec si Dardania pastor temerarius Ida sedisses, haec dona forent, nec si alma per auras te potius presum avheret Tithonia biga.

Sed quae causa toros inopinaque gaudia vati attulit? hie mecum, dum fervent agmine postes atriaque et muta pulsantur limina virga, hic, Erato iocunda, doce. vacat apta movere colloquia et docti norunt audire penates.

Forte, serenati qua stat plaga lactea caeli, alma Venus thalamo pulsa modo nocte iacebat amplexu duro Getici resoluta mariti.

1 presum Parrhasius, avheret Baehrens: prensa veheret M.

---

a The dangerous clashing rocks at the Bosporus.
b Suitors for the hand of Hippodamia, daughter of Oenomaus, were challenged by him to a chariot-race, on condition of forfeiting their lives if they were beaten.
c Aurora was the wife of Tithonus.
d i.e., Thracian.
of lying fables cease, and, Rumour, be thou silent; that love that ranged so free now brooks control and takes the bridle; we have done with gossip and our citizens have seen the kisses so long talked of. Yet thou in bewilderment—although a night so marvelous has been granted thee—still dost pray, and art affrighted that kindly heaven has given thee thy wish. Sigh no more, sweet poet, she is thine. The door lies open, and thou canst come and go with fearless step: no doorkeeper, no rule of honour stays thee now. At last take thy fill of the desired embrace—it is thine to take!—and remember the while those nights of misery.

Worthy indeed were thy reward, even though Juno set thee Herculean toils, and the Fates gave thee monsters to contend withal, though thou wert swept through the Cyanean surge. To gain her it were worth while to run the race in terror of Pisa’s law and hear the shouts of Oenomaus in hot pursuit. Nor had such a prize been thine, hadst thou, a bold shepherd lad, held thy court on Dardan Ida, nor though the warm-hearted Dawn had preferred thee, and snatched thee up and borne thee in her chariot through the air.

But what was the cause that brought to the poet the unhoped-for joys of wedlock? Do thou teach me, lovely Erato, here by my side, while the halls and portals are astir with folk, and many a staff beats upon the threshold. Time permits apt converse, and the poet’s home knows well how to listen.

Once on a time, where the milky region is set in a tranquil heaven, lay kindly Venus in her bower, whenee night had but lately fled, faint in the rough embrace of her Getic lord. About the posts and fulcra torosque deae tenerum premit agmen Amorum; signa petunt qua ferre faces, quae pectora figi imperet; an terris saevire an malit in undis, an miscere deos an adhuc vexare Tonantem. ipsi animus nondum nec cordi fixa voluntas. fessa iacet stratis, ubi quondam conscia culpae Lemnia deprenso repserunt vincula lecto. hic puer e turba volucrum, cui plurimus ignis ore manuque levi numquam frustrata sagitta, agmine de medio tenera sic dulce profatur voce—pharetrati pressere silentia fratres.

"Scis ut, mater," ait "nulla mihi dextera segnis militia; quemcumque hominum divumque dedisti, uritur. at quondam lacrimis et supplice dextra et votis precibusque virum concede moveri, o genetrix: duro nec enim ex adamante creati, sed tua turba sumus. clarus de gente Latina est iuvenis, quem patriciis maioribus ortum nobilitas gavisa tulit praesageaque formae protinus e nostro posuit cognomina caelo. hunc egomet tota quondam—tibi dulce—pharetra improbus et densa trepidantem cuspide fixi. quamvis Ausoniis multum gener ille petitus matribus, edomui victum dominaeque potentis ferre iugum et longos iussi sperare per annos. ast illam summa leviter—sic naneque iubebas—lampade parcentes et inerti strinximus arcu. ex illo quantos iuvenis premat anxius ignes, testis ego attonitus, quantum me nocte dieque

\[a\ i.e.,\ made\ by\ Hephaestus,\ whose\ forges\ were\ in\ the\ island\ of\ Lemnos.\ \text{For\ the\ story\ see\ Odyssey,\ viii.\ 266.}\]
pillows of her couch swarm a troop of tender Loves, begging her make sign where she bids them bear her torches, what hearts they shall transfix: whether to wreak their cruelty on land or sea, to set gods at variance or yet once more to vex the Thunderer. Herself she has yet no purpose, no certain will or pleasure. Weary she lies upon her cushions, where once the Lemnian chains a crept over the bed and held it fast, learning its guilty secret. Then a boy of that winged crowd, whose mouth was fieriest and whose deft hand ne'er sent his arrow amiss, from the midst of the troop thus called to her in his sweet boyish voice—his quivered brethren held their peace.

"Mother," says he, "thou knowest how no warfare finds my right hand idle; whomsoe'er of gods or men thou dost assign me, he feels the smart. Yet once, O Mother, suffer us to be moved by the tears and suppliant hands, by the vows and prayers of men; for not of steely adamant are we born, but are all thy offspring. There is a youth of famous Latin family, whom nobility rejoicing brought forth of old patrician stock, and in prescience of his beauty named straightway from our sky. Him ere now have I plied relentlessly—such was thy pleasure—with all my quiver's armoury, and pierced him to his dismay with a thick hail of darts; and for all he is much sought by Ausonian matrons as a son-in-law, I have quelled and mastered him, and bidden him bear a noble lady's yoke and spend long years in hoping. But her we spared—such was thy command—and did but lightly graze with the flame's tip and loose-strung bow. Since then I can bear marvelling witness what fires the heart-sick youth is smothering, what strong urgency of mine he suffers night and day.
urgentem ferat. haud ulli vehementior umquam incubui, genetrix, iterataque vulnera fodi.

Hippomenen, nec sic meta pallebat in ipsa;

vidi et immitti cupidum decurrere campo bracchia laudavique manus et saepe natanti praeluxi: minor ille calor. quo saeva tepebant aequora: tu veteres, iuvenis, transgressus amores.

ipse ego te tantos stupui durasse per aestus firmavique animos blandisque madentia plumis lumina detersi. quotiens mihi questus Apollo, sic vatem maerere suum! iam, mater, amatos indulge thalamos. noster comes ille piusque signifer; armiferos poterat memorare labores claraque facta virum et torrentes sanguine campos, sed tibi plectra dedit mitisque incedere vates maluit et nostra laurum subtexere myrto.

hic iuvenum lapsus suaque aut externa revolvit vulnerea; pro! quanta est Paphii reverentia, mater, numinis: hic nostrae deflevit fata columbae."

Finierat\(^1\); tenera matris cervice pependit blandus et admotis tepefecit pectora pennis.

illa refert vultu non aspernata rogari:

"grande quidem rarumque \(\text{\textit{\textit{i}r\textit{\textit{u}\textit{m}}}^{\text{\textit{\textit{\textit{u}}}}}\text{\textit{\textit{a}}}}\) quos ipsa probavi, Pierius votum iuvenis cupid. hanc ego formae egregium mirata decus, cui gloria patrum et generis certabat honos, tellure cadentem excepti foviue sinu nec colla genasque

\(^1\) finierat \(S\) : emis erat \(M\), finis erat \(Pol\).
None ever, mother, have I so fiercely pressed, thrusting home oft-repeated wounds. And yet I saw eager Hippomenes\(^a\) run the cruel course, but even at the very goal he was not so pale; and I saw, too, the youth of Abydos,\(^b\) whose arms did vie with oars, and praised his skill and often shone before him as he swam: yet less was that heat wherewith the savage sea grew warm; thou, O youth, hast surpassed those loves of old. I myself, amazed that thou couldst endure such gusts of passion, have strengthened thy resolve and wiped thy streaming eyes with soothing plumes. How oft has Apollo complained to me of his poet's grief! Grant him at last, O Mother, the bride of his desire. Our comrade is he, and loyally bears our standard; he could tell of armed prowess and heroes' famous deeds and fields flowing with blood, but his quill is dedicate to thee and he prefers to walk in gentle poethood and twine our myrtle with bay. The follies of lovers are his theme, and his own or others' wounds; O Mother, what reverence hath he for thy Paphian godhead! 'twas he that bewailed the death of our poor dove.”\(^c\)

He made an end, and from his mother's soft neck hung persuasive, making her bosom warm with his covering wings. With a look that scorned not his petition she replied: “A large request and rarely granted e'en to lovers that I myself have proved, this of Pieria's young votary! Marvelling at this maiden's peerless beauty, that rivalled the glory of her sires and her family's renown, I took her to me at her birth and cherished her in my bosom: nor, child, has my hand grown weary of giving comeliness Lesbia's sparrow (Catullus 2, 3), suggests that the dove was Violentilla's.
STATIUS

comere nee pingui erinem deducere amomo cessavit mea, nate, manus. mihi duleis imago prosiluit. eelsae proeul aspice frontis honores suggestumque comae. Latias metire quid ultra emineat matres : quantum Latonia nymphaes virgo premit quantumque egomet Nereidas exsto.
haee et caeruleis mecum consurgere digna fluctibus et nostra potuit considere conea ;
et si flammarigerae potuisset scandere sedes hasque intrare domos, ipsi erraretis, Amores.

huic quamvis eensus dederim largita beatos, vineit opes animo. querimur iam Seras avaros angustum spoliare nemus Clymenaeaque deesse germina nee virides satis inlaerimare sorones, vellera Sidonio iam pauea rubescere tabo raraque longaevis nivibus crystalla gelari.

huic Hermum fulvoque Tagum decurrere limo,
—nee satis ad cultus—huic Inda monilia GlauBUM Proteaque atque omnem Nereida quaerere iussi.
hane si Thessalicos vidisses, Phoebe, per agros erraret secura Daphne. si in litore Naxi Theseum iuxta foret haee conspecta cubile, Gnosida desertam profugus liquisset et Euhan.
quod nisi me longis placasset Iuno querelis, falsus huic pennas et cornua sumeret aethrae rector, in hane vero2 ceeidisset Juppiter auro.

1 Daphne. si in Buchrens : dafnes in M, Daphne. sin Phill.
2 vero M : verso Herzog, alio, fulvo, pluvio Markland, iterum Burmann.

a "Seres" : here the reference is to cotton, as "nemus" shows, cf. Pliny's mention of "lanigerae arbores Serum," N.II. xii. 10. "Clymenaeaque germiina": amber, because the Heliades who wept tears of amber for Phaethon their brother were daughters of Hellios (the Sun) and Clymene. "virides 24
to face and form and smoothing with rich balm her tresses. She has grown up my own sweet image. Behold even from here the lofty beauty of her brow and high-piled hair. Reckon how far she doth tower above the matrons of Rome: even so far as the Latonian maid out-tops the nymphs, or I myself stand out above the Nereids. This girl is worthy to rise with me from out the dark-blue waves; she could sit with me upon my chariot-shell. Nay, could she have climbed to the flaming mansions and entered this abode, even you, ye Loves, would be deceived. Although in my bounty I have given her the boon of wealth, her mind is a yet richer dower. Already I complain that the avaricious Seres are stripping their diminished groves, that Clymene's fruit is failing, that the green Sisters weep not tears enough; that already too few fleeces are blushing with Sidonian dye, and too rarely freeze the crystals of the immemorial snows.\textsuperscript{a} For her Tagus and Hermus at my bidding run down their yellow sand—nor yet do they suffice for her arraying; for her Glaucus and Proteus and every Nereid go in search of Indian necklaces. If thou, Phoebus, hadst seen her on the fields of Thessaly, Daphne had wandered unafraid. If on Naxos' shore she had been spied by Theseus' couch, Euhan, too, would have fled from the Cretan maid and left her desolate. Nay, had not Juno appeased me by her endless plaint, heaven's lord would for this maid have taken the disguise of horns or feathers, on her lap had Jove descended in true gold. But the youth whom thou sorores\textsuperscript{b}: because they were turned into poplars. "crystallis": crystals were thought to be formed from ice, \textit{cf.} Propertius, iv. 3. 52 "crystallus aquosa." sed dabitur iuveni, cui tu, mea summa potestas, nate. cupis. thalami quamvis iuga ferre secundi saepe neget maerens. ipsam iam eedere sensi inque vicem tepuisse viro."

Sie fata levavit

sidereos artus thalamique egressa superbum limen Amyclaeos ad frena citavit olores.

iungit Amor laetamque vehens per nubila matrem gemmato temone sedet. iam Thybridis aerees Ilaeae : pandit nitidos domus alta penates claraque gaudentes plauerunt limina cygni.
digna deae sedes, nitidis nee sordet ab astris.
hie Libyeus Phrygiusque silex. hie dura Laconum saxa virent. hie flexus onyx et concolor alto vena mari rupesque nitent. quis purpura saepe Oebalis et Tyrii moderator livet aeni.
pendent innumeris fastigia nixa columnis, robora Dalmatico lucent satiata metallo.
excludunt radios silvis demissa vetustis frigora. perspicui vivunt in marmore fontes.
nee servat natura viees : hic Sirius alget, bruma tepet versumque domus sibi temperat annum.

Exsultat visu tectisque potentis alumnae non secus alma Venus, quam si Paphon aequore ab alto.

a Other descriptions of marble will be found in Silvae, i. 5. 31, ii. 2. 85, iv. 2. 26. In each passage Libyan and Phrygian are mentioned, probably a kind of giallo antico and pavonazzetto respectively. Marble of Carystos also, if "concolor alto vena mari" and "glaucae certantia Doridi saxa" are to be so explained. This is perhaps cipollino verde ondato. The green Laconian (here, i. 5. 40 and ii. 2. 90) is verde antico. "Flexus onyx" is either "onyx alabastrites" or perhaps a kind of agate. ll. 150-1 refer to porphyry; other marbles mentioned by 26 favourest, my son, my chiefest power, shall have his will, though many a time she refuse with tears to bear the yoke of a second wedlock. She herself, I have noticed, is already yielding, and in her turn grows warm toward her lover.” With these words she raised her starry limbs, and passing the proud threshold of her chamber called to the rein her Amyclaean doves. Love harnesses them, and seated on the jewelled car bears his mother rejoicing through the clouds. Soon appears the Ilian citadel of Tiber: a lofty mansion spreads wide its shining halls, and the swans exulting beat their wings on its bright portals. Worthy of the goddess was that abode, nor mean after the radiant stars. Here is marble of Libya and Phrygia, and the hard green Laconian rock; here the winding pattern of the onyx, and the vein that matches the deep sea’s hue, and the brilliant stone that is envied by Oebalian purple and the mixer of the Tyrian cauldron. The ceilings rest poised on columns innumerable; the beams glitter in lavish decking of Dalmatian ore.

Coolness down-streaming from ancestral trees shuts out the rays of the sun, translucent fountains play in basins of marble; nor does Nature keep her wonted order: here Sirius is cool, midwinter warm, and the house sways the altered seasons to its pleasure.

Kindly Venus rejoiced to see the house of her queenly fostering, no less than if from the deep sea she were drawing nigh to Paphos or her Idalian Statius are those of Thasos, Chios, and Syene, and the stone called ophites (=serpentine).

\[ i.e., \text{ Spartan, Laconian, cf. "purpuras Laconicas," Hor. C. ii. 18. 7.}\]

\[ i.e., \text{ gold, mined there since Augustus; cf. iii. 3. 90.}\] Idaliasque domos Erycinaque templaque subiret. 160 tune ipsam solo reclinam adfata cubili:

"Quonam hic usque sopor vacuique modestia lecti,
o mihi Laurentes inter dilecta puellas?
quis morum fideique modus? numquamne virili summittere iugo? veniet iam tristior aetas.

exerce formam et fugientibus utere donis.
non ideo tibi tale decus vultusque superbos meque dedi, viduos ut transmittare per annos ceu non cara mihi. satis o nimiumque priores despexisse procos. etenim hic tibi sanguine toto deditus unam omnes inter miratur amatque

165
nece formae nec stirpis egens. nam docta per urbes v𝗣ﱢ�rma qua iuvenes, quae non didicere puellae?
hunc et bissenos—sic indulgentia pergat praesidis Ansonii—cernes attollere fasces

170
ante diem; certe iam nunc Cybeleia movit limina et Euboicae carmen legit ille Sibyllae.

175
iamque parens Latius, eius praenoscere mentem fias mihi, purpureos habitus iuvenique curule indulgebit ebur Dacasque—haec¹ gloria maior—exuvias laurosque dabat celebrare recentes.

180
ergo age, iunge toros atque otia deme iuventae.
quas ego non gentes, quae non face corda ¹gavi²?
alituum pseudumque mihi durique ferarum

¹ haec Otto: et M.
² ¹gavi Dom.: iugali M. Some edd. support mss. here, and explain by ellipse.

---

a From Laurentum on the coast of Latium; here = Italian.

b i.e., the Emperor; so "the Latian Father," l. 178.

c i.e., he has been made one of the XVviri, under whose home or her shrine at Eryx. Then she addressed the maiden, as she reclined alone upon her couch:

"How long this slothfulness, this modest, unshared bed, O well-beloved of me among Laurentian girls? What limit wilt thou set to chastity and thy sworn vow? Wilt thou never submit to a husband's yoke? Soon sadder years will come. Employ thy beauty and use the gifts that are quick to fly. Not for that end did I give thee such charm and pride of countenance and my own spirit, to see thee pass year after year of loneliness, as though thou wert not dear to me. Enough, ay and too much to have despised thy former suitors. For truly this one with his whole manhood's reverent devotion loves thee alone among all others, nor lacks he beauty or noble birth; and, for his poetry, what youths, what maidens all the city through have not his songs by heart? Him also shalt thou see—so far may the Ausonian prince prove gracious!—raise high the twelvefold rods before the due age; of a truth already has he opened Cybele's gates and read the Euboean Sibyl's song. Soon will the Latian Father, whose purpose I may foreknow, bestow upon the youth the purple raiment and the curule ivory, and will permit him to celebrate (a greater glory this) the spoils of Dacia and the laurels newly won. Come, marry then and have done with youth's tarrying. What races, what hearts has my torch failed to subdue? Birds, cattle, savage herds charge were all foreign worships as well as the Sibylline books.

a It is not certain to what curule office this refers, or in what capacity Stella "celebrated the Dacian victory," i.e., the games that accompanied Domitian's triumph at the end of 89.
non renuere greges, ipsum in conubia terrae aethera, cum pluviis rarescunt nubila, solvo. unde novum Troiae decus ardentumque deorum raptorem, Phrygio si non ego iuncta marito, Lydias unde meos iterasset Thybris Iulos? quis sepmemgemaie posuisset moenia Romae imperii Latiale caput, nisi Dardana furto cepisset Martem, nee me prohibente, sacerdos?"

His mulcet dictis tacitaeque\(^1\) inspirat honorem\(^2\) conubii. redeunt animo iam dona precesque et lacrimae vigilesque viri prope limina questus, Asteris et vatis totam cantata per urbem, Asteris ante dapes, nocte Asteris, Asteris ortu, quantum non clamatus Hylas. iamque aspera coepit flectere corda libens et iam sibi dura videri.

Maecte toris. Latios inter placidissime vates, quod durum permensus iter coeptique labores\(^3\) prendisti portus. nitida\(^4\) sic transfuga Pisae amnis in externos longe flammatus amores flumina demerso trahit intemerata canali; donee Sicanios tandem prolatus anhelo

\[^1\] tacitaeque Vollmer: tacitoque \(M.\)
\[^2\] honorem \(M\): amorem \(\tilde{s}\).
\[^3\] labores Macnaghten: laboris \(M.\)
\[^4\] nitidae \(\tilde{s}\): nitiae \(M\): viduæ Phillimore: tumidae \(Dom.\)
of beasts, none have said me nay: the very air, when rain-showers empty the clouds, do I melt into union with the earth. Thus life succeeds to life, and the world’s age is renewed. Whence could have come Troy’s later glory and the rescuer of the burning gods, had I not been joined to a Phrygian spouse? how could Lydian Tiber have renewed the stock of my own Íuli? Who could have founded the walls of sevenfold Rome, the head of Latium’s empire, had not a Dardan priestess suffered the secret embrace of Mars, which I forbade not?

By such winning words she inspires the silent girl with the pride of wedlock; her suitor’s gifts and prayers are remembered, his tears and wakeful pleading at her gates, and how the whole city sang of the poet’s Asteris, before the banquet Asteris, Asteris at night, Asteris at dawn of day, as never Hylas’ name resounded. And now she begins gladly to bend her stubborn heart, and now to account herself unfeeling.

Blessing on thy bridal couch, gentlest of Latian bards! Thou hast endured thy hard voyage to the end and the labours of thy quest, and gained thy haven. So does the river that fled sleek Pisa, aflame for an alien love afar, flow with unsullied streams through a channel beneath the sea, until at last arriving he drinks with panting mouth of the Sicanian

\[d\] An echo of Virg. G. iii. 6 “cui non dictus Hylas?” His story was a favourite one. e.g. Theocr. ld. 13. Prop. ii. 20.

\[e\] Alpheus, which flowed through the territory of Pisa (called “sleek” from the oil of the wrestlers at the Olympian games), thence under the sea to Sicily. The Naiad is Arethusa.
ore bibat fontes; miratur dulcia Nais oscula nec credit pelago venisse maritum.
Quis tibi tune alacri cælestum in munere claro, Stella, dies, quanto salierunt pectora voto, dulcia cum dominae dexter conubia vultus adnuit! ire polo nitidosque errare per axes visus. Amyclaæis minus exsultavit harenis pastor ad Idaeas Helena veniente carinas; Thessala nec talem viderunt Pelea Tempe, cum Thetin Haemoniis Chiron accedere terris erecto prospexit equo. quam longa morantur sidera! quam segnis votis Aurora mariti!
At procul ut Stellae thalamos sensere parari Letous vatum pater et Semeleius Euhan, hic movet Ortygia, movet hic rapida agmina Nysa.
huic Lycii montes gelidaeque umbracula Thymbrae et Parnase, sonas¹; illi Pangæa resultant Ismaraque et quondam genialis litora Naxi.
tunc caras iniere fores comitique canoro hie chelyn, hie flavam maculosœ nebrida tergo, hie thyrsos, hie plectra ferunt; hie enthea lauro temora, Minoæ crinem premit ille corona.
Vixdum emissa dies, et iam socialia praesto omena, iam festa fervet domus utraque pompa.
fronde virent postes, effulgent compita flammis, et pars immensæ gaudet celeberrima Romae.

¹ Parnase sonas Dom.; Parnasis honos M: Parnasis hiems Schwartz.

a It was there that he made Ariadne his bride.
b Clearly not the crown of Ariadne; probably ivy, with which Bacchus is always connected; there was a tradition that he wore it for sorrow after the death of Ariadne (Theon on Aratus, Phaen. 71).
springs; the Naiad marvels at the freshness of his kisses, nor can believe his lover has come from the open main.

What a day was that, O Stella, for thy eager spirit, when the gods showed thee signal bounty! How thy hopes surged within thy heart, when thy lady's favouring look gave promise of the bliss of wedlock! Thou didst seem to tread the sky and walk among the shining heavens. Less exultant was the shepherd on Amyclae's sand when Helen came to the ships of Ida; less eager seemed Peleus to Thessalian Tempe, when Chiron high on his horse's body looked forth and beheld Thetis draw nigh to the Haemonian strand. How tardy are the lingering stars! how slow is Aurora to a lover's prayer!

But when the son of Leto, sire of poets, and Euban, Semele's son, perceived from afar that Stella's marriage-chamber was preparing, from Ortygia the one, from Nysa the other they set their swift companies in train. To Apollo the Lycian hills and cool resorts of shady Thymbra sound responsive, and thou, Parnassus; Pangaea and Ismara re-echo Bacchus, and the shores of Naxos, once his bridal bower. Then did they enter the doors they loved, and brought to their tuneful friend their gifts of lyre and quill, of dappled yellow fawnskin and mystic wands: the one adorns the poet's brow with bay, the other sets a Minoan crown upon his hair.

Scarce is the light of day sent forth, and already the omens of a happy union are at hand, already either house is aglow with festal pomp. The door-posts are green with foliage, the cross-roads bright with flame, and the most populous part of immeasurable Rome rejoices. No office of State, no omnis honos, cuncti veniunt ad limina fasces, omnis plebeio teritur praetexta tumultu: 234
hinc eques, hinc iuvenum coetu\(^1\) stola mixta laborat.

felices utrosque vocant, sed in agmine plures ividere viro. iamdudum poste reelinis quaerit Hymen thalamis intactum dicere earmen, quo vatem muleere queat. dat Iuno verenda vincula et insignit gemina\(^2\) Concordia taeda. 240 hic fuit ille dies: noctem canat ipse maritus!
quantum nosse licet, sic vieta sopore doloso Marta fluminea posuit latus Ilia ripa;
non talis niveos tinxit\(^3\) Lavinia vultus, cum Turno spectante rubet: non Claudia talis respexit populos mota iam virgo carina.

Nunc opus. Aonidum comites tripodumque ministri, diversis certare modis: eat enthea vittis atque hederis redimita eohors, ut pollet ovanti quisque lyra. sed praecepui, qui nobile gressu extremo fraudatis opus, date carmina festis digna toris. Iuno ipse Coo plaudente Philetas Callimachusque senex Umbroque Propertius antro ambissent laudare diem, nec tristis in ipsis Naso Tomis divesque foco lucente Tibullus. 255

Me certe non unus amor simplexque canendi

\(^1\) iuvenum coetu \textit{Bernartius}: iuvenum questus hasta (hasta \textit{erased by M}1): in iuvenumque aestu \textit{Postgate}, hic iuvenum vestis Ellis, \textit{cf. Phillimore, Pref. to Silvae, p. xc.}

\(^2\) insignit gemina \textit{Phillimore}: insigni geminat \textit{M}.

\(^3\) tinxit \textit{Guyet}: strinxit \textit{M}.

\(^a\) Claudia, when accused of incontinency, proved her maidenhodd by causing to move the vessel that had brought the image of the Great Mother to Rome (204 B.C.); the ship had stuck fast, and according to the soothsayers could only be moved by a chaste woman (Livy, xxix. 14; \textit{Ov. Fast.}
iv. 343).
train of lietors but seeks that threshold; Senators' robes are jostled by crowds of common folk; yonder are knights, and women's gowns that mix and struggle in a throng of youths. Each they call happy, but more among the multitude envy the bridegroom. Long since leaning against the portal hath Hymen sought to utter a new song in honour of their marriage, and to gladden the poet's heart. Juno brings the holy bonds, and Concord marks the union with twofold torch. Such was that day: of the night let the bridegroom sing! This only may we know: 'twas thus that Ilia, bride of Mars, o'ercome by deceitful slumber, laid her side on the river's bank; less fair was Lavinia when she tinged her snow-white cheeks and blushed 'neath the eyes of Turnus; not so did Claudia turn to meet the people's gaze, when the ship moved and her maidenhood was sure.

Now, comrades of the Aonian sisters and ministers of the tripods, now must we strive in manifold measures: send forth the inspired train, chapleted and ivy-crowned, each bard in the strength of his own exultant lyre. But above all, ye who spoil of its last pace your noble rhyme, bring songs that are worthy of the marriage feast. Philetas himself with Cos to applaud him and old Callimachus and Propertius in his Umbrian grot would fain have praised this day, and Naso too right gladly e'en in Tomi, and Tibullus by the glowing hearth that was his wealth.

For my part, verily, 'tis no one love, no single

---

b Boeotian, i.e. Muses. By "comrades" and "ministers" he means poets.

c Cf. note on i. 2. 9.
causa trahit: tecum similes iunctaeque Camenae, Stella, mihi, multumque pares baechamur ad aras et sociam doctis haurimus ab amnibus undam; at te nascentem gremio mea prima recepit Parthenope, duleisque solo tu gloria nostro reptasti. nitidum consurgat ad aetheria tellus Eubois et pulchra tumeat Sebethos alumna; nec sibi sulphureis Lucinae Naides antris nec Pompeiani placeant magis otia Sarni. Heia age, praeclaros Latio properate nepotes, qui leges, qui castra regant, qui carmina ludant. acceleret partu decimum bona Cynthia mensem, sed pareat Lucina precor: tuque ipse parenti parce, puer, ne mollem uterum, ne stantia laedas pectora; cunque tuos tacito natura recessu formarit vultus, multum de patre decoris, plus de matre feras. at tu, pulcherrima forma Italidum, tandem merito possessa marito, vincla diu quaesita fove: sic damna decoris nulla tibi; longae viridis sic flore iuventae perdurent vultus, tardeque haec forma senescat.

1 regant Pol.: legant M.
2 longae 5: longe M. See Slater's note, ad loc.

- i.e., Naples.
- i.e., Cumae, originally a colony of Chalcis in Euboea. Sebethos was the name of a small stream flowing past Naples.
impulse that makes me sing: thou, Stella, hast a Muse like to and closely joined with mine, at similar altars do we feel the poet’s rage, and together draw water from the springs of song. Thee, lady, at thy birth my own Parthenope a first fostered in her bosom, and in thy infancy thou wert the glory and delight of my native soil. Let the Euboean b land be exalted to the starry pole, and Sebethos swell with pride of his fair nursling; nor let the Lucrine Naiads boast more of their sulphur caves, nor Pompeian Sarnus c in his sweet repose.

Come now, hasten ye to bestow on Latium noble sons who will make her laws and rule her armies, and practise poesy. May merciful Cynthia hasten the tenth month for the bringing-forth, but spare her, Lucina, I pray thee; and thou, O babe, spare thy mother, hurt not her tender womb and swelling breasts; and when Nature in secrecy has marked thy features, much beauty mayst thou draw from thy father, but more from thy mother. And thou, loveliest of Italian maids, won at last by a husband worthy of thee, cherish the bonds he sought so long;
so may thy beauty suffer no loss, and the fresh prime of youth abide for many a year upon thy brow, and that comeliness be slow to age.

A river flowing into the bay of Naples, to-day about two miles from Pompeii, but formerly past its walls.
Cernere facundi Tibur glaciale Vopisci si quis et inserto geminos Aniene penates aut potuit sociae commerzia noscere ripae certantesque sibi dominum defendere villas, illum nec calido latravit Sirius astro,
nec gravis aspexit Nemeae frondentis alumnus:
talis hiems tectis, fragunt sic improba solem frigora. Pisaemque domus non aestuat annum.
Ipsa manu tenera tecum scripsisse Voluptas

Tune Venus Idaliis unxit fastigia sucis permulsitque comis blandumque reliquit honorem sedibus, et volucres vetuit discedere natos.
O longum memoranda dies! quae mente reporto gaudia, quam lassos per tot miracula visus!
ingeniun quam mite solo! quae forma beatis ante\textsuperscript{2} manus artemque locis! non largius usquam indulsit Natura sibi. nemora alta citatis incubuere vadis: fallax responsat imago frondibus, et longas eadem fugit umbra per undas.
ipse Anien—miranda fides—infraque superque

\footnote{No lacuna in mss. after this line. It was first recognized by Schwartz, though the text was doubted by Dom.: Phillimore conj. telam for tecum (iii. 1. 117).}

\footnote{ante Bursian: arte M.}

\footnote{i.e., the constellation Leo, the sign of the zodiac in which the sun is in July.}

\footnote{i.e., such heat as at the Olympian games, held at midsummer.}
III. THE VILLA OF MANILIUS VOPISCUS AT TIBUR

Manilius Vopiscus is mentioned in the Preface to this book; he was a man of literary tastes, and an Epicurean (I. 94). The villa was probably above Tibur; Volpi found remains that he said tallied with Statius's description ("Vetus Latium profanum," x. p. 330, 1704), but no trace of it has endured to modern times.

If anyone has been privileged to behold eloquent Vopiseus' cool retreat at Tibur and the double dwelling threaded by Anio's stream, or to see the friendly intercourse of bank with bank, and each villa striving to keep their master to itself, on him the hot star of Sirius has not barked, nor leafy Nemea's offspring a looked with fierce aspect: such icy coolness is in the house, so pitilessly does the cold break the sun's power, nor does the dwelling swelter in Pisa's summer heat.

Pleasure herself with her own delicate hand <is said> to have traced with thee . . . Then Venus poured Idalian perfumes upon the roof-tops and caressed them with her hair, and left a winsome charm upon the house and bade her winged sons abide there for ever.

O ever memorable day! What raptures of the mind, what cloying of the sight by countless marvels do I recall! How kindly the temper of the soil! How beautiful beyond human art the enchanted scene! Nowhere has Nature more lavishly spent her skill. Lofty woods lean over rushing waters; a false image counterfeits the foliage, and the reflection dances unbroken over the long waves. Anio himself —marvellous to believe—though full of boulders saxeus\(^1\) hie tumidam rabiem spumosaque ponit murmura, eeu placidi veritus turbare Vopisci Pieriosque dies et habentes carmina somnos.
litus utrumque domi, nee te mitissimus amnis dividit. alternas servant praetoria ripas, non externa sibi fluviumve obstare\(^2\) queruntur.
Sestiacos nunc Fama sinus pelagusque natatum iactet et audaci victos delphinas ephebo!
hie aeterna quies, nullis hie iura procellis, numquam fervor aquis. datur hie transmittere visus et voces et paene manus. sic Chalcida fluetus expellunt reflui, sic dissociata profundo Bruttia Sicanium circumspicit ora Pelorum.

Quid primum mediumve canam, quo fine quiescam?
auratasne trabes an Mauros undique postes an picturata lucentia marmora vena mirer, an emissas per cuncta cubilia nymphas?
hue oculis. hue mente trahor. venerabile dicam lucorum senium? te, quae vada fluminis infra cernis, an ad silvas quae respicis, aula, tacentis, qua tibi tota quiesoffensaque turbine nullo nox silet et teneros invitant\(^3\) murmur somnos?
an quae graminea suscepta crepidine fumant balnea et impositum ripis algentibus ignem?
duaque vaporiferis iunctus fornacibus amnis ridet anhelantes viceino flumine nymphas?
Vidi artes veterumque manus variisque metalla

\(^1\) saxeus ... spumosa \(M\): Slater conj. spumeus ... saxosa.
\(^2\) fluviumve obstare Pol.: fluviorum optare \(M\).
\(^3\) teneros invitant Lemaire: nigros imitantia (or poss. mutantia) \(M\): pigros Peyraredus: mutantia Postgate.

\(^a\) i.e., Leander. The point is that these shores are kinder below and above, here silences his swollen rage and foamy din, as if afraid to disturb the Pierian days and music-haunted slumbers of tranquil Vopiseus. On either shore is home, and that most gentle river parts thee not in twain. Stately buildings guard either bank, and complain not that they are strange to each other, or that the stream bars approach. Now let Fame boast of the Sestian gulf, and the bold youth who swam the sea and outstripped the dolphins! a Here is eternal quiet, storms have here no power, waters ne'er grow angry. Here can one see and talk, ay all but join hands across the stream. Thus do the ebbing waves repel Chalcis, thus the curve of Bruttian shore that the deep has sundered regards Sicanian Pelorus.

What shall be my first, what my middle theme, whereon shall I conclude? Shall I marvel at the gilded beams, the Moorish lintels b on every side, patterned veins of glittering marbles, the water-nymphs that hie them through every bed-chamber? This way my eyes, that way my mind would snatch me. Shall I tell of the forest's venerable age? Of the courtyard which sees the river's lower reaches, or of that other which looks back towards the mute woodland, where it hath quiet unbroken and the silence of night unmarred by any storm, and murmuring sounds that invite to gentle slumber? Or of the smoking baths upraised on the grassy bank and the fire kindled upon the icy flood? Or where the river, chained to the vaporous furnace, laughs at the nymphs that gasp in its stream hard by?

Works of art I saw and masterpieces of the ancients than those of the Hellespont, which parted Leander from his love.

a These were of citrus-wood from Mauretania.

41
viva modis. labor est auri memorare figuras aut ebur aut dignas digitis contingere gemmas, quiequid et argento primum, vel in aere minori lusit et enormes manus est experta colossos, cum vagor aspectu visusque per omnia duco, ealcabam necopinns opes. nam splendor ab alto defluus et nitidum referentes aera testae monstravere solum, varias ubi picta per artes gaudet humus superatque novis asarota figuris: expavere gradus.

Quid nunc iungentia¹ mirer aut quid partitis distantia teeta trichoris? quid te, quae mediis servata penatibus arbor teeta per et postes liquidas emergis in auras, quot non sub domino saevas passura bipennes? et nunc ignaro forsan vel lubrica Nais vel non abruptos tibi debet² Hamadryas annos.

Quid referam alternas gemino super aggere mensas albentesque lacus altosque in gurgite fontes teque, per obliquum penitus quae laberis annem, Marcia, et audaci transeurris flumina plumbo? an solum Ioniis sub fluetibus Elidis annem duleis ad Aetnaeos deducat semita portus? illie ipse antris Anien et³ fonte relieto

¹ iungentia Dom. : ingencia M.
² debet Heinsius : demet M.
³ illie Krohn, Anien et Pol. : illis ipse antris anienem M.

¹ A famous mosaic floor by one Sosus in Pergamum, so-called because it represented the scraps and leavings of a banquet (see Plin. N. II. xxxvi. 184).
² The term in Greek means a building of three stories; here and in Spartanus (Pesc. Nig. xii. 4) it seems to mean the upper story or stories of a house. The word is used and metals that lived in manifold forms. A labour is it to tell of the shapes of gold, the ivories and the gems worthy to adorn a finger, and of all that the artist’s hand first playfully wrought in silver or smaller bronze, and made trial of huge colossal forms. While 1 wandered gazing and cast my eyes on all, I was treading on riches unaware. For the radiance down-streaming from on high and the tiles that reflected the brilliant light displayed to me the floor, where the ground rejoices in manifold skill of painting, and with strange shapes surpasses the Unswept Pavement: awe held my steps.

Why should I now marvel at the central buildings, or at the outer wings each with its upper story?
why at thee, preserved in the very heart of the house, thou tree that risest up through roof and roof-beam to the pure air above, and under any other lord wouldst endure the cruel axe? Even now, though thou knowest it not, some lissome Naiad or Hamadryad perchance doth owe to thee the life that no stroke has severed.

Why should I tell of feasts held now on this bank,
now on that, of white-gleaming pools and springs deep-hidden ’neath the flood, or of thee, O Marcia, that glidest athwart the river’s depths and in bold lead dost cross its channels? Shall only the river of Elis come safe by an unsalt path to Aetna’s haven beneath Ionian waves? There Anio himself, leaving nowhere else in classical Latin: in Paulinus of Nola in the Greek sense, “trichora altaria” (Ep. xxxii. 10).

i.e., Vopiscus: the change of person addressed is awkward, unless we understand Statius’s habit of apostro-phizing, cf. i. 4. 3, 38, 106.

One of the aqueducts that supplied Rome with water.

See note on i. 2. 201.
nocte sub arcana\(^1\) glauco\(\)s exutus amictus hue illue fragili prosternit pectora museo, aut ingens in stagna cadit vitreasque natatu plandit aquas. illa renubat Tiburnus in umbra, illie sulpureos cupit Albula mergere erines;
haec domus Egeriae nemoralem abiangere Phoebe et Dryadam viduare choris algentia possit Taygeta et silvis accersere Pana Lycaeis.
quod ni templum darent alien Tirynthia sortes,
et Praenestinae poterant migrare sorores.
quid bifera Alcinoi laudem pomaria vosque, qui numquam vacui prodistis in aethera. rami ?
cedant Telegoni, cedant Laurentia Turni iugera Lucrinsaeque domus litusque cruenti Antiphtae, cedans vitreae iuga perfida Circes Dulichiis ululata lupis aresque superbae Anxuris et sedes, Phrygio quas mitis almuo debet anus; cedant quae te iam solibus artis Antia\(^2\) nimbosa revocabunt litora bruma

Scilicet hie illi meditantur pondera mores, hic premitur fecunda quies virtusque serena fronte gravis sanusque nitor luxuque carentes deliciae. quas ipse suis digressus Athenis mallet deserto senior Gargettius horto;

\(^1\) nocte sub arcana \(^2\) tob this page noctis ubi arcano Phillimore.
\(^2\) Antia Markland; avia M; obvius Postgate.

\(a\) Tiburnus, usually Tiburtus, was the founder of Tibur; Albula, a sulphurous lake from which a stream flowed into the Anio at Tibur.
\(b\) A nymph of Aricia, and servant of Phoebe, who had a shrine there.
\(c\) The temple of Fortune at Praeneste was famous for telling the future by the casting of lots; the reference to Sisters is not clear, but Martial refers to the "veridicae sorores" his grotto and his spring, in night's mysterious hour puts off his grey-green raiment and leans his breast against the soft moss hereabouts, or plunges in all his bulk into the pools and swimming splashes among the glassy waters. In that shade Tiburnus reclines, there Albula would fain dip her sulphurous tresses; this bower could steal woodland Phoebe from Egeria\textsuperscript{b} and empty cold Taygetus of Dryad choirs, and summon Pan from the Lycean glades. Ay, did not the Tirynthian shrine as well give oracles, even the Sisters of Praeneste might change their abode.\textsuperscript{c}

Why should I belaud the twice-bearing apple-orchards of Alcinous and the boughs that never stretched unladen to the air?\textsuperscript{d} Let the domain of Telegonus give place and Turnus' Laurentian fields, and the Lucrine dwellings and the shore of cruel Antiphates; let the perfidious height of glassy Circe yield, where the Dulichian wolves once howled, and Anxur's haughty towers and the home that the kind old nurse owes to her Phrygian foster-child; let the shores of Antium give place, which when the suns are narrowed in their path and winter's storms are come will call thee to them.\textsuperscript{e}

Ay, here that serious mind broods on weighty themes; here silence shrouds a fruitful quiet and grave virtue tranquil-browed, sane elegance and comfort that is not luxury, such as the Gargettian sage\textsuperscript{f} had himself preferred and left his own Athens and his garden behind him; these were of Antium in the same way (v. 1. 3). "Tirynthia templo" is a temple of Hercules.

\footnotesize{
\textsuperscript{a} Cf. Hôm. Od. vii. 117.

\textsuperscript{b} The places are Tusculum, Ardea, Baiae, Formiae, Circeii (Dulichian, because they were Odysseus' men), Anxur, Caieta (nurse of Aeneas), Antium.

\textsuperscript{c} Epicurus.

45}
haec per et Aegaeas hiemes Hyadumque nivosum 95
sidus et Oleniis dignum petiisse sub astris, si Maleae credenda ratis Siculoque per austus sit via: cur oculis sordet vicina voluptas?
hic tua Tiburtes Faunos chelys et iuvat ipsum Aenidem dictumque lyra maiore Catillum.

seu tibi Pindaricus animus contendere plectris sive chelyn tollas heroa ad robora sive liventem satiram nigra rubigine turbes\(^1\) seu tua non alia splendescat epistola cura.

Digne Midae Croesique bonis et Perside gaza, 105
macte bonis animi, cuius stagnantia rura debuit et flavis Hermus transcursere ripis et limo splendente Tagus! sie docta frequentes otia, sic omni detectus pectora nube finem Nestoreae precor egrediare senectae.

IV

SOTERIA RUTILI GALLICI

Estis, io, superi, nec inexorabile Clotho volvit opus, videt alma pios Astraea Iovique

\(^1\) turbes \(M\): vibres Scrivervius.

---

\(^a\) The star known as Capella, the rising of which heralded storms; Aega, daughter of Olenus, was changed into a goat.

\(^b\) Scylla and Charybdis.

\(^c\) Either Virgil (Aen. vii. 670) or Horace (C. i. 18). Catillus was one of the founders of Tibur.

\(^d\) Often identified with Justice.
worth seeing despite Aegean storms and the Hyades’ snowy constellation and the Olenian star,\(^a\) even though the bark must be thrown on Malea’s mercy and the way lie through Sicilian surges\(^b\): why do men look slightlyingly on pleasure near at hand? Here thy lyre delights the Fauns of Tibur and Aleides himself and Catillus, sung of by a mightier harp,\(^c\) whether thou hast a mind to strive with the Pindaric quill or dost lift thy lyre to the height of heroic deeds or stirrest up the black venom of thy bitter satire, or whether thy letters glow and sparkle, composed with no less skill.

O worthy of the wealth of Midas and of Croesus and of Persian treasure, all blessing on thy wealth of soul, thou o’er whose watered fields Hermus should have flowed with yellow channel and Tagus with his shining sand! So mayst thou full oft enjoy thy learned leisure, I pray, so with heart unclouded mayst thou outpass the limits of old Nestor’s age!

IV. TO RUTILIUS GALLICUS, ON HIS RECOVERY FROM ILLNESS

“Soteria” means a thanksgiving for recovery from sickness (as here), or for rescue from any serious danger. Here Statius congratulates Rutilius Gallicus, a man of noble rank and military distinction, who after seeing service in Asia Minor and Pannonia had become successively Praetor, Governor of the province of Asia, Consul, Imperial Commissioner in Africa, and finally Prefect of the City; between the last two offices he had fought on the Rhine. The recovery is effected by divine agency, Apollo and Aesculapius visiting the patient and tending him themselves.

Hurrah! ye exist then, ye gods, nor is Clotho’s spinning inexorable; kindly Astraea\(^d\) hath regard conciliata redit dubitataque sidera cernit Gallicus.  es caelo, dive, es,\(^1\) Germanice, cordi —quis neget ?—: erubuit tanto spoliare ministro imperium Fortuna tuum. stat proxima cervix ponderis immensi damnosaque fila senectae exuit atque alios melior revirescit in annos.
ergo alaeres, quae signa colunt urbana, cohortes inque sinum quae saepe tuum fora turbida questum 10 confugiunt, leges urbesque ubicumque togatae, quae tua longinquis implorant iura querelis, certent laetitia, nosterque ex ordine collis confremin et sileant peioris murmura famae!
quique manet longumque aevo redeunte manebit, 15
quem penes intrepidae mitis custodia Romae.
nec tantum induerint fatis nova saecula crimen aut instaurati peceaverit ara Tarenti.
Ast ego nec Phoebum, quamquam mihi surda sine illo
plectra, nec Aonias decima cum Pallade divas 20 aut mitem Tegeae Dircesve hortabor alnumnum :
ipse veni viresque novas animumque ministra, qui\(^2\) caneris ; docto nec enim sine numine tantus Ausoniae decora ampla togae centumque dedisti iuudicium mentemque viris. licet enthea vatis 25 \(^1\) es \(\equiv\) : et \(M:\) dive es \(Pol.:\) dives \(M:\) dis es \(Dom.:\) Diti es Postgate.
\(^2\) qui \(Pol. (from P):\) quis \(M.\)

\(^a\) One of the titles of the Emperor Domitian.

\(^b\) The four urban cohorts, directly under the Praefectus urbi: the Prefect's court was the supreme court of criminal jurisdiction, and appeals from Italian towns came to him.

\(^c\) Sometimes explained as Helicon, cf. “nostras” l. 30; sometimes as Rome. Slater suggests Alba.

\(^d\) Tarentum was the name given to a depression in the Campus Martius near the Tiber, where there was an altar.
48
for pious folk, and comes back reconciled with Jove, and Gallicus beholds the stars he doubted e’er to see again. Beloved of heaven art thou, divine Germanicus, who can deny it? Fortune was ashamed to rob thy empire of so great a minister. Those shoulders with their immense burden rise once more next to thine, and have cast off the ruinous doom of eld and revive more vigorous yet for many a year. Therefore let the brisk cohorts that venerate the City’s eagles, and the laws that ofttimes take refuge in thy bosom, complaining of the courts’ confusion, and the cities of the toga wheresoe’er they be, that with far-travelling pleas implore thy justice—let them vie in their rejoicing, and let our own hill duly join its shouts to theirs, and the mutterings of ill report be silent. For he abides, and long will abide in his new span of life, in whose merciful hand is placed the guardianship of fearless Rome. No such grave reproach will the new age lay upon the fates, nor will the altar of Tarentum, late restored, so deeply sin.

But I will call neither on Phoebus, although my quill is mute without him, nor on the Aonian goddesses with Pallas the tenth Muse, nor on the gentle sons of Tegea and of Dirce: come thou thyself and bring new strength and spirit, thou that art my theme; for not without genius heaven-sent wert thou so mighty to shed great glory upon the Ausonian gown and to give judgement and understanding to the Hundred. Though god-possessed Pimplea shut

— Mercurius and Bacchus.

— The Centumviral court, prominent under the Empire, was a court of civil jurisdiction: its numbers, originally 105 (3 from each tribe) had been raised to 180. Cf. Silv. iv. 4. 43.
excludat Pimplea sitim nec conscia detur Pirene: largos potius mihi gurges in haustus, qui rapitur de fonte tuo, seu plana solutis quam struis orsa modis seu quom tibi dulcis in artem frangitur et nostras curat facundia leges.

quare age, si Cereris sua dona merumque Lyaeo reddimus et dives praedae tamen accipit omni exuvias Diana tholo captivaque tela Bellipotens: nec tu. quando tibi, Gallice, maius eolo, fandique opibus sublimis abundas.
sperne coli tenuiore lyra. vaga cingitur astris luna, et in oceanum rivi cecidere minores.
Quae tibi sollicitus persolvit praemia morum Urbis amor! quae tum patrumque equitumque notavi
lumina et ignarae plebis lugere potentes?
non labente Numa timuit sic Curia felix Pompeio nec celsus eques nec femina Bruto.
hoc illud: tristes invitum audire catenas, pareere verberibus nec qua iubet alta potestas ire, sed armatas multum sibi demere vires dignarique manus humiles et verba precantum, reddere iura foro nec proturbare curules et ferrum muleere toga. sic itur in alta pectora, sic mixto reverentia fidit amori.
ipsa etiam cunctos gravis inclementia fati terruit et subiti praceps iuvenile pericli, nil cunctante malo. non illud culpa senectae
—quippe ea bissenis vixdum orsa excedere lustris—, a Pimplea and Pirene were fountains of the Muses.

b i.e., of us poets.
c He was mourned by the Roman matrons for a whole year, Livy, ii. 7.
out the thirsty bard and conspiring Pirene \(^a\) be not granted me, yet dearer are the lavish draughts snatched from the flood of thy own fountain, whether thou dost create free and flowing prose or whether thy sweet eloquence is broken in to rules of art and obeys our laws.\(^b\) Wherefore come—if we make return to Ceres of her gifts and to Lyaeus of his wine, and if Diana though rich in booty yet receives spoils in every temple and the Lord of War our trophies of the fight—and spurn not, Gallicus, since thou hast a mightier utterance and abounding in wealth of speech sublime, spurn not the worship of a humbler lyre. The wandering moon is ringed with stars, and lesser streams run down into the Ocean.

What rich reward for thy virtues did the City's loving anxiety give thee! What famous Senators and Knights, what champions of the obscure multitude saw I then in tears! The prosperous Curia feared not so when Numa was failing, nor the noble Knights at Pompey's danger nor the women at Brutus' death.\(^c\) And this is the cause thereof: thou wert loth to hear the sullen chains, didst spare the scourge nor go as lofty office bade thee, but didst renounce much of thy armed force, and deign to regard the petitions of the lowly and their humble prayers; thou broughtest back justice to the Forum nor didst vex the curule magistrates, but temperedst force by law. So is a way won to the deep places of the heart, so does reverence trust the love wherein itmingles. Terrible too to all was the dire severity of Fate and the impetuous violence of the sudden peril, as the mischief tarried not. 'Twas not the fault of thy age—searce had that begun to withdraw from its twelfth lustre—but of straining toil sed labor intendens animique in membra vigentis imperium vigilesque suo pro Caesare curae, dulce opus. hinc fessos penitus subrepsit in artus insidiosa quies et pigra oblivio vitae.

Tune deus, Alpini qui iuxta culmina dorsi signat Apollineos sancto cognomine lucos, respiet heu tanti pridem securus alumni.
praecidensque moras: "nunc mecum, Epidauria proles,
hinc" ait "i gaudens: datur—aggredienda facultas!—
ingentem recreare virum. teneamus adorti tendentes iam fila colos; ne fulminis atri sit metus: has ultro laudabit Iuppiter artes.
ne neque plebeiam aut dextrae sine numine cretam servo animam. atque adeo breviter, dum teeta subimus.
expediam. genus ipse suis permissaque retro nobilitas: nec origo latet, sed luce sequente vincitur et magno gaudet cessisse nepoti.

prima togae virtus illi quoque: clarus et ingens eloquio: mox innumeris exercita castris occiduas primasque domos et sole sub omni permeruit irata manus nec in otia pacis permissum laxare animos ferrumque recingi.
hunc Galatea vigens ausa est inessere bello
—me quoque—perque novem timuit Pamphylia messes
Pannoniusque ferox arcuque horrenda fugaci

1 pridem Dom.: precidem M.
2 praecidens Housman: progressus M: praegressus S.
3 ait, i Bursian: alti M.
4 tendentes Markland: tendatis M.

a Probably Turin, the birthplace of Gallicus, is meant.
Evidence for any cult of Apollo there is exceedingly weak.
and a strong mind's mastery o'er the body and unsleeping diligence in thy Emperor's cause, a labour of love to thee. Hence came creeping deep into the weary limbs a treacherous quiet and dull forgetfulness of life.

Then the god who hard by the peaks of the Alpine ridge sets his sacred name of Apollo upon the groves, turns to behold, long alas! neglectful of so precious a ward. Then cutting short delay: "Come with me on the instant, Epidaurian son," he cries, "away, and gladly too! 'Tis in our power—the chance must be seized!—to restore to health a mighty hero. Let us advance and grasp the thread that e'en now the distaff stretches. Fear no dread thunderbolt: Jupiter will be the first to praise this skill of ours. For 'tis no plebeian life I save nor one unblest in its begetting. Briefly while we draw nigh his house will I unfold his story. Himself he gives pedigree to his line, and reflects thereon his own nobility; yet his origin is not obscure, but surpassed by the glory that follows it, and gladly gives place to its famous progeny. He too first excelled in the arts of peace: in eloquence brilliant and powerful; then loyal to his oath he served in East and West and under every sun, bearing the brunt of countless camps, nor was he suffered to relax his ardour in peaceful ease nor to ungird his sword. Him did Galatia dare to provoke to war in lusty pride—ay, and me also—and for the space of nine harvests Pamphylia feared him, and the bold Pannonian and Armenia's

\[b\] i.e., because it is running out.

\[c\] Jupiter had slain Aesculapius for restoring the dead to life.

\[d\] Attack on Delphi by the Gauls, 279 B.C.
Armenia et patiens Latii iam pontis Araxes, quid geminos fasces magnaeque iterata revolvam? velit illa quidem ter habere quaterque hunc sibi. sed revocant fasti maiorque curulis nec promissa semel. Libici quid mira tributi obsequia et missum media de pace triumphum laudem et opes quantas nec qui mandaverat ausus exspectare fuit? gaudet Trasimennus et Alpes Cannensesque animae; primusque insigne tributum ipse palam lacera² posebat Regulus umbra, non vacat Arctoa acies Rhenumque rebellem captivaeque preces Veledae et, quae maxima nuper gloria, depositam Dacis percutitis Urbem pandere, cum tanti lectus rectoris habenas, Gallicia, Fortuna non admirante subisti.

Hunc igitur, si digna loquor, rapiemus iniquo, nate. Iou. rogat hoc Latiae pater inelitus urbis et meruit: neque enim frustra mihi nuper honora carmina patricio pueri sonuistis in ostro. si qua salutifero gemini Chironis in antro herba, tholo quodcumque tibi Troiana recondit Pergamus aut medicis felix Epidaurus harenis educat, Idaea profert quam Creta sub umbra dietammi florentis opem, quoque anguis abundat

⁴ After this line M has attollam cantu gaudet Thrasymennus et Alpes, obviously an interpolation, though various edd. try to fit it into the text. See Introd.

² lacera Pol.: laeta M. Pol.'s reading was taken by him from P.

¹ Some explain as "the praetorship," cf. Mommsen (Staatsrecht, i. 384 n.), who quotes Cic. De leg. agr. ii. 34. 93, and Plautus, Epid. i. 1. 25, to prove that the praetor in Rome only had two lictors (cf. bissenos fasces, of the consulship, Silv. i. 2. 174).

² i.e., the consulship, which would be registered in the Fasti.
dire retreating bowmen and Araxes that now brooks a Roman bridge. Why should I tell of the double command and the twice repeated governorship of Asia? who thrice and four times would fain have him for herself, but our Annals and the higher curule chair of Rome ? oft promised, call him back. Why extol the tribute and wondrous obedience of Libya, and the spoils of triumph sent to Rome from the midst of peace, and such wealth as not even he who gave the charge had dared to expect? Trasimene and the Alps exult and the ghosts of Cannae; and the mangled shade of Regulus first appears and claims its glorious reward. Time allows not to recount the armies of the North and rebellious Rhine and the prayers of captive Veleda, and, latest and greatest glory, Rome given thee in charge, when the Dacians were falling before us and thou wert chosen, Gallicus, to take up the reins of so great a chief, and Fortune marvelled not.

"Him then, if my words find favour, we will rescue, my son, from Pluto's cruelty. This is the prayer of the illustrious Father of the Latian City, and he has deserved it; for not in vain of late did ye sing my praise, ye boys, clad in patrician purple. If there be any herb in twy-formed Chiron's health-giving cave, all that Trojan Pergamus stores for thee in thy shrine or blest Epidaurus nurtures in her healing sands, all the aid of flowering dittany that Crete brings forth in the glens of Ida, the abundant

c Vespasian had renewed and increased the tribute paid by Africa and other provinces; Gallicus was perhaps sent there as Special Commissioner for this purpose.

d A German prophetess, for whom see Tac. Hist. iv. 61, v. 22.

e i.e., the Emperor.
spumatu: iungam ipse manus atque omne benignum\(^1\) virus, odoriferis Arabum quod doctus in arvis aut Amphrysiaco pastor de gramine carpsi.\(^2\)

Dixerat. inveniunt positos iam segniter artus pugnantemque animam: ritu se cingit uterque Paconio monstrantque simul parentque volentes, donec letiferis vario medicamine pestes et suspecta mali ruperunt nubila somni.

adiuvat ipse deos morboque valentior omni occupat auxilium. citius non arte refectus Telephus Haemonia, nee quae metuentis Atridae saeva Machaonio coierunt vulnera suco.

Quis mihi tot coetus inter populique patrumque sit curae votique locus? tamen ardua testor sidera teque, pater vatun Thymbraee, quis omni luce mihi, quis nocte timor, dum postibus haerens assiduus nunc aure vigil nunc lumine cuncta aucupor\(^3\); immensae veluti conexa carinae cumba minor, cum saevit hiems, pro parte furentis parva receptat aquas et eodem volvitur austro.

Nectite nunc laetae candentia fila, sorores, nectite! nemo modum transmissi computet aevi: hie vitae natalis erit. tu Troica dignus saecula et Euboici transeendere pulveris annos Nestoreosque situs! qua nunc tibi pauper acerra digna litem? nec si vacuet Mevania valles aut praestent niveos Clitumna novalia tauros,

\(^{1}\) benignum Lindenhrog: benigné M.
\(^{2}\) carpsi Dom.: carpsit M.
\(^{3}\) aucupor Heinsius: auguror M.

\(^{a}\) Cf. Virg. Aen. xii. 400.
\(^{b}\) i.e., by Achilles, cf. Hor. Epod. 17. 8.
\(^{c}\) i.e. Apollo.
spume of serpents—<these bring>, and I will join thereto my skill of hand, and every kindly juice that I learned in Arabia's balmy fields, or gathered as a shepherd in the meadows of Amphrysus."

He ended; they find the sufferer lying languid and battling for life:

"each girds himself in Paeonian wise, and willingly both teach and both obey, until with varied art of healing they have shattered the deadly plague and dispersed the dire cloud of baneful lethargy. He himself aids the heavenly ones, and prevailing o'er the utmost power of the disease anticipated the help they bring. Not more swiftly was Telephus restored by Haemonian skill, nor the cruel wounds of which Atrides stood in terror stanehed by Machaon's healing balm.

What place, amid such a gathering of Senators and people, for anxious prayers of mine? Yet I call the high stars to witness, and thee, Thymbraean sire of bards, what terror held me night and day while I clung to the portals and in unremitting vigilance caught every hint with eye or ear: just as a tiny skiff trailing behind a mighty vessel, when the tempest rages, bears its small share of the waters' fury and is tossed in the self-same gale.

Twine now, ye Sisters, joyfully twine your threads of shining white! Let none reckon the measure of life already spent: this day is the birthday of life to be. Thou dost deserve to outlast the age-long lives of Troy, the Euboean Sibyl's dust and Nestor's mouldering decay. What censer of mine can avail, needy as I am, to supplicate for thee? Not if Mevania should empty her valleys or the fields of Clitumnus vouchsafed their snow-white bulls, were

d Priam or Tithonus, as in ii. 3. 73, v. 3. 256.
sufficiam. sed saepe deis hos inter honores caespes et exi guo placuerunt farra salino.

V

BALNEUM CLAUDII ETRUSCI

Non Helicona gravi pulsat chelys enthea plectro, nee lassata voce totiens mihi numina. Musas; et te. Phoebe, choris et te dimittimus, Euhan. tu quoque muta ferae, volueer Tegeacee, sonorae terga premas: alios poscunt mea carmina coetus. 5 Naidas, undarum dominas, regemque corusei ignis adhuc fessum Siculaque incude rubentem elieuisse satis. paulum arma nocentia. Thebae, ponite: dilecto volo lascivire sodali. iunge. puer. cyathos—set ne numerare1 labora— 10 cunctantemque intende chelyn: discede Laborque Curaque, dum nitidis animus gemmantia saxis balnea dumque procax vittis hederisque. soluta fronde verecunda.2 Clio mea ludit Etruseo. ite. deae virides, liquidosque advertite vultus et vitreum teneris crimen redimite corymbis, veste nihil tectae, quales emergitis altis fontibus et visu Satyros torquetis amantes. non vos. quae culpa deus infamastis aquarum, 1 set ne numerare Scriberius: et enumerare M, nec et Postgate.

2 verecunda Baehrens: verecundo M.

a Salt and roasted meal was the simplest form of sacrifice, cf. Hor. C. iii. 23. 20. The turf formed the altar.

b Mercury invented the lyre from the shell of a tortoise.

c i.e., Vulcan.

58
that sufficient. Yet amid such offerings a simple turf, some meal and a humble salt-cellar have oftentimes pleased the gods.\(^a\)

V. THE BATHS OF CLAUDIUS ETRUSCUS

The Baths of Claudius Etruscus were possibly on the Quirinal; they are mentioned by Martial (vi. 42). For their owner see note to Silv. iii. 3.

Not at Helicon's gates doth my harp resound in fierce, eesthetic melody, nor call I on the heavenly Muses, so often wearied by my prayer; thou Phoebus, and thou, Euhan, art released from my choral song, and do thou, swift Tegean, keep in mute silence thy tuneful tortoise-shell \(^b\); other choirs doth my song demand. 'Tis enough to lure the Naiads hither, queens of the wave, and the lord of the flashing fire, weary still and glowing with the Sicilian anvil's heat.\(^c\) Thebes, lay down thy sinful arms awhile \(^d\): I would fain make revel for a friend I love. Cup after cup, lad!—nay, trouble not to count them! Tune the tardy lyre! Toil and Care, avaunt! while I sing of the baths that sparkle with bright marbles, and while my Clio, wantoning in ivy chaplets and free from the sober laurel, makes sport for Etruseus. Come then, ye Nymphs of the waters, turn hither your clear countenances and bind up your glass-green tresses with tender vine-shoots, your bodies all unclothed as when ye emerge from the deep springs and torture your Satyr-lovers with the sight. You, who with guilt have defamed the

\(^a\) He refers to his Thebaid, which recounted the impious strife of the brethren, Eteocles and Polynices.
Salmacis et viduae Cebrenidos arida luctu flumina et Herculei praedatrix eedat alumi. vos mihi, quae Latium septenaque culmina, nymphae, incolitis Thybrimque novis attollitis undis, quas praecéps Amien atque exceptura natatus Virgo iuvat Marsasque nives et frigora deccens Marcia, praeccelsis quarum vaga molibus unda crescit et innumero pendens transmittitur arcu—:

vestrum opus aggredimur, vestra est, quam carmine molli

pando, domus. non umquam aliis habitastis in antris ditius. ipsa manus tenuit Cytherea mariti monstravitque artes: seu vilis flamma caminos ureret, ipsa faces volueram succeduit Amorum. non hue admissae Thasos aut undosa Carystos, maeret onyx longe, queriturque exclusus ophites: sola nitet flavis Nomaduni decisa metallis purpura, sola cavo Phrygiae quam Synnados antro ipse eruentavit maculis lucentibus Attis, quasque Tyrus nives secat et Sidonia rupes. vix locus Eurotae, viridis cum regula longo

* Salmacis enticed Hermaphroditus into her waters and united herself indissolubly to him. Cebrenis is Oenone. Hylas, ward of Hercules, was drawn by a nymph into the spring where he was getting water.

b Two famous aqueducts, excellent for swimming in and drinking respectively, from the purity of the one and the honour of the streams, I care not to solicit: far hence remove thou, O Salmaeis, with thy deceiving fount, and the river of Cebrenis left forlorn, that grief made dry, and the ravisher of Hereules' young ward! But ye Nymphs who dwell in Latium and on the Seven Heights and make Thybris swell with your fresh waters, ye whom headlong Anio delights and the Maiden destined to welcome the swimmer, and Marcia that brings down the Marsian snow and cold, ye whose travelling waves flood through the lofty masonry and are carried high in air over countless arches—yours is the work I fain would sing, yours the home whereof my gentle verse doth tell. Never in other grottos dwelt ye more sumptuously. Cytherea herself guided her lord's hand, and taught him skill; and that no baser flame might seorch the furnace, herself she kindled the brands of her winged Loves thereunder. Neither Thasos nor wave-lashed Carystos are suffered here; far off the onyx mourns, and the serpent-stone rejected makes complaint; only the porphyry gleams, hewn from the Nomads' tawny rocks, only that which in the hollow caves of Phrygian Synnas Attis bedewed with the bright drops of his own blood, and the snow-white cliffs that Tyre and Sidon quarry. Scare is there space for stone from coolness of the other. The "Maiden" fed several baths, including those of Agrippa.

---

a No emendation of the text is convincing here. It is not certain whether there is any allusion to marble of Tyre and Sidon, of which nothing is otherwise known. The parallel in i. 2. 151 suggests rather a comparison with Tyrian dye, or, as Slater conjectures, with the purple "sindon" (linen garment) of a guest at the banquet; hence he would read "quaeque Tyri vincas fucatam sindonarupes," "marble of a deeper purple than fine linen dyed at Tyre." Synnada distinctu variat. non limina cessant, effulgent camerae, vario fastigia vitro in species animosque nitent. stupet ipse beatas circumplexus opes et pareius imperat ignis. multus ubique dies, radiis ubi culmina totis perforat atque alio sol improbus uritur aestu. nil ibi plebeium: nusquam Temesaea notabis aera, sed argento felix propellitur unda argentoque eadit labrisque nitentibus instat delicias mirata suas et abire reesusat.
extra autem niveo qui margine caerulius amnis vivit et in summum fundo1 patet omnis ab imo, cui non ire laeu pigrosque exsolvere amietus suadeat? hoe mallet nascei Cytherea profundo, hie te perspicuum melius, Narcisse, vides, hie velox Hecate velit et deprena lavari. quid nunc strata solo referam tabulata crepantis auditura pilas, ubi languidus ignis inerrat aedibus et tenuem volvunt hypocausta vaporem? nee si Baianis veniat novus hospes ab oris, talia despieiet—fas sit componere magnis parva—Neronea nee qui modo lotus in unda, hie iterum sudare neget. macte, oro, nitenti ingenio euraque puer! tecum ista senescant et tua iam melius discat fortuna renasci!

1 in summum fundo s; in fundum summum M.

See note on i. 1. 42.

The baths of Nero on the Campus Martius.

62
the Eurotas, where the long line of green picks out the marble of Synnas. The doorways yield not in splendour, the ceilings are radiant, the gables glitter with mosaics of pictured life. The very fire is astounded at the riches he encompasses, and tempers the fierceness of his sway. Everywhere is flooding light, where the sun pierces the roof with all his rays, and, spite of all his fierceness, is scorched by a heat that is not his own. Nought is common there, nowhere will you mark bronze of Temese, but from silver is the glad wave poured and into silver it falls, and marvelling at its own beauty stands poised upon the gleaming brim and refuses to go its way. But the dark-blue stream without, running gaily between snow-white banks, all clear to see from lowest depth to surface—whom would it not tempt to throw off his lazy robe and plunge into the water? From these deeps had Cytherea chosen to be born; here, Narcissus, hadst thou seen thyself more clearly; here would swift Hecate fain bathe, e'en though discovered. Why now should I tell of the floors laid upon the earth, destined to hear the noise of balls, where languidly creeps the warmth about the house and a scant haze rolls upward from the furnaces below? Such beauty would no guest despise, though fresh from the shore of Baiae, nor, if I may compare great things with small, would one who had bathed of late in Nero's baths refuse to sweat here once more. A blessing, Claudius, on thy brilliant cleverness and careful thought! may this work grow old with thee, and thy fortune learn to rise to a new and more glorious birth.
Et Phoebus pater et severa Pallas et Musae procul ite feriatae:
Iani vos revocabimus Kalendis.
Saturnus mihi compede exsoluta et multo gravidus mero December et ridens Iocus et Sales protervi ad-int, dum refero diem beatum laeti Caesaris ebriamque aparchen.¹

Vix Aurora novos movebat ortus, iam bellaria² linea pluebant — hune rorem veniens profudit eurus:
quiequid nobile Ponticis nucetis, fecundis cadit aut iugis Idymes: quod ramis pia germinat Damascos, et quod percoquit ebriosa Caunos,³ largis gratuikutum cadit rapinis: molles gaioli lucuntulique, et massis Amerina non perustis et mustaceus et latente palma praegnates caryotides cadebant.

¹ ebriamque aparchen (i.e. ἀπαρχή, originally "first-fruits," "first offering," then "feast," as in Plut. 40 b) Phillimore: parcen M, pacem Pol., noctem R. Thomson, etc.
² bellaria S: vellaria M.
³ ebriosa Caunos Walter: ebosia caunos M, aestuosa Imhof, Ebosea Vollmer, arbor Inda cannas Ellis, et quod praeacoquit Ebosia cannis Lafaye and Slater.

Saturn was put in chains by Jupiter, but set free, according to popular belief, on his festival.

A rope was stretched across the amphitheatre, from
VI. THE KALENDS OF DECEMBER

An account of an entertainment given by the Emperor to the people during the Saturnalia. Suetonius (Domit. 4) mentions also chariot-races, sham fights, naval battles in the Amphitheatre, combats of gladiators, beasts, etc., and various distributions of money and food to the people.

Hence, father Phoebus and stern Pallas! Away, ye Muses, go, keep holiday; we will call you back at the New Year. But Saturn, slip your fetters and come hither, and December tipsy with much wine, and laughing Mirth and wanton Wit, while I recount the glad festival of our merry Caesar and the banquet’s drunken revel.

Scarce was the new dawn stirring, when already sweetmeats were raining from the line, such was the dew the rising East wind was scattering; the famous fruit of Pontic nut-groves, or of Idume’s fertile slopes, all that devout Damascus grows upon its boughs or thirsty Caunus ripens, falls in a generous profusion. Biscuits and melting pastries, Amerian fruit not over-ripe, must-cakes, and bursting dates from invisible palms were showering down, which the dainties were shaken down among the people, cf. Mart. viii. 78. 7.

d. i.e., dates; Idume often in Statius for Palestine, cf. Luc. iii. 216.
e. i.e., plums (damsons).
c. Caunus in Asia Minor was famous for its figs. Ebosia, the ms. reading, would refer to Ebusus, one of the Balearic isles, modern Iviza, which Pliny praises for its figs; but the combination with Caunos, “the fig-town of Ebusus” (Vollmer), is awkward. Slater, following Lafaye (Notes on the Silvae, Paris, 1896), reads “et quod praecoquit Ebosia cannis.”

f. So-called because they were in the shape of human figures, i.e. little “Gaii.”
g. From Ameria came apples and pears.
non tantis Hyas inserena nimbis terras obruit aut soluta Plias, qualis per cuneos hiems Latinos plebem grandine contudit serena. 25
ducat nubila Iuppiter per orbem et latis pluvias minetur agris, dum nostri Io vis hi ferantur imbres.

Ece autem caveas subit per omnis insignis specie, decora cultu plebes altera non minor sedente. 30
hi panaria candidasque mappas subveient epulasque lautiores; illi marcida vina largiuntur: Idaeos totidem putes ministros.
orbem, qua melior severiorque est, et gentes alis insimul$^1$ togatas, et cum tot populos, beate,$^2$ pascas, hunc Annona diem superba nescit.$^3$ i nunc saecula compara, Vetustas, antiqui Io vis aureumque tempus: 40 non sic libera vina tunc fluebant nec tardum seges occupabat annum, una vescitur omnis ordo mensa.
parvi, femina, plebs, eques, senatus: libertas reverentiam remisit. 45 et tu quin etiam—quis hoc vacare,$^4$ quis promittere possit hoc deorum?—nobiscum socias dapes inisti.
iam se, quisquis is est, inops, beatus, convivam dueis esse gloriatur.

Hos inter fremitus novosque luxus spectandi levis effugit voluptas:

$^1$ insimul $^\tau$: insemel M.
$^2$ beate Hessius and Lafaye: beata M.
Not with such torrents do stormy Hyades o’erwhelm the earth or Pleiades dissolved in rain, as the hail that from a sunny sky lashed the people in the theatre of Rome. Let Jupiter send his tempests through the world and threaten the broad fields, while our own Jove sends us showers like these!

But lo! another multitude, handsome and well-dressed, as numerous as that upon the benches, makes its way along all the rows. Some carry baskets of bread and white napkins and more luxurious fare; others serve languorous wine in abundant measure; so many cupbearers of Ida\(^a\) would you think them. Thou dost nourish alike the circle of the noble and austere and the folk that wear the toga, and since, O generous lord, thou dost feed so many multitudes, haughty Annona knoweth nought of this festival.\(^b\) Come now, Antiquity, compare with ours the age of primeval Jove and the times of gold: less bounteously then did the vintage flow, not thus did the harvest anticipate the tardy year. One table serves every class alike, children, women, people, knights, and senators: freedom has loosed the bonds of awe. Nay even thyself—what god could have such leisure, or vouchsafe as much?—thou didst come and share our banquet. And now everyone, be he rich or poor, boasts himself the Emperor’s guest.

Amid such excitements and strange luxuries the pleasure of the scene flies quickly by: women un-

\(^a\) i.e., so many Ganymedes.

\(^b\) The feast is free and gratis, therefore the price of bread has nothing to do with it.

\(^3\) nescit \(M\): nescis \(S\).

\(^4\) vacare \(Phillimore\): vocare \(M\): vocari \(Ettingius\).
STATIUS

stat sexus rudis inseinsque ferri;
ut pugnas capit improbus viriles!
credas ad Tanain ferumque Phasim Thermodontiaeas calere turmas.
hic audax subit ordo pumilorum, quos natura brevis statim peraeta nodosum semel in globum ligavit.
edunt vulnera conscrumque dextras et mortem sibi—qua manu!—minantur.
ridet Mars pater et cruenta Virtus casuraeque vagis grues rapinis mirantur pugiles feroeiores.

Iam noctis proprioribus sub umbris dives sparsio quos agit tumultus!
hic intrant faciles emi puellae, hic agnoscitur omne, quod theatris aut forma placet aut probatur arte.
hoe plaudunt grege Lydiae tumentes, illie cymbala tinnulaeque Gades, illie agmina confremunt Syrorum.
hie plebs scenica quique comminitis permutant vitreis gregale sulfur.

Inter quae subito eadunt volatu immensae volucrum per astra nubes, quas NIlus sacer horridusque Phasis, quas udo Numidae legunt sub austro.
desunt qui rapiant sinusque pleni gaudent, dum nova luera comparantur.
tollunt innumerās ad astra voces Saturnalia principis sonantes.
trained to the sword take their stand, daring, how recklessly, men's battles! you would think Thermodon's bands were furiously fighting by Tanais or barbarous Phasis. Then comes a bold array of dwarfs, whose term of growth abruptly ended has bound them once for all into a knotted lump. They give and suffer wounds, and threaten death—with fists how tiny! Father Mars and Bloodstained Valour laugh, and cranes, waiting to swoop on scattered booty, marvel at the fiercer pugilists.

Now as the shades of night draw on, what commotion attends the scattering of largess! Here enter maidens easily bought; here is recognized all that in theatres wins favour or applause for skill or beauty. Here a crowd of buxom Lydian girls are clapping hands, here tinkle the cymbals of Cadiz, there troops of Syrians are making uproar, there are theatre-folk and they who barter common sulphur for broken glass.

Amid the tumult dense clouds of birds swoop suddenly down through the air, birds from holy Nile and frost-bound Phasis, birds that Numidians capture 'neath the dripping South. Too few are there to seize them all, exultantly they grasp their fill and ever clutch fresh plunder. Countless voices are raised to heaven, acclaiming the Emperor's festival; with

---

\(^a\) i.e., Amazons.

\(^b\) These dwarfs seem fiercer fighters than the old enemies of the cranes, viz. the Pygmies (Hom. II, iii. 3).

\(^c\) Rag-and-bone men plying the same trade are mentioned by Martial, i. 41. 4. For sulphur matches cf. also Martial, x. 3. 3.

\(^d\) Flamingos (Nile), pheasants (Phasis), guinea-fowl (Numidia).

---

1 pugiles Friederich: pumilos M. et dulci dominum favore clamant:
hoc solum vetuit licere Caesar.

Vixdum caerula nox subibat orbem, descendit media nitens harena densas flammeus orbis inter umbras vincens Gnosiacae facem coronae.
conlucet polus ignibus nihilque obscureae patitur licere nocti.

fugit pigra Quies inersque Somnus haec cernens alias abit in urbes.
quis spectacula, quis iocos licentes, quis convivia, quis dapes inemptas, largi flumina quis canat Lyaei?

iam iam deficio tuoque Baccho\(^1\)
in serum trahor ebrius soporem.

Quos ibit procul hic dies per annos!
quam nullo sacer exolescet aevō!
dum montes Latii paterque Thybris.
dum stabit tua Roma dumque terris quod reddis Capitolium manebit.

\(^1\) tuoque Baccho \(\hat{s}\): tuaque Baccho \(M\). loving enthusiasm they salute their Lord. This liberty\(^a\) alone did Caesar forbid them.

Scarce was dusky night shrouding the world, when through the dense gloom a ball of flame fell gleaming into the arena's midst, surpassing the brightness of the Gnosian crown.\(^b\) The sky was ablaze with fire, and suffered not the reign of darkness: sluggish Quiet fled, and lazy Sleep betook himself to other cities at the sight. Who can sing of the spectacle, the unrestrained mirth, the banqueting, the unbought feast, the lavish streams of wine? Ah! now I faint, and drunken with thy liquor drag myself at last to sleep.

For how many years shall this festival abide! Never shall age destroy so holy a day! While the hills of Latium remain and father Tiber, while thy Rome stands and the Capitol thou hast restored to the world, it shall continue.

\(^a\) \textit{i.e.}, to salute him as "Dominus": for Domitian's titles of "Dominus et Deus" see Suet. \textit{Dom}. 13.

\(^b\) The constellation called Ariadne's crown.
LIBER II

STATIUS MELIORI SUO SALUTEM

Et familiaritas nostra qua gaudeo. Melior, vir optime nee minus in iudicio litterarum quam in omni vitae colore tersissime, et ipsa opuseculorum quae tibi trado condicio sic posita est ut totus hie ad te\(^1\) liber mens etiam sine epistola spectet.\(^2\) Primum enim habet Glauciam nostrum, cuius gratissima infantia\(^3\) et qualem plerumque infelices sortiuntur (apud te complexus amabam) iam non tibi. Huius amissi recens vulnus, ut scis, epicedio prosecutus sum adeo festinanter, ut excusandam habuerim affectibus tuis celeritatem. Nee nunc eam apud te iacto, qui nosti, sed et ceteris indico, ne quis asperiore lima carmen examinet et a confuso scriptum et dolenti datum, cum paene supervacua sint tarda solacia. Polli mei villa Surrentina quae sequitur, debuit a me vel in honorem eloquentiae eius dili-gentius dici, sed amicus ignovit. In arborem certe tuam. Melior, et psittacum scis a me leves libellos quasi epigrammati loco scriptos. Eandem exigebat

\(^1\) ad te Vollmer: altae \(M\), alter \(\ddash\).

\(^2\) spectet Baehrens: expectet \(M\). (Baehr. inserted ad te before spectet.)

\(^3\) gratissima infantia \(M\): gratissimam infantiam \(\ddash\).
BOOK II

Statius to his Friend Melior: Greeting!

Not only our friendship wherein I take such pleasure, my excellent Melior, who are as faultless in your literary judgement as in every phase of life, but also the actual circumstances of the poems I am presenting to you are responsible for the whole of this book of mine being directed towards you, even without an introductory letter. For its first subject is our beloved Glaucias, whose charming infancy—a charm so often bestowed on the unfortunate—is lost to you now; I loved him when I took him in my arms at your house. While that wound was yet fresh, I wrote as you know a poem of consolation, with such dispatch that I felt my promptness owed an apology to your feelings. Nor am I boasting of it now to you who know, but warning others not to criticize too sharply a poem written in distress and sent to one in sorrow, seeing that sympathy must be timely or else superfluous. The Surrentine Villa of my friend Pollio which follows should have been written with greater care if only in honour of his eloquent tongue, but he has displayed a friend’s indulgence. Certainly the trifling pieces on your tree, Melior, and on the parrot were as you know dashed off like epigrams. A like facility of pen was stili facilitatem leo mansuetus, quem in amphitheatro prostratum frigidum erat, saeratissimo Imperatoris ni statim traderem Ad Ursum quoque nostrum, iuvenem candidissimum et sine iactura desidiae doctissimum, scriptam de amisso puero consolationem super ea quae ipsi debeo huic libro libenter inserui, quia honorem eius tibi laturus accepto est. Cludit\textsuperscript{1} volumen genethliacon Lucani, quod Polla Argentaria, rarissima uxorum, cum hunc diem forte consuleremus, imputari sibi voluit. Ego non potui maiorem tanti auctoris habere reverentiam quam quod laudes eius dicturus hexametros meos timui. haec qualiacumque sunt. Melior carissime, si tibi non displicuerint, a te publicum accipiant; si minus, ad me revertantur.

\textsuperscript{1} est. cludit Madvig; excludit M. demanded by the Tame Lion, for had I not presented him to His Most Sacred Majesty while still lying in the amphitheatre, all the effect would have been missed. Then there is the consolatory piece I wrote on the loss of his slave-boy for our friend Ursus, a youth of blameless life and an accomplished poet, who wastes no time in idleness; I was glad to include it in this book, quite apart from the debt I owe to him, for he will credit you with the honour he derives therefrom. The volume is concluded by the Birthday Ode to Lucan, for which Polla Argen-taria, rarest of wives, desired to be held accountable, when we happened to be considering the celebration of the day. I could not show a deeper reverence for so great a poet than by distrusting my own hexameters when about to sing his praises. These pieces, my excellent Melior, such as they are, if you like them, give them to the world; if not, let them return to me.
GLAUCIAS ATEDII MELIORIS DELICATUS

Quod tibi praerepti, Melior, solamen alumni, improbus ante rogos et adhuc vivente favilla ordiar? abruptis etiam nune flebile venis vulneris hiatus, magnaeque patet via lubrica plagae, cum iam egomet cantus et verba medentia saevus consero, tu planctus lamentaque fortia mavis odistique chelyn surdaque averteris aure.

intempesta cano: citius me tigris abactis fetibus orbatique velint audire leones.

nec si tergeminum Sicula de virgine carmen affluat aut silvis chelys intellecta ferisque, mulecat insanos gemitus. stat pectore demens luctus et ad moto latrant praecordia tactu.

Nemo vetat: satiare malis aegrumque dolorem libertate doma. iam flendi expleta voluptas iamque preces fessus non indignaris amicas?

*a i.e., the wound in all its length, a "path" leading to a vital spot.
*b The Sirens, whose number is variously given as two or as three; in ii. 2. 1, Statius places them at Sorrento.
In this and the following Epicedia Statius shows the influence both of philosophic consolation such as we see it in Seneca, or the Consolatio ad Liviam, and also of the rhetorical schools with their ἐπιτάφιοι and παραμυθητικοί, divided into regular parts, such as Praise of the departed, description of the illness and death, description of the burial, welcome of the soul of the dead one in the under-world, etc. Statius's treatment is free, as in the Epithalamium; mythological allusion is frequent, and was undoubtedly part of the poetic convention of the time, and therefore should not be condemned as frigid and implying a lack of true feeling. The reader may compare earlier poems of the same kind, e.g. Horace, C. i. 24; Propertius, iii. 18, iv. 11; Ovid, Am. iii. 9. Two poems of Martial (vi. 28, 29) were also written on the same occasion.

How can I begin to console thee, Melior, for thy foster-son untimely taken? How can I heartlessly sing before the pyre, while the ashes are still aglow? The lamentable wound gapes wide with sundered veins, and the dangerous path of the great gash lies open. Even while I relentlessly compose my spells and healing words, thou dost prefer to beat the breast and cry aloud, and hatest my lyre and turnest away with deaf ear. Untimely is my song: sooner would a despoiled lioness or tigress robbed of her cubs give ear to me. Not if the triple chant of the Sicilian maidens were wafted hither, or the harp that beasts and woodlands understood, would they soothe thy distracted wailing. Demented Grief hath his stand in thy heart; at a touch thy breast heaves and sobs.

Have thy fill of bitterness: none forbids thee. Overcome, by giving it rein, the malady of thy distress. At last is thy luxury of weeping sated? At last art thou wearied out and deignest to hear a iamne canam? lacrimis en et mea carmina in ipso ore\(^1\) natant tristesque cadunt in verba liturae. ipse etenim tecum nigrae solemnia pompae spectatumque Urbi scelus et puerile feretrum produxi, saevos damnati turis acervos plorantemque animam supra sua funera vidi, teque patrum gemitus superantem et brachia matrum complexumque rogos ignemque haurire parantem vix tenui similis comes offendique tenendo. et nunc, heu, vittis et frontis honore soluto infaustus vates versa mea pectora tecum plango lyra, sed tu\(^2\) comitem sociumque doloris, si merui luctusque tui consortia sensi, iam lenis patiare precor. me fulmine in ipso audivere patres, ego iuxta busta profusis matribus atque piis eccini solacia natis et mihi, cum proprios gemerem defectus ad ignes —quem, Natura!—patrem. nec te lugere severus areeo, sed confer gemitus pariterque fleamus.

Iamdudum dignos aditus laudumque tuarum, o merito dilecte puer, primordia quaerens distrahor. hinc anni stantes in limine vitae, hinc me forma rapit, rapit inde modestia praecox et pudor et tenero probitas maturior aevi. o ubi purpureo suffusus sanguine candor sidereique orbes radiataque lumina caelo et castigatae collecta modestia frontis

---

\(^1\) carmina in ipso ore $M$: carmine in ipso ora Friedrich.
\(^2\) sed tu Vollmer: et diu $M$, at diri $\exists$, at dici Slater.

---

\(^a\) The souls of those untimely dead were supposed to bewail their lot, cf. Virg. Aen. vi. 427 "infantumque animae..."
friend's entreaty? Now shall I sing? Lo! even in my mouth my song is choked with sobs, the words are blotted by falling tears. For I myself led forth with thee the solemn line of sable mourners and the boyish bier, a crime for the City to behold; I saw the cruel heaps of incense doomed to destruction and the soul wailing above its own corpse; thee too, as thou didst break through sobbing fathers and mothers that would stay thee, and didst embrace the pyre and prepare to swallow the flames, could I scarce restrain, thy comrade in like case, and offended by restraining. And now, alas! a bard of evil, my fillets unbound and the glory departed from my brow, I reverse my lyre and beat my breast with thee; but be assuaged, I pray thee, and suffer me as partner of thy mourning, if I have so deserved and shared thy sorrow. In the very hour of calamity fathers have heard my voice; by the very pyre have I sung solace to prostrate mothers and loving children—ay, to myself also, when swooning beside kindred flames I mourned, O Nature, what a father! Nor do I sternly forbid thee to lament; nay, let us mingle our tears and weep together.

Long have I sought distractedly, beloved boy, a worthy approach and prelude to thy praises. Here thy boyhood, standing on life's threshold, calls me, there thy beauty, there a modesty beyond thy years and honour and probity too ripe for thy tender age. Ah! where is that fair complexion flushed by the glow of health, those starry orbs whose glance is radiant with heaven's light, where the chaste comflentes." For souls hovering about the funeral pyre cf. Theb. v. 163, xii. 55: they are often so represented on Attic vases.

Quid mirum, tanto si te pius alter honorat funere? tu domino requies portusque senectae, 1 2 3

\[1 \text{ brachia, quo } \textit{Saftien} : \text{brachiaque } M.\]
\[2 \text{ tumentem } \textit{Pol. (from P)} : \text{timentem } M.\]
\[3 \text{ ipso } \ldots \text{poste } \bar{s} : \text{ipsos } \ldots \text{postes } M.\]

\[\textit{a} \text{ Always much admired in ancient times; } \text{“castigata”}\]
posure of that low "brow, the artless curls above and the soft line of lovely hair? Where is the mouth that prattled with fond complainings, those kisses redolent, as he clung, of vernal blossoms, his tears mingled with smiles, and his accents steeped in Hybla's honey? A serpent would hush its hissing and cruel stepdames be fain to do his bidding. Nothing false do I add to his true beauty. Alas! that milk-white throat! those arms that were ever about his master's neck! Where now is that not far distant hope of coming manhood, the longed-for glory of his cheeks, that beard that thou oft didst swear by? The remorseless hour and Time the enemy have swept all to ashes: to us is left but to remember. Who will beguile thy thoughts with the merry chatter thou didst love? who will allay thy cares and brooding mind? Who will appease thee when incensed with angry passion and storming at the serving-folk, and divert thee from thy fury to himself? Who, when the feast is begun and the wine poured out, will snatch it away e'en from thy lips and confound all things in delightful rapine? Who will climb on thy couch in the morning and whisper thee awake, and clasping thee tight delay thy going, and from the very gate recall thee to his kisses? Who will be the first to meet thee on thy return, and leap to thy kiss and thy embrace, and put his tiny arms about thy shoulders? Mute is the house, I vow, and lonely the hearth; desolation is in the chambers and a dreary silence at the board.

What wonder if thy good foster-father honours thee with so grand a funeral? thou wert to thy lord (= "controlled, narrowed down") is used of a horse's mane, Theb. ix. 687; cf. also vi. 872, Ov. Am. i. 5. 21.
tu modo deliciae, dulees modo pectore curae.
non te barbaricae versabat turbo catastae, nec mixtus Phariis venalis mercibus infans compositoque sales meditataque verba locutus quaesisti lascivus erum tardeque parasti.
hic domus, hinc ortus, dominique penatibus olim carus uterque parens atque in tua gaudia liber, ne quererere genus. raptum sed protinus alvo sustulit exsultans ac prima lucida voce asta salutantem dominus sibi mente dicevit, amplexusque sinu tuit et genuisse putavit.
fas mihi sanctorum venia dixisse parentum, tuque, oro, Natura, sinus, cui prima per orbem iura animis sancire datum: non omnia sanguis proximus aut serie generis demissa propago alligat; interius nova saepe adscitaque serpunt pignora conexit. natos genuisse necesse est, elegisse iuvat. tenero sic blandus Achilli semfer Haemonium vincebat Pelea Chiron.
nec senior Peleus natum comitatus in arma Troica, sed claro Phoenix haerebat alumno.
optabat longe reditus Pallantis ovantis Evander, fidus pugnas spectatbat Acoetes.
cumque procul nitidis genitor cessaret ab astris, fluctivagus voluerem comebat Persea Dictys.
quid referam altricum victas pietate parentes?
quid te post cineres deceptaque funera matris

---

a Such as slaves were commonly displayed on.
b The "lifting-up" of a new-born child by the father signified his recognition of it as his own. On this occasion Melior shows that he has adopted the child.
c The son of Danaë by Zeus. Dictys was a fisherman of Seriphus, the island to which Danaë and her babe were the peaceful haven of his old age, thou wert now his delight, now the sweet object of his care. No outlandish revolving stage \(a\) turned thee about, no slave-boy wert thou amid Egyptian wares, to utter studied jests and well-conned speeches, and by impudent tricks to seek and slowly win a master. Here was thy home, here wast thou born, both thy parents have long been loved in their master's house, and for thy joy were they freed, lest thou shouldst complain of thy birth. Nay, no sooner wert thou taken from the womb, when thy lord exultantly raised thee,\(b\) and as thy first cry greeted the shining stars appointed thee for his own and held thee close in his bosom and deemed himself thy sire. May the sanctities of parents forgive my words, and do thou suffer me, O Nature, to whom it is given to hallow the earliest ties between soul and soul throughout the world: bonds of blood and lineage are not all; often do alien or adopted children creep further into our hearts than our own kindred. Of necessity we beget sons, of our pleasure do we choose them. Thus by his winning ways the half-beast Chiron supplanted Haeemonian Peleus in young Achilles' favour. Nor did the aged Peleus accompany his son to the fight at Troy, but 'twas Phoenix that stirred not from his pupil's side. Far off Evander prayed for Pallas' victorious return, but faithful Acoetes watched the combat. And when his sire for idleness came not from the shining stars, wave-wandering Dictys tended the winged Perseus.\(c\) Why should I speak of mothers surpassed in their affection by foster-nurses? Why of thee, O Bæculus, who when a treacherous doom had washed in the wooden chest. "volucrem" refers to the winged sandals given him by Hermes to fight Medusa. tutius Inoo reptantem pectore, Bacche?
imam secura patris Tuscis regnabat in undis Ilia, portantem lassabat Romulhus Accam.
vidi ego transertos alieno in robore ramos altius ire suis. et te iam fecerat illi mens animusque patrem, needum moresve decorve:
tu tamen et iunctas\textsuperscript{1} etiam nunc murmure voces vagitumque rudem fletusque infantis amabas.

Ille, velut primos exspiraturum ad austros mollibus in pratis alte flos improbus exstat, sie tener ante diem vultu gressuque superbo vicerat aequales multumque reliquerat annos.
sive catenatis curvatus membra palaestris staret: Amyclaea conceptum matre putares, Oebaliden illo praeceps mutaret Apollo,
Alcides pensaret Hylan: seu Graius\textsuperscript{2} amietu Attica facundi decurreret orsa Menandri:
laudaret gavisa sonum grincemque decorum fregisset rosea lasciva Thalia corona: Maeonium sive ille senem Troiaeque labores diceret aut casus tarde remeantis Ulixis:
ipse pater sensus, ipsi stupuere magistri.
scilicet infausta Lachesis cunabula dextra attigit, et gremio puerum complexa fovebat Invidia: illa genas et adultum eomere crinem, aec monstrare artes et verba infigere, quae nunc plangimus. Herculeos annis aequare labores

\textsuperscript{1} iunctas M2; vinetas M: truncas Bachrens.
\textsuperscript{2} Graius $^$;$ gratus M.

\textsuperscript{a} She was the sister of Semele, the mother of Bacchus.
\textsuperscript{b} Ilia (see note on i. 2. 192) was drowned in the Anio by her father Amulius, but became the wife of the river-god.
Acca was the nurse of Romulus.
84
laid thy mother in ashes nestled more securely in Ino's bosom? a And when Ilia, fearing her sire no more, reigned a queen in Tuscan waters, b Romulus was burdening Acca's arms. I have seen myself shoots grafted on another tree grow higher than their own. And already had thy will and purpose, Melior, made thee his sire, though not yet his charm and goodness; nevertheless thou didst love the words even now mingled with his utterance, and his rude infant cries and tears.

He, like a flower that is doomed to perish at the first breath of the South wind, yet with reckless daring lifts high its head in the lush meadow, young as he was had early surpassed his peers in pride of step and countenance, and had far outstripped his years. Did he stand with limbs bent in the locked wrestling-bout, you would have deemed him born of an Amyclaean mother c; Apollo would soon have exchanged for him the son of Oebalus, d Aleides had bartered Hylas; if in Grecian dress he declaimed the Attic speech of fluent Menander, Thalia would have rejoiced and praised his accents, and in wanton mood have disordered his comely locks with a rosy garland; or if he recited the old Maeonian and the toils of Troy, or the mishaps and slow returning of Ulysses, his very father, his very teachers were amazed at his understanding. Truly did Lachesis e touch his cradle with ill-omened hand, and Envy clasped the babe and held him in her bosom: the one fondled his cheeks and luxuriant curls, the other taught him his skill and inspired those words over which we now make moan. His rising years, though a i.e., Spartan, the Spartan youths being famed for their wrestling. b i.e., Narcissus. c One of the Fates.

coeperat adsurgens, sed adhuc infantia iuxta; iam tamen et validi gressus mensuraque maior cultibus et visae puero decrescere vestes, eum tibi quas vestes, quae non gestamina mitis festinabat erus! brevibus non stringere\(^1\) laenis pectora et angustante alas\(^2\) artare lacerna; enormes non ille sinus, sed semper ad annos texta legens modo puniceo velabat amietu, nunc herbas imitante sinu, nunc dulce rubenti murice, nunc vivis digitos incendere gemmis gaudebat: non turba comes, non munera cessant: sola verecundo deerat praetexta decori. Haec fortuna domus. subitas inimica levavit Parca manus. quo, diva, feros gravis exseris ungues? non te forma movet, non te lacrimabilis aetas? hunc nec saeva viro potuisset carpere Proene, nec fera crudeles Colchis durasset in iras, editus Aeolia nec si foret iste Creusa; torvus ab hoc Athamas insanos flecteret arcus, hunc quamquam Hectoros eineres Troiamque per-turribus e Phrygiis flesset missurus Ulixes septima lux, et iam frigentia lumina torpent, iam complexa manu crinem tenet infera Iuno.

\(^1\) non stringere Postgate: constringere \(M.\)

\(^2\) angustante alas Postgate: angusta telas \(M.\)

\(a\) Or, keeping the ms. reading, translate "he would fasten a short tunic on thy chest, and contract the web with a narrow cloak." Cf. Theb. vi. 74 ff. In any case the meaning, first made clear by Macnaghten (Journ. Phil., 1891), is that Glaucias was always given clothes which fitted exactly, neither too large nor too small.

\(b\) The toga with a purple border, worn by free-born children up to the age of 16. Glaucias was slave-born.
infancy still was near, had begun to draw level with the toils of Hercules; yet already was he firm of stride, and his height outstripped his dress, and the garments seemed to shrink upon the lad, for what garments, what apparel did not thy kindly lord hasten to procure thee? He constrained not thy breast in a narrow tunic, nor cramped thy shoulders in a straitening cloak; nor did he drape thee in large, ill-fitting folds, but ever suiting the raiment to thy years now garbed thee in scarlet, now in grass-green clothing, now in the soft blush of purple, or rejoiced to kindle the flash of gems upon thy fingers; unfailing was thy attendant train, unfailing were his gifts; the bordered robe alone was lacking to thy modest beauty.

Such was the fortune of that house. Suddenly Fate lifted her hand to strike. Wherefore, O goddess, dost thou banefully unsheathe those cruel talons? Doth not his beauty move thee, or his piteous tender age? Fierce Procne would not have had the heart to rend him for her lord, nor would the savage Colchian have persisted in her cruel ire, even though he had been the son of Aeolian Creusa; from him would grim Athamas have turned aside his maddened bow; Ulysses though hating Hector’s ashes and Troy full sore would have wept to hurl him from the Phrygian towers. "Tis the seventh day, and already those eyes are dull and cold, and Juno of the underworld hath clasped him and seized

---

a Procne slew her son Itys and gave him as food to her husband Tereus; Medea was deserted by Jason for Creusa; Aeolian = Corinthian, because Sisyphus, King of Corinth, was son of Aeolus, cf. "Sisyphii portus," Theb. ii. 380; Athamas in madness slew his son Learchus; Astyanax, son of Hector, was flung by Ulysses from the walls of Troy.
ille tamen, Pareis fragiles urgentibus annos, te vultu moriente videt linguaque cadente murmurat: in te omnes vacui iam pectoris efflat reliquias, solum meminit solumque vocantem exaudit tibique ora movet, tibi verba relinquit et prohibet gemitus consolaturque dolentem.
gratam est, Fata, tamen, quod non mors lenta iacentis exedit puerile decus, manesque subivit integer et nullo temeratus corpora damno, qualis erat.

Quid ego exsequias et prodiga flammis
dona loquar maestoque ardentia funera luxu?
quod tibi purpureo tristis rogus aggere erevit, quod Cilicum flores, quod munera graminis Indi, quodque Arabes Phariique Palaestinique liquores arsuram lavere comam? cupit omnia ferre prodigus et totos Melior succendere censu.
desertas exosus opes: sed non capit ignis invidus, atque artae desunt in munera flammae.
horror habet sensu, qualem te funere summo atque rogum iuxta, Melior placidissime quondam, extimui! tune ille hilaris comisque videri?
unde animi saevaque manus et barbarus horror,
dum modo fusus humi lucem aversaris iniquam, nune torvus pariter vestes et pectora rumpis dilectosque premis visus et frigida lambis oseula? erant illie genitor materque iacentis maesta, sed attoniti te spectavere parentes.

quid mirum? plebs euneta nefas et praevia flerunt agmina, Flaminio quae limite Molvius agger

1 Palaestinique Selden: palam est vidique M.

---
a Saffron, frankincense.
b Myrrh, balsam.
in her hand the lock of hair. Yet he, though the Fates press hard upon his frail life, beholds thee with his dying vision and murmurs thy name with faltering tongue; to thee he gasps out the last breath from his exhausted frame, thee alone he remembers, thy cry alone he hears, for thee his lips are moved and his last words spoken, as he bids thee not to mourn and consoles thy grief. Yet we thank thee. O Fate, that no lingering death devoured his boyish charm as he lay, that he went inviolate to the shades, just as he was, without touch of harm upon his body.

Why should I tell of the funeral rites, the gifts flung prodigally to the flames, the melancholy pomp of the blazing pyre? How thou didst heap the purples high on the sad pile, how Cilician blooms and gifts of Indian herbs,\textsuperscript{a} and juices of Arabia and Palestine and Egypt\textsuperscript{b} steeped the hair that was to burn? Fain would Melior bring all without stinting, and consume whole fortunes in loathing of his wealth laid desolate; but the grudging fire avails not, and the puny flames are too few to burn the gifts. Awe lays hold upon my heart. O Melior, once so calm, how distraught wert thou in that deadly hour beside the pyre, how I feared thee! Was that the merry, kindly face we knew? Whence that frenzy, those merciless hands, those spasms of wild grief as thou liest prostrate on the ground shunning the cruel light, or fiercely tearest thy clothes and bosom, straining the dear face to thee and kissing the cold lips? The father and sorrowing mother of the dead one were there, but on thee they gazed awe-stricken—what wonder? All the people mourned the deadly blow, and crowds escorted thee on the Flaminian road transvehit, immitterus flammis dum tristibus infans traditur, et gemitum formaque aevoque\(^1\) meretur: talis in Isthmiaeos prolatus ab aequore portus naufragus imposita iacuit sub matre Palaemon; sic et in anguiferae ludentem gramine Lernae rescissum squamis avidus bibit ignis\(^2\) Ophelten.

Pone metus Letique minas desiste vereri: illum nec terno latrabit Cerberus ore, nulla soror flammis, nulla adsurgentibus hydris terrebit; quin ipse avidae trux navita eumbae interius steriles ripas et adusta subbit litora, ne pnuo dura ascendisse facultas.

Quid mihi gaudenti proles Cyllenia virga nuntiat? estne aliquid tam saevo in tempore laetum? noverat effigies generosique ardua Blaesi ora puer, dum saepe domi nova serta ligantem te videt et similes tergentem peetore ceras. hunc ubi Lethaei lustrantem gurgitis oras Ausonios inter proceres seriemque Quirini adgnovit, timide primum vestigia iungit accessu tacito summosque laccsit amictus, inde magis sequitur; neque enim magis ille trahentem spernit et ignota credit de stirpe nepotum. mox ubi delicias et rari pignus amiei sensit et amissi puerum solacia Blaesi, tollit humo magnaque ligat cervice diuque

\(^1\) aevoque Gulielmus: ac voce M.
\(^2\) ignis Koestlin: anguis M.

\(^a\) See Theb. vi. 54 sqq.
\(^b\) i.e., no Fury. The Furies, often called by Statius “the Sisters,” are represented with torches and snaky hair.
\(^c\) Mercury, who conducted the souls of the dead to the underworld.
across the Mulvian bridge, while an innocent child is given over to the angry flames, and both by his age and by his beauty wins their tears. Such was Palaemon, when his mother flung herself on him as he lay shipwrecked and cast up from the sea in the Isthmian haven; such too Opheltes, whom the serpent tore as he played in the snake-haunted grass of Lerna, when the greedy fire consumed him.\(^a\)

But lay aside thy fears, and be no more in dread of threatening Death: Cerberus with triple jaws will not bark at him, no Sister\(^b\) will terrify him with flames and towering hydras; nay, even the grim sailor of the greedy boat will draw nearer to the barren shores and fire-scorched bank, that the boy’s embarking may be easy.

What message brings the son of Cyllene,\(^c\) waving a glad wand? Can there be aught of joy in so terrible a time? Well did the lad know the likeness and lofty countenance of noble Blaesus, for often had he seen thee at home twining fresh garlands and pressing that image to thy breast. And when he recognized him among the Ausonian nobles and the lineage of Quirinus pacing the shores of Lethe’s stream, he silently drew near and first walked beside him timidly and plucked at his garment’s edge, then followed him more boldly, for as he more boldly plucked the other spurned him not, but thought him an unknown scion of his house. Soon when he knew that the boy was the darling and favourite of a friend so rare, the solace for his lost Blaesus,\(^d\) he raised him from the ground and fastened him about his mighty mighty

\(^a\) The points seems to be that the boy himself was "blaesus," i.e. "stammering," being still under 12, and was so a consolation to Melior for his friend Blaesus.
ipse manu gaudens vehit et, quae munera mollis Elysii, steriles ramos mutasque volucres porgit et obtunso pallentes germine flores.
nec prohibet meminisse tui, sed pectora blandus miscet et alternum pueri partitur amorem.

Hic finis rapto. quin tu iam vulnera sedas et tollis mersum luctu caput? omnia functa aut moritura vides: obeunt noctesque diesque astraque, nec solidis prodest sua machina terris.
nam populus mortale genus plebisque caducae quis fleat interitus? hos bella, hos aequora poseunt;
his amor exitio, furor his et saeva cupidio.
ut sileam morbos; hos ora rigentia Brumae, illos implacido letalis Sirius igni,
hos manet imbrifero pallens Autumnus hiatu.
quiequirinitortus, finem timet, ibimus omnes, ibimus: immensis urnam quatit Aeacus umbris.
ast hie, quem gemimus, felix hominesque deosque et dubios casus et caecae lubrica vitae effugit. immunis fatis. non ille rogavit, non timuit meruitve\(^1\) mori: nos anxia plebes, nos miser. quibus unde dies suprema, quis aevi exitus, incertum, quibus instet fulmen ab astris, quae nubes fatale sonet. nil flecteris istis?
sed flectere libens. ades huc emissus ab atro limine, cui soli euneta impetrare facultas.
Glaucia\(^2\)—insontes animas nee portitor areet nee durae comes ille ferae—: tu pectora mulce,

\(^1\) meruitve \(M\): reuinitve \(Hëinsius\).

\(^2\) Glaucia \(V\): Glaucia si Macnaghten, Glaucia nam \(S\).

---

\(^a\) Slater suggests that "comes" = Cerberus, and "ferae" = Hydra, as in Virg. \(Aen\). vi. 287; Vollmer makes Cerberus the beast, and the comrade a figure found on a wall-painting by the side of Cerberus, and described Lucan, \(Phars\). vi. 702; cf. Sil. It. \(Pan\). xiii. 587.
shoulders, and a long while carried him rejoicing upon his arm, and offered him such gifts as kindly Elysium bears, sterile boughs and songless birds and pale flowers with bruised blossoms. Nor does he forbid him to remember thee, but fondly blends heart with heart, and takes part in turn in the affection of the lad.

It is the end: he is lost to thee. Wilt thou not now assuage thy pain and lift thy grief-sunken head? All that thou seest is dead or doomed to die; nights and days perish, and the stars, nor does the frame of the solid earth avail her. Our race is of mortal kind, and who should bewail the passing of folk whose end is sure? War claims some, the ocean others; some are victims of love, of madness, or fell desire; these winter's freezing breath awaits, those the fierce heat of deadly Sirius, others pale Autumn with rain-bringing jaws. All that hath had beginning fears its end. Doomed are we all, ay, doomed: for shades innumerable doth Aeacus shake his urn. But he whom we mourn is happy: gods and men hath he escaped, and doubtful chance and the dangers of our dark life: he is beyond the will of Fate. He prayed not, nor feared nor deserved to die; but we, poor anxious creatures, miserable folk, we know not whenee our death shall come, what our life's end shall be, from what quarter the thunderbolt threatens, what cloud utters the sound of doom. Do these thoughts not move thee? But thou shalt be moved, and willingly. Come hither, Glaucias, who alone canst obtain all thou dost ask; leave that dark threshold, for neither the ferryman nor the comrade of the cruel beast a bars the way to innocent souls:
tu prohibe manare genas noctesque beatas dulcibus alloquiis et vivis vultibus imple, et perisse nega, desolatamque sororem,
qui potes, et miseros perge insinuare parentes.

II

VILLA SURRENTINA POLLI FELICIS

Est inter notos Sirenum nomine muros saxaque Tyrreniae templis onerata Minervae celsa Dicarchei speculatrix villa profundi, qua Bromio dilectus ager, collesque per altos uritur et prelis non invidet uva Falernis.

huc me post patrii laetum quinquennia lustri, cum stadio iam pigra quies canusque sederet pulvis ad Ambracias conversa gymnade frondes, trans gentile fretum placidi facundia Polli detulit et nitidae iuvenilis gratia Pollae.

<sup>a</sup> The name of Surrentum was locally derived from that of the Sirens, probably through the fact that Parthenope, the old man of Naples, was also the name of one of the Sirens themselves: the islands to the south of the promontory are called Σερηνοῦσαι as early as Eratosthenes. The southernmost headland bore the name and temple of Minerva: Tyrrenia, perhaps from the "mare Tyrrenenum," perhaps from a tradition of Etruscan power (cf. Steph. Byz. Συρέντιον πόλις Τυρρηνίας), Minerva herself being originally Etruscan.
"The Dicarchean deep" is the bay of Naples, from Dicarchus or Dicarcheus, founder of Puteoli.

<sup>b</sup> The four-yearly festival of the Augustalia at Naples, instituted in A.D. 2: it consisted of musical and gymnastic contests. The Actian ("Ambracian" l. S) games came a little later, beginning on September 2. soothe thou his heart and forbid his tears to flow; make his nights glad with thy sweet converse and thy living countenance. Tell him thou art not dead, and hasten to commend to him—for thou canst—thy unhappy parents and thy sister left forlorn.

II. THE VILLA OF POLLIUS FELIX AT SURRENTUM

The general arrangement of the poem follows the lines of i. 3; there is a description of the villa and its surroundings, followed by praise of its master, Pollius, and, in this case, of his wife Polla as well. Pollius Felix was a wealthy patron of Statius. The position of the villa can be determined with some degree of certainty as having been on the coast between the Capo di Sorrento and the Capo di Massa, on the heights of the Punta della Calcarella; just to the south the Marina di Puolo still preserves the name of Pollius, and must be the "unum litus" of ii. 15, 16; the temples of Neptune and Hercules lay somewhere below the villa. Considerable remains of Roman masonry still exist.

The building of the Temple of Hercules is described in Silv. iii. 1.

Between the walls that are known by the Sirens' name and the cliff that is burdened by the shrine of Etruscan Minerva a lofty villa stands and gazes out upon the Dicarchean deep; there the ground is beloved of Bromius, and the grapes ripen on the high hills nor envy the Falernian wine-pressess. Hither was I glad to come after the four-yearly festival of my home,—when at last deep quiet had fallen and the dust lay white upon the course, and the athletes had turned them to Ambracian garlands,—drawn by the eloquence of gentle Pollius and bright Polla's girlish charm to cross my native strait:
Statius

flectere iam cupidum gressus, qua limite noto Appia longarum teritur regina viarum.

Sed iuvere morae. placido lunata recessu hinc atque hinc curvas perrumpunt aequora rupec.
dat natura locum montique intervent unum litus et in terras scopolis pendentibus exit.
gratia prima loci, gemina testudine fumant balnea, et e terris occurrit dulcis amaro nympha mari. levis hic Phorci chorus uadaque crines Cymodoce viridisque cupit Galatea lavari.

ante domum tumidae moderator caerulius undae exenbat, innocui custos laris; huius amico spumant tempula salo. felicia rura tuetur Alcides; gaudet gemino sub numine portus:
hie servat terras, hie saevis fluctibus obstat.

mirquies pelagi: ponunt hie lassa fureom aequora, et insani spirant clementius austri, hie praeceps minus andet hiems, nulloque tumultu stagna modesta iacent dominique imitantia mores.

Inde per obliquas eripit porticus arces, urbis opus, longoque domat saxa aspera dorso.
qua prins obseuro permixti pulvere soles et feritas inamoena viae, nunc ire voluptas:
qualis, si subeas Ephyres Baccheidos altum culmen, ab Inoo fert semita teeta Lechaeo.²

1 unum M (Krohn; cf. Suet. Tib. 40): uddum, inum, umcum edd.
² Lechaeo dom. : iyceo M: Lyaeo 。”

Old name of Corinth; the epithet appears to allude to the Bacchiadæ, ancient rulers of Corinth.

Lechaeum was the port of Corinth on the Corinthian gulf, associated with the worship of Ino and Palaemon. though already fain to direct my steps where runs the worn and well-known track of Appia, queen of the long roads.

Yet the time I spent delighted me. The crescent waters of a tranquil bay break through the curving line of cliff on either hand. The spot is of Nature's giving: one single beach lies between sea and hill, ending towards the land in overhanging rocks. The first charm of the place is a smoking bath-house with two cupolas, and a stream of fresh water from the land meeting the salt brine. Here would the nimble choir of Phoreus wish to bathe, and Cymodoce with dripping tresses and sea-green Galatea. Before the building the dark-blue ruler of the swelling waves keeps watch, and guards that innocent home; his shrine is it that is wet with friendly spray. Alcides protects the happy fields; in the two deities does the haven rejoice: one guards the land, the other resists the angry billows. A wondrous peace is on the sea: here the weary waves rage no more, and the furious South wind blows more mildly; here the swift hurricane is less daring, and the pools lie tranquil and undisturbed, calm as the spirit of their lord.

Thence a colonnade climbs slantwise up the cliff, vast as a city, and its long line of roof gains mastery over the rugged rocks. Where the sun once shone through clouds of dust, and the way was wild and unlovely, now it is a pleasure to go. Even such, should you scale the lofty height of Bacchic Ephyre, is the covered way that leads from Lechaeum, of Ino's fame.

(Melicertes), whence came the Isthmian games; cf. Theb. ii. 381.
Non, mihi si cunctos Helicon indulgeat amnes et superet Pimplea sitim largeque volantis ungula sedet equi reseretque arcana pudicos Phemonoe fontes vel quos meus auspice Phoebo altius immersa turbavit Pollius urna, innumerases valeam species cultusque locorum Pierii aequare modis. vix ordine longo suffecere oculi, vix, dum per singula ducor, suffecere gradus. quae rerum turba! locine ingenium an domini mirer prius? haec domus ortus aspicit et Phoebi tenerum iubar; illa cadentem detinet exactamque negat dimittere lucem, cum iam fessa dies et in aequora montis opaci umbra cadit vitreoque natant praetoria ponto.
haec pelagi clamore fremunt, haec tecta sonoros ignorant fluctus terraeque silentia malunt.
his favit natura locis, hie vieta colenti cessit et ignotos docilis mansuevit in usus.
mons erat hie, ubi plana vides; et lustra fuerunt, qua nunc tecta subis; ubi nunc nemora ardua cernis, hie nec terra fuit: domuit possessor, et illum formantem rupes expugnantemque secuta gaudet humus. nunc cerne iugum discantia saxa intrantesque domos iussumque recedere montem.
iam Methymnnaei vatis manus et chelys una Thebais et Getici cedat tibi gloria plectri:
et tu saxa moves, et te nemora alta sequuntur.

\[^a\] i.e., the fountain Hippocrene struck forth by the hoof of Pergasus, cf. ii. 7. 4.
\[^b\] Daughter of Apollo, and, according to Strabo, the first Pythian priestess. Her “pure” springs are those of Castalia (“cast-us”), and “arcana” may be meant as an etymologizing of “Phemonoë,” “she who speaks forth hidden thoughts.”
\[^c\] Arion, Amphion, Orpheus.
Not if Helicon were to grant me all her streams, or Pimplea quench my thirst, or the hoof of the flying steed abundantly assuage it: not if mystic Phemonoë were to unlock her pure springs or those wherein my Pollius, under the auspices of Phoebus, hath plunged his deep-immersed urn—not even so could I equal in Pierian strains the countless charms and beauties of the place. Scarcely could my eyes sustain the long array, scarce could my feet avail, while I was led from scene to scene. What a multitude of things! Shall I first admire the genius of the place or of its master? This part of the house looks eastward to Phoebus' morning rays; that part detained him as he sets, nor allows the exhausted light to disappear, when the day is wearied out and the shadow of the dark mountain falls on the waters, and the proud mansion floats upon the glassy flood. Here the sound of the sea is in the chambers, here they know not the roaring of the waves, but prefer the silence of the land. Here are spots that Nature has favoured, here she has been outdone and given way to the settler and learnt gentleness in ways unknown before. Here, where you now see level ground, was a hill; the halls you enter were wild country; where now tall groves appear, there was once not even soil: its owner has tamed the place, and as he shaped and conquered the rocks the earth gladly gave way before him. See how the cliff learns to bear the yoke, how the dwellings force their entry and the mountain is bidden withdraw. Now let the skill of Methymne's bard and that sole Theban lyre and the glory of the Getic quill give way before thee: thou too dost move the rocks, thee too the high woods follow.
Quid referam veteres ceraeque acriisque figuras, si quid Apellei gaudent animasse colores, si quid adhuc vacua, tamen admiratione, Pisa Phidiaeae rasere manus, quod ab arte Myronis aut Polycleiteo iussum est quod vivere caelo, aeraque ab Isthmiacis auro potiora favillis, ora ductum ac vatum sapientumque ora priorum, quos tibi cura sequi, quos toto pectore sentis, Phidiacerum atque animum virtute quieta compositus semperque tuus? quid mille revolvam culmina visendique vices? sua cuique voluptas atque omni proprium thalamo mare, transque iacentem Nerea diversis servit sua terra fenestris: haec videt Inarimen, illinc Prochyta aspera paret; armiger hac magni patet Hectoris, inde malignum aera respirat pelago circumflua Nesis; inde vagis omen felix Euploea carinis quaeque ferit curvos exserta Megalia fluctus, angitur et domino contra recubante proculque Surrentina tuus spectat praetoria Limon. una tamen cunctis, procul eminet una diaetis, quae tibi Parthenopen derecto limite ponti ingerit: hie Grais penitus delecta metallis saxa; quod Eoae respergit vena Syenes, Synnade quod maesta Phrygiae fodere secures per Cybeles lugentis agros, ubi marmore pico candida purpureo distinguitur area gyro; hie et Amyclaei caesium de monte Lycurgi a i.e., before the statue of Olympian Zeus was there.

---

b Statues supposed to have been cast from the masses of molten bronze found in Corinth after its burning: see Petronius, 50; Pliny, N.H. xxxiv. 5.
c The cape called after Misenus.
d Because the name (ἐὐπλοία) means “happy voyaging.”
Why should I tell of ancient forms in wax or bronze, or of aught that the colours of Apelles rejoiced to animate, or the hand of Phidias carved, though Pisa still was empty, yet wondrously withal, or what was bidden live by Myron's art or Polyeletus' chisel, the bronzes, from the funeral fire of Corinth, more precious than gold, countenances of chieftains and prophets and sages of old time, whom it is thy care to follow, whose influence thou dost feel in all thy being, untroubled and steadfast in thy tranquil virtue, and ever lord of thy own heart? Why should I recount the numberless summits and the changing views? Each chamber has its own delight, its own particular sea, and across the expanse of Nereus each window commands a different landscape: this one beholds Inarime, from that rugged Prochyta is seen; here the squire of mighty Hector is outspread, there sea-girt Nesis breathes tainted air; yonder is Euploea, good omen for wandering barks, and Megalia flung out to repel the curving billows; and thy own Limon grieves that his lord reclines there over against him, and gazes at thy Surrentine mansion from afar. Yet one room there is, one higher than all the rest, which over a straight track of sea brings Parthenope to thy sight: here are marbles chosen from the heart of Grecian quarries; the stone of Eastern Syene, splashed with veining, and that which Phrygian axes hew in mournful Symnas o'er the fields of wailing Cybele, whereon the white expanse is bordered by a rim of purple; here too are green blocks quarried from the hill of Lycurgus at \(^{e}\) See note on i. 2. 148.

\(^{f}\) The Phrygian worship of Cybele, who wails for Attis, her votary (\(^{f}\)/i. 5. 38), is here referred to.
quam viret et molles imitatur rupibus herbas, hic Nomadum lucent flaventia saxa Thasosque et Chios et gaudens fluctus spectare Carystos:
onnia Chalcidicas turres obversa salutant.
maete animo, quod Graia probas, quod Graia¹ frequentas arva; nec invideant quae te genuere Dicarchi moenia! nos docto melius potiemur alumno.

Quid nunc ruris opes pontoque novalia dicam iuncta et madidas Baccheo nectare rupes?
saepe per autumnum iam pubescente Lyaeo conscendit scopulos noctisque occulta sub umbra palmite maturo rorantia lumina tersit Nereis et dulces rapuit de collibus uvas.
saepe et vicino sparsa est vindemia fluctu,
et Satyri eecidere vadis, nudamque per undas Dorida montani cupierunt prendere Panes.

Sis felix, tellus, dominis ammobus in annos Mygdonii Pyliique senis nec nobile mutes servitium, nec te cultu Tirynthia vineat aulæ Dicarchique sinus, nec saepius isti blanda Therapnaei placet² vineta Galaesi.
hic ubi Pierias exercet Pollius artes, seu volvit monitus, quos dat Gargettius auctor, ¹ Graia . Graia Gevart: grata . grata M.
² isti . . . placent M: istis . . placeant s.
Amyclae, where the stone counterfeits the grass; here gleam the tawny rocks from Numidia, Thasian marble too and Chian, and Carystian stone that joys to behold the waves: a all turn to salute the Chalcidian towers. B A blessing on thy heart, that thou approvest what is Greek and haunteth Grecian land; nor let the city of Dicarchus that gave thee birth feel envy! We shall prove better owners of our poet-ward.

Why should I rehearse the wealth of the countryside, the fallows flung out into the sea and the cliffs steeped in Bacchus' nectar? Often in autumn-time when the grapes are ripening a Nereid climbs the rocks, and under cover of the shades of night brushes the sea-water from her eyes with a leafy vine-spray, and snatches sweet clusters from the hills. Often is the vintage sprinkled by the neighbouring foam; Satyrs plunge into the water, and Pan-gods from the mountain are fain to grasp the sea-nymph as she flies naked through the waves.

Bless with prosperity, O land, thy lord and lady both, unto the years of a Nestor or a Tithonus, nor ever change thy noble servitude! Let not the Tirynthian hall and Dicarchus' bay outdo thee as a home, d nor thy lords too often gladden the wistful vineyards of Laconian Galaesus. Here where Pollius plies his Pierian craft, whether he ponders the places (Naples and its surroundings). "We," i.e. we of Naples, as opposed to Puteoli.

d Pollius seems to have possessed a house at Bauli near Puteoli (cf. note on 1. 94), and also near Tarentum. The latter is represented as "coaxing" ("blanda") him to come and spend his time there, and jealous (hence "placent") if he does not. Therapnaean, because Therapnae is in Laconia, and Tarentum was a Spartan colony.
seu nostram quatit ille chelyn seu dissona nectit carmina sive minax ultorem stringit iambon:
hinc levis e scopulis meliora ad carmina Siren advolat, hinc motis audit Tritonia cristi.
tune rapidi ponunt flatus, maria ipsa vetantur obstrepere, emergunt pelago doctamque trahuntur ad chelyn et blandi scopulis delphines aderrant.

Vive, Midae gazis et Lydo dition auro, Troica et Euphratae supra diademata felix, quem non ambigui fasces, non mobile vulgus, non leges, non castra terent, qui pectore magno spemque metumque domas votō1 sublimior omni, exemptus fatis indignantemque refellens Fortunam: dubio quem non in turbine rerum deprendet suprema dies, sed abire paratum ac plenum vita. nos, vilis turba, cadueis deservire bonis semperque optare parati, spargimur in casus: celsa tu mentis ab arce despicis errantes humanaque gaudia rides, tempus erat. cum te geminæ suffragia terrae diriperent celsusque duas veherere per urbes, inde Dicarcheis multum venerande colonis, hine adscite meis, pariterque his largus et illis ae inuenele calens plectrique errore superbus, at nunc discussa rerum ealigine verum aspicis—illo alii rursus iactantur in alto—, et tua secures portus placidamque quietem intravit non quaasa ratis. sie perge nee umquam

1 voto Waller: tuto M: vitio, motu, titulo edd.
Gargettian teacher’s counsels,\(^a\) or strikes my own lyre, or reunites unequal strains,\(^b\) or draws the threatening sword of avenging satire: the nimble Siren speeds from these rocks to sweeter lays than hers, and here Tritonia lifts her head and listens. Then the wild winds abate, the seas themselves are forbidden to rage; the dolphins emerge from the deep, and drawn to the music of his harp float gently by the cliffs.

Long mayst thou live, enriched beyond Midas’ wealth and Lydian\(^c\) gold, blest above the diadems of Euphrates\(^d\) and of Troy; whom neither fickle power nor the shifting mob, nor laws nor camps can vex, whose great heart, raised sublime over all desire, doth quell hope and fear, who art beyond the will of Fate and dost baffle the enmity of Fortune; thee the last day shall find, not bewildered in the maze of things, but sated with life and ready to depart. But we, a worthless folk, slaves at the beek of transient blessings and wishes ever new, are tossed from chance to chance: thou from thy mind’s high citadel dost look down upon our wanderings and laughest at human joys. There was a time when the loyalty of two lands tore thee in twain, and thou wert borne in triumph through two cities, there worshipped, as is meet, by Diearchus’ folk, here made their own by mine, and bountiful alike to these and those, in the full fire of youth and proud of thy wandering Muse.\(^e\) But now are the mists dispersed, and thou dost behold the truth—others in their turn are tossed upon that sea—and thy unshaken bark has entered a peaceful haven and a quiet resting-place. Con-

\(^e\) The phrase refers either to the varied poetical achievements of Pollius, or his travelling to different cities for the purpose of recitation, perhaps at various festivals.
emeritam in nostras puppem dimitte procellas.

tuque, nurus inter longe praedocta Latinas parque viro mentem, cui non praecordia curae,

non frontem vertere minae, sed candida semper gaudia et in vultu curarum ignara voluptas ;

non tibi sepositas infelix strangulat arca divitias avidique animum dispensia torquent fenoris : expositi census et docta fruendi temperies.  non ulla deo meliore cohaerent pectora, non alias docuit Concordia mentes.

discite securi, quorum de pectore mixtae in longum coiere faees sanetusque pudiceae servat amicitiae leges amor.  ite per annos saeculaque et prisciae titulos praecedite famae.

III. ARBOR ATEDII MELIORIS

Stat, quae perspicuas nitidi Melioris opacet arbor aquas complexa lacus, quae robore ab imo incurvata vadis redit inde cacumine recto ardua, eeu mediis iterum naseatur ab undis atque habitet vitreum tacitis radicibus amnem.

158.

2 vertere Pol. (from P) : vescere M.

3 docuit M : décuit s.

106
continue thus, nor ever loose thy vessel, her voyage over, to face our storms. And thou, who in wisdom dost surpass the daughters of Latium and in mind art equal to thy lord, whose spirit no cares, whose brow no menace has dismayed, but who art ever bright and happy, while joy untroubled reigns in thy countenance:—for thee no churlish money-chest keeps tight grip of hoarded wealth, no waste of greedy usury tortures thy heart, but open to all are thy riches, and thou dost enjoy them in wise restraint. No union of souls is more blest, such are the minds that Concord has taught. Learn of her in untroubled peace, ye from whose hearts the blending fires are met in a long union, and whose hallowed love keeps fast the laws of chaste affection. Go onward through the years, and outdo the centuries of old and the title-roll of ancient fame.

III. THE TREE OF ATEDIUS MELIOR

Atedius Melior, another of Statius's rich patrons, had a plane-tree in his grounds that grew beside a pool, with a trunk that bent over and down towards the water, and then straightening itself grew upwards again; Statius's poem is a kind of Alexandrian aitia, giving the cause of the phenomenon, and reminds one also of an Ovidian Metamorphosis. It was sent to Melior as a birthday gift.

Enfolding with its overshadowing boughs the clear waters of my elegant Melior's lake there stands a tree, whose trunk, curving from its base, bends down toward the mere, and then shoots up aloft straight to its summit, as though it grew a second time from the midst of the waves, and dwelt with hidden roots in the glassy stream. Why ask so slight a tale of quid Phoebum tam parva rogem? vos dicite causas, Naides, et faciles, satis est, date carmina Fauni.

Nympharum tenerae fugiebant Pana catervae; ille quidem it, cunctas tamquam velit, et tamen unam in Pholoen. silvas haec fluminibusque sequentis nunc hirtos gressus, nunc improba cornua vitat. iamque et bellerum Iani nemus atraque Caci rura Quirinalesque fuga suspensa per agros Caelica tesca subit; ibi demum victa labore, fessa metu, qua nunc placidi Melioris aperti stant sine fraude lares, flavos collegit amictus artius et niveae posuit se margine ripae. insequitur velox pecorum deus et sua credit conubia; ardentia iamiam suspitia librat pectore, iam praedae levis imminet. ecce citatos advertit Diana gradus, dum per inga septem errat Aventinacque legit vestigia cervae. paenituit vidisse deam, conversaque fidas ad comites: "numquamne avidis areebo rapinis hoc peltulas foedumque pecus, semperque pudici 25 decreseet mihi turba chori?" sic deinde locuta depromit pharetra telum breve, quod neque flexis cornibus aut solito torquet stridore, sed una emisit contenta manu laevamque soporae Naidos aversa fertur tetigisse sagitta. illa diem pariter surgens hostemque protervum vidit et in fontem, niveos ne panderet artus,

1 et tamen M: it tamen s.
3 niveae M: viridi Markland: curvae, nitidae edd.: vivae Slater. niveae is certainly doubtful, though he may be thinking of flowers.
4 soporae Krohn: soporem M.

a The precinct of Janus was at the foot of the Capitol, the Phoebus? Do you, O Naiads, relate the cause, and you, compliant Fauns—ye will suffice—inspire my song.

Frightened troops of Nymphs were fleeing from Pan; on he came, as though all were his quarry, yet on Pholoe alone was he bent. By copse and stream she fled, shunning now the hairy following limbs, now the wanton horns. Through Janus' grove, a scene of battles, and Cacus' deadly haunts; through the fields of Quirinus she came running a-tiptoe and gained the Caelian wilds; there at last wearied out and fordone with fear—where to-day stands the quiet home of hospitable Melior—she gathered her saffron robe closer about her, and sank down on the edge of the snow-white bank. Swiftly follows the shepherd-god, and deems the maid his bride; already he allays the panting of his fevered breast, already he hovers lightly o'er his prey. Lo! with speedy steps Diana approaches, as she ranges the seven hills and tracks the flight of a deer on Aventine; the goddess was vexed to see it, and turning to her trusty comrades: "Shall I never keep this unseemly, wanton brood from lustful rapine? Must my chaste band of followers ever grow fewer?" So speaking she drew a short shaft from her quiver, but sped it not from the bent bow or with the wonted twang, but was content to fling it with one hand, and touched—so 'tis said—the left hand of the drowsy Naiad with the arrow-feathers. She awaking beheld at once the day and her wanton foe, and lest she should bare her snow-white limbs plunged just as she was with all her raiment into the lake, and at the den of Cacus on the Aventine, on which hill was a shrine of Diana.
sic tota cum veste ruit, stagnisque sub altis Pana sequi credens imas latus implicat alga.
quid faceret subito deceptus praedo? nec altis credere corpus aquis hirtae sibi conscius audet pellis et a tenero nandi rudis: omnia questus, immitem Bromium,\(^1\) stagna invita et invida tela, primaeavam visu platanum, cui longa propago innumeraeque manus et iturus in aethera vertex, deposuit iuxta vivamque adgressit harenam optatisque aspergit aquis et talia mandat:
"vive diu nostri pignus memorabile voti, arbor, et haec duræ latebrosa cubilia nymphae tu saltem declinis am, preme frondibus undam.
illa quidem meruit, sed ne, precor, igne superno aestuet aut dura feriatur grandine; tantum spargere tu laticem et foliis turbare memento, tunc ego teque diu recolam dominamque benignae sedis et inlaesa tutabor utramque senecta, ut Iovis, ut Phoebi frondes, ut discolor umbra populæ et nostræ stupeant tua germina pinus." sic ait. illa dei veteres animata calores uberibus stagnis obliquo pendula trunco incubat atque umbris scrutatur amantibus sperat et amplexus, sed aquarum spiritus arceet nee patitur tactus. tandem eluctata sub auras libratur fundo rursusque enode cacumen ingeniosa levat, veluti descendat in imos stirpe lacus alia. iam nee Phoebeia Nais odit et exclusos invitat gurgite ramos

Haec tibi parva quidem genitali luce paramus

\(^1\) Bromium \(M\): Brimo Scaliger: Bormum Ellis.

---

\(^a\) Bacchus being the deity to whom Pan, together with Satyrs and Sileni, owed allegiance and therefore trusted for help.

\(^b\) Oak and bay.

110
bottom of the mere, believing Pan was following, she wrapped the weeds about her. What could the robber do, so suddenly baffled? Conscious of his shaggy hide, and from childhood untaught to swim, he dares not trust himself to the deep waters. Lavish complaint made he of heartless Bromius, of the jealous lake and jealous shaft; then spying a young plane tree with long stem and countless branches and summit aspiring to heaven he set it by him and heaped fresh sand about it and sprinkled it with the longed-for waters, and thus commanded it: "Live long, O tree, as the memorable token of my vow, and do thou at least stoop down and cherish the secret abode of this hard-hearted nymph, and cover her waters with thy leaves. Let her not, I pray, though she has deserved it, be scorched by the sun's heat or lashed by cruel hail; only mind thou to bestrew the pool with thickly scattered leaves. Then will I long remember thee and the mistress of this kindly place, and guard both to a secure old age, so that the trees of Jove and Phoebus, and the twy-coloured poplar shade and my own pines may marvel at thy boughs." So he spake; and the tree, quickened with the old passion of the god, hangs and broods over the full mere with drooping stem, and searches the waves with loving shadows, and hopes for their embrace; but the breath of the waters put it from them, and suffered not its touch. At length it struggles upward, and poised upon its base cunningly lifts its head without any knot, as though it sank with another root into the bottom of the lake. Now not even the Naiad, Phoebus's votary, hates it, but her stream invites the boughs she banished.

Such is the gift I bring thee on thy birthday,
dona, sed ingenti forsan victura sub aevo.
tu, cuius placido posuere in pectore sedem blandus honos hilarisque tamen cum pondere virtus, eui nec pigra quies nec iniqua potentia nec spes improba, sed medius per honesta et dulcia limes, icorrupte fidem nulosque experpte tumultus et secrete, palam quom digeris ordine vitam, ideo auri facitis contemnitor et optimus idem comere divitis opibusque immittere lucem:
hac longum florens animi morumque iuventa Iliacos aequalre senes et vincere perst, quos pater Elysium, genetrix quos detulit annos:
hoc illi duras exoravere sorores, hoc, quae te sub teste situm fugitura tacentem ardua magnanimi revirescet gloria Blaesi.

IV. PSITTACUS EIUSDEM

Psittace, dux volucrum, domini facunda voluptas, humanae sollers imitator, psittace, linguae,
quis tua tam subito praeclusit murmura fato?
hesternas, miserande, dapes moriturus inisti nobiscum, et gratae carpente munera mensae errantemque toris mediae plus tempore noctis vidimus. adfatus etiam meditataque verba

The praise of his patron seems to show that Melior, like Vopiscus and Pollius, cultivated an elegant leisure. small indeed, but destined perchance to live throughout long ages. Thou in whose tranquil breast dwells courteous dignity and gay, yet thoughtful virtue, refusest slothful ease and unjust power and overweening ambition, but takest the mid-path between duty and pleasure, thou whose loyalty is unstained, whose heart has known no storms, whose life is lived apart, yet ordered and planned for all to see, thou who readily spurnest gold, yet dost excel in setting thy wealth in array and bringing thy riches to the light: long mayst thou flourish and live on in youthfulness of mind and heart to rival Priam and Tithonus, and to surpass the years that thy mother and thy sire took with them to Elysium; this guerdon have they won for thee from the stern Sisters, they and the lofty fame of great-hearted Blaesus, which, preserved from silent oblivion by thy witness, shall flourish once again.¹

IV. MELIOR'S PARROT

This elegy on Melior's parrot recalls of course Ovid's similar poem (Am. ii. 6), while it is also a kind of parody of Statius's own Epicedia. For talking birds in ancient times, Pliny, Nat. Hist. x. 117, is the locus classicus.

Parrot, prince of birds, glib-tongued favourite of thy master, parrot that cleverly dost mimic human speech, who has cut short thy chatter by so sudden a stroke? Yesterday, hapless one, thou didst join our feast, though doomed to die, and we saw thee plucking the dainties of the table and moving from couch to couch till after midnight. Greetings also and well-conned words hadst thou repeated. But reddideras. at nunc aeterna silentia Lethes ille canorus habes. cedat Phaethontia vulgi fabula: non soli celebrant sua funera cygni. 10

At tibi quanta domus rutila testudine fulgens, conexusque ebori virgarum argenteus ordo, argutumque tuo stridentia limina cornu, et, querulae iam sponte, fores! vacat ille beatus carcer et Augusti1 nusquam convicia tecti!

Huc doctae stipentur aves, quis nobile fandius Natura dedit: plangat Phoebus 20 ales auditasque memor penitus dimittere voces sturnus et Aonio versae certamine picae, quique refert iungens iterata vocabula perdix, et quae Bistonio queritur soror orba cubili: ferte simul genitus cognataque ducite flammis funera et hoc cunctae miserandum addiscite carmen:

"Occidit aeriae celeberrima gloria gentis psittacus, ille plagae viridis regnator Eoae; 25 quem non gemmata volucris Lunonia cauda vinceret aspectu, gelidi non Phasidis ales, nec quas uamenti Numidae rapuere sub austro. ille salutator regum nomenque locutus Caesareum et queruli quondam vice functus amici, 30 nunc conviva levis monstrataque reddere verba tam faciles! quo tu, Melior dilecte, recluso numquam solus eras. at non inglorius umbris mittitur: Assyrio cineres adolentur amomo

1 Augusti M: Augusti s.

---

"a Because the death-song of swans is referred to in it.
"b The raven.
"c The maidens who challenged the Muses and were turned into magpies.
"d Philomela, sister-in-law of Tereus, king of Thrace, turned into a nightingale; according to Pliny (loc. cit.) these birds could be taught both Latin and Greek.

114
now that minstrelsy hath Lethe's eternal silence for its portion. Let the well-known tale of Phaethon give place: 'tis not only swans that sing their coming death.\(^a\)

But how spacious was thy house, how bright its gleaming dome! and the row of silver bars, joined with ivory, and the gate that echoed shrill at the touch of thy beak, and the doors that to-day speak their own complaint! Empty is that happy cage, and silent the chattering of that lordly abode.

Flock hither all ye scholar fowl, to whom Nature has given the noble privilege of speech; let the bird of Phoebus\(^b\) beat his breast, and the starling, that repeats by heart the sayings it has heard, and magpies transformed in the Aonian contest,\(^c\) and the partridge, that joins and reiterates the words it echoes, and the sister that laments forlorn in her Bistonian bower:\(^d\) mourn all together and bear your dead kinsman to the flames, and learn all of you this piteous dirge:

"The parrot, glory and renown of all the airy tribe, green monarch of the East, is dead: whom neither the bird of Juno with jewelled tail, nor the fowl of icy Phasis,\(^e\) nor those whereon the Numidians prey beneath the moist southern sky, could surpass in beauty. Once he saluted kings and spoke the name of Caesar, was now a sympathetic friend, now a gay companion of the board, so skilful was he to render the words he had been taught! Never wert thou solitary, beloved Melior, when he was set free. But not ingloriously is he sent to the shades: his ashes are rich with Assyrian balm, and the frail \(^{\text{a}}\) See note on i. 6. 77.

et tenues Arabum respirant gramine plumae Sicaniisque crocis : senio nec fessus inerti scandet odoratos Phoenix felicior ignes.”

V. LEO MANSUETUS

Quid tibi nunc strata\(^1\) mansuescere profuit ira?
quid scelus humanasque animo dediscere caedes imperiumque pati et domino parere minori?
quid ? quod abire domo rursusque in claustra reverti suetus et a capta iam sponte recedere praeda insertasque manus laxo dimittere morsu ?
occidis, altarum vastator docte ferarum.
non grege Massylo curvaque indagine clausus, non formidato supra venabula saltu incitus aut caeco foveae deceptus hiatu, sed victus fugiente fera. stat cardine aperto infelix cavea et clausas circum undique portas hoc licuisse nefas placidi tumuere\(^2\) leones.
tum cunctis cecidere iubae, puduitque relatum aspicere, et totas duxere in lumina frontes.
at non te primo fusum novus obruit ictu ille pudor : mansere animi, virtusque cadenti a media iam morte redit, nec protinus omnes terga dedere minae. sicut sibi conscius alti vulneris adversum moriens it miles in hostem

\(^1\) nunc strata Postgate : monstrata \(M\): constrata \(S\): deposita Clark, who considers monstrata due to iv. 31 above.
\(^2\) tumuere Baelirens : timuere \(M\).

\(^a\) The Massylians were an African tribe, and lions were conventionally associated with Africa.
\(^b\) The allusion is not clear to us, though of course it would be to a witness of the fight.
feathers breathe incense of Arabia and Sicanian saffron; and he will mount a fragrant pyre, a happier Phoenix, free from the weary languor of old age."

V. THE TAME LION

Tame lions are the subject of epigrams by Martial (I. 6, 14, 22, 48, etc.). For the circumstances of the writing of this piece see Preface to this book.

What now has it availed thee to quell thy rage and be tamed, to unlearn crime and human slaughter from thy heart, and endure dominion and obey a lesser lord? To have been wont to leave thy cage and return again to imprisonment, and of thy own will yield up the captured prey, to open thy jaws and let go the inserted hand? Thou art fallen, O skilled slayer of tall beasts, not caught within the enclosing circle of a Massylian hunting-band,\(^a\) nor flinging thyself with dreaded spring against the spears, nor deceived by the hidden yawning of a pit, but overcome by a beast that fled thee.\(^b\) The unlucky cage stands open, while behind their barriers all around the quiet lions grew wrathful that so great a wrong should have been suffered. Then all their crests fell, and shame came on them to see the corpse brought back, and they drew down all their brows upon their eyes. Yet when the first stroke o'erthrew thee the unwonted shame o'erwhelmed thee not: thy valour remained, and even in the hour of death thy brave spirit rallied as thou didst fall, nor did all thy fierceness straightway own defeat. Just as the dying warrior who knows his wound is mortal yet goes against the foe, and lifts his hand to strike, and attollitque manum et ferro labente minatur: sic piger ille gradu solitoque exutus honore firmat hians oculos animamque hostemque requirit.

Magna tamen subiti tecum solacia leti, victae, feres, quod te maesti populusque patresque, 25 ceu notus caderes tristi gladiator harena, ingenuere mori; magni quod Caesaris ora inter tot Seythicas Libycasque, et litore Rheni et Pharia de gente feras, quas perdere vile est, unius amissi tetigit iactura leonis.

VI. CONSOlatio ad FlaviUm URSUM DE AMISSIONE PuerI DELICATI

Saeve nimirum, laerimis quisquis discrimina ponis ingendique modos. miserum est primaevae parenti pignora surgentesque—nfas!—accendere natos; durum et deserti praerepta coniuge partem conelamare tori, maesta et lamenta sororum 5 et fratrum gemitus: alte tamen ac2 procul intrat altius in sensus maioraque vulnera vincit plaga minor. famulum—quia rerum nomina caeca sic miscet Fortuna manu nec pectora novit—, sed famulum gemis, Urse, pium, sed amore fideque

1 et Aldus: in M: ab Baehrens: a Phillimon.
2 alte tamen ac Markland: ad te tamen at M: alte et tamen at Vollmer: alter Phillimon (alterius next line).
threatens even while the weapon falls from his grasp; so he with laboured step and rest of his wonted pride steadies his eyes as with open mouth he pants for breath and for the foe.

Great solace, nevertheless, shall be thine, poor victim, for thy sudden fate, that people and Senate mourned in sorrow to see thee die, as though thou wert some favourite gladiator fallen on the deadly sand; that amid so many beasts of Scythia and Libya, from the banks of Rhine and the tribes of Egypt, beasts so cheaply slain, the loss of one lion alone drew a tear from mighty Caesar's eye.

VI. A POEM OF CONSOLATION TO FLAVIUS URSUS ON THE DEATH OF A FAVOURITE SLAVE

This Epicedion follows the same lines as ii. 1, except that the opening is different. Flavius Ursus, we may gather from the Preface and this poem, was young and rich, and practised at the bar.

Too cruel thou, whoever thou art, who makest distinctions in mourning, and settest bounds to grief! Piteous it is for a parent to burn—ah! fearful thought!—an infant darling or growing son; hard too is it when a consort is snatched away to call the name of the partner of the deserted couch; sad are a sister's tears and a brother's groans: yet deeply also, ay deeper far does a stroke less deadly probe the feelings, surpassing mightier blows. 'Tis a slave—for thus doth Fortune confound with undiscerning hand the names of things, nor sees into the heart—a slave whom thou dost mourn, but one that was
STATIUS

has meritum lacrimas, cui maior stemmate iuncto libertas ex mente fuit. ne comprime fletus, ne pudeat; rumpat frenos dolor iste diesque,\(^1\) si tam dura placent—hominem\(^2\) gemis—heu mihi!

\(^1\) diesque \textit{M} : decusque \textit{Peyrared} : deisque \textit{Dom.}
\(^2\) hominem \textit{M} : homo enim \textit{Macnaghten}.

\(a\) As for instance the parrot of ii. 4, or the raven mentioned by Pliny (\textit{N.H.} x. 122) as being given a fine funeral. The stag is that of Silvia (\textit{Aen.} xii. 475).
\(b\) Because Oebalus was an ancient king of Sparta.
loyal, one whose faithful affection merited these tears, and whose spirit knew a freedom that no line of ancestry could give. Check not thy weeping, feel no shame; let that day of thy lament know no restraining, if the Fates are so cruel—'tis a man thou bewailest, Ursus,—alas! myself I fan thy sorrow!—a man who was thine, ready to find service sweet, never sullen, eager to give orders to himself. Who would curb the grief that bursts forth at such a death? The Parthian laments his steed slain in the fight, the Molossians their trusty hounds, even birds have had their pyres, and the hind its Maro. What if he were no real slave? Myself I saw and marked his bearing, how he would have thee only for his lord; but nobler yet was the spirit in his face, and breeding showed clear in his youthful blood. Eagerly would Grecian and Latin dames desire and pray that such a son were theirs. Less comely was proud Theseus, when the cunning maid of Crete drew him back with her anxious thread, or Paris, when in haste to see his Spartan bride he launched, a shepherd lad, the unwilling pines upon the main. 'Tis truth I tell, nor does wonted licence sway my song: I have seen him, ay, and see him yet, out-matching Achilles when Thetis hid him singing of wars upon the maiden's strand, or Troilus, when the lance from the Haemonian hero's arm caught him as he fled round cruel Phoebus' walls. How fair thou wert! lo! comelier far than all, lads and men alike, and surpassed only by thy lord! His glory alone exceeded thine, as the bright moon exceeds the lesser fires, and as Hesper outshines the other

\(^c\) Achilles.

\(^d\) So, with grosser flattery, of Earinus (iii. 4. 44).
non tibi feminineum vultu decus oraque supra mollis honos, quales dubiae post crimina formae de sexu transire iubent, torvoque virilis gratia; nec petulans acies blandique severo igne oculi, qualis, bellus iam casside, visu Parthenopaeus erat; simplexque horrore decoro crinis, et obsessae nondum primoque micantes flore genae: talem Ledaeo gurgite pubem educat Eurotas, teneri sic integer aevi Elin adit primosque Iovi puer adprobat annos. nam pudor unde novae menti tranquillaque morum temperies teneroque animus maturior aevi, carmine quo repetisse queam? saepe ille volentem castigabat erum studioque altisque iuvabat consilii; tecum tristisque hilarisque nec umquam ille suus vultumque tuo sumebat ab ore: dignus et Haemonium Pyladen praecedere fama Cecropiamque fidem, sed laudum terminus esto, quem fortuna sinit: non mente fidelior aegra speravit tardi reditus Eumaeus Ulixis.

Quis deus aut quisnam tam tristia vulnera casus eligit? unde manus Fatis tam certa nocendi? o quam divitis censuque exutus opimo

1 bellus iam casside visu Krohn: bellis i. e. v. M: casside missa Pol.: demissa casside visu Slater.
3 repetisse Postgate: potasse M; par esse Saftien: pensasse etc.

a i.e., when the boyish beauty is beginning to fade into manhood. Others take “crimina dubiae formae” as “the crime that causes ambiguous appearance” (crime, because forbidden by Domitian, cf. iii. 4. 73, iv. 3. 13).
stars. No womanly charm was in thy countenance, no effeminate grace upon thy brow, as with those whom after the reproach of fading beauty men bid lose their sex,\(^a\) but an earnest, manly beauty was thine; nor was thy gaze insolent, but thine eye was gentle yet stern with fire, like Parthenopaeus to behold, when now decked in his helm\(^b\); simple the ruffled charm of thy locks, thy cheeks not covered yet, but bright with their first down: such are the lads that Eurotas nurtures by Leda’s stream, such the boys that in the unstained freshness of boyhood go to Elis,\(^c\) and approve their budding youth to Jove. How indeed in song can I trace the growth of modesty in his young mind, of his calm steadiness of character and a spirit riper than his years? Often would he chide his willing lord, and aid him with deep and zealous counsel; he shared thy joys and sorrows, nor ever lived to himself, but guided his looks by thy countenance; worthy was he to exceed in fame the Haemonian Pylades\(^d\) and the Athenians’ loyalty\(^e\); but let not his praise o’erstep his fortune: not more faithfully did Eumaeus, sick at heart, long for the return of tardy Ulysses.

What god, what chance makes choice of wounds so deadly? whence are the Fates so unerring in their power to harm? Ah! how much braver, Ursus, hadst thou been, stripped of thy wealth and \(^a\) Patroclus (Haemonian = Thessalian), as faithful to Achilles as Pylades was to Orestes.

\(^b\) Parthenopaeus was one of the Seven against Thebes (see Thēb. ix. 699), a warrior with the look of a maiden; the name means “maiden-faced.”
\(^c\) i.e., to the Olympian games.
\(^d\) Of Theseus to Pirithous (Cecrops, ancient king of Athens).
fortior, Urse, foras! si vel fumante ruina ructassent dites Vesuvina incendia Locroce seu Pollentinos mersissent flumina saltus sen Lucanus Acir\(^1\) seu Thybridis impetus altas in dextrum torsisset aquas. paterere serena 65 fronte deos; sive alma fidem messesque negasset Cretaque Cyreneque et qua tibi cumque beato larga redit Fortuna sinu. sed gnara dolorum Invidia infelix animi vitalia vidit laedendique vias. vitae modo cardine\(^2\) adultae nectere temptabat iuvenum pulcherrimus ille cum tribus Eleis unam trieterida lustris.
attendit torvo tristis Rhamnusia vultu, ac primum implevitque toros oculisque nitorem addidit ac solito sublimius ora levavit.
70 heu! misero letale favens, seseque videndo torsit et invidia\(^3\) mortemque amplexa iacenti iniecit nexus\(^4\) carpsitque immitis adunca ora verenda manu. quintus vix Phosphoros ortu\(^5\) rorantem sternebat equum: iam litora duri 80 saeva. Philete, senis, durumque Acheronta videbas, quo domini clamate sono! non saevius atros nigrasset planctu genetrix tibi salva\(^6\) lacertos, nec pater; et certe qui vidit funera frater

\(^{1}\) Acir Madeig: ager M.
\(^{2}\) cardine Gronocius: carmen M, defended by Ellis,
J. Ph. 13.
\(^{3}\) invidia M: invidiam Heinsius: invidit Ellis.
\(^{4}\) nexus Schwartz: nexus M.
\(^{5}\) quintus ... ortu Schrader: quinta ... hora M.
\(^{6}\) salva Polster: saeva M.

\(^{a}\) i.e., if Ursus's property at Locri in Bruttium had been destroyed by an eruption (not, of course, of Vesuvius).
\(^{b}\) A lustre here is taken for a period of four years, the goodly fortune! if in smoking ruin rich Locri had beleched forth Vesuvian fire, or rivers had submerged thy Pollentian glades, if Lucanian Aeir or impetuous Tiber had swung their swollen waters to the right, thou hadst endured the will of heaven with unruffled brow; or if bounteous Crete and Cyrene had forsworn thee and denied their harvests, or wherever lavish Fortune returns to thee with plenteous bosom.
But ill-omened Envy, skilled to hurt, saw the vital spot and the path of harm. Just at the gate of full-grown life that most beauteous of youths was striving to link three years to three Elean lustres.
With grim frown the stern Rhamnusian gave heed, and first she filled out his muscles and set a brilliance in his eyes and raised his head higher than of wont; deadly alas! to the poor lad were her favours: she tortured herself with envy at the sight, and clasping the sufferer struck death into him by her embrace, and with hooked, relentless fingers tore that pure countenance. Scarce was Phosphor at the fifth rising saddling his dewy steed: already, Philetus, wert thou beholding the bleak shore of heartless Charon and heartless Acheron, bewailed how bitterly by thy lord! Not more fiercely would thy mother, had she lived, blackened and bruised her arms for thee in lamentation, nor thy father either; verily thy brother interval between the Olympic games; i.e., the youth was between twelve and fifteen, or perhaps the actual fifteenth year is meant.

The goddess Nemesis.

"Invidiam mortemque amplexa" does not seem satisfactory; it is better to keep "invidia" of the mss., making it and "videndo" abls. after "tortis," and construe "amplexa (sc. iacentem) iniecit mortem (ei) nexu."

Apparently the boy's name; the word means "beloved."

125
erubuit vinci. sed nec servilis adempto ignis: odoriferos exhaust flamma Sabaeos et Cilicium messes, Phariaeque exempta volucri cinnama et Assyrio manantes gramine sucos et domini fletus: hos tantum hausere favillae, hos bibit usque rogus; nec quod tibi Setia canos restinxit cinerem, gremio nec lubricus ossa quod vallavit onyx, miseris acceptius umbris quam gemitus. sed et ipse iuvat⁠¹: quid terga dolori, Urse, damus? quid damna foves et pectore iniquo vulnus amas? ubi nota reis facundia raptis? ⁹⁰ quid caram crucias tam saevis luctibus umbram? eximius licet ille animi meritusque dolore: solvisti. subit ille pios carpitque quietem Elysiam clarosque illie fortasse parentes invenit; aut illi per amoena silentia Lethes forsan Avernales adludunt undique mixtae Naides, obliquaque notat Proserpina vultu. pone, precor, questus; alium tibi Fata Phileton, forsan et ipse dabit moresque habitusque decoros monstrabit gaudens similemque docebit amorem.² ¹⁰⁵

¹ iuvat M: iubet, vetat edd.
² amorem S: amori M: amari S.

---
a Incense and saffron.
b The Phoenix.
who saw thy funeral blushed to be outdone. No servile flames were thine: fragrant harvests of Saba and Cilicia \(^a\) did the fire consume, and cinnamon stolen from the Pharian bird,\(^b\) and the juices that drip from Assyrian herbs—and thy master's tears: these only did the ashes drink, those the pyre ceased not to consume; nor was the Setian wine that quenched the hoary ash, nor the smooth onyx that guarded his bones more grateful to the hapless shade than those tears. Yet can even tears avail him? Why, Ursus, do we surrender to our sorrow? Why dost thou cherish thy loss, and perversely love thy wound? Where is that eloquence that prisoners dragged to judgement knew? Why dost thou vex that dear shade by savage shows of grief? Peerless of soul was he and worthy to be mourned: but thou hast paid that debt, and he is entering the company of the blest and enjoys Elysian peace, and perchance finds there famous ancestors; or haply by the pleasant silences of Lethe Nymphs of Avernus mingle and sport around him, and Proserpine notes him with sidelong glance. Mourn then no more, I pray thee; the Fates, and he himself perhaps, will give thee another Philetus, and gladly he will show him seemly ways and fashions, and teach him a love to match his own.
Lucani proprium diem frequentet, quisquis collibus Isthmiae Diones docto pectora concitatus oestro pendentis bibit ungulae liquorem. ipsi, quos penes est honor canendi, vocalis citharae repertor Arcas et tu Bassaridum rotator Euhan et Paean et Hyantiae sorores, laetae purpureas novate vittas, crinem comite, candidamque vestem perfundant hederae recentiores. docti largius evagentur annes, et plus Aoniae virete silvae, et, si qua patet aut\(^1\) diem recepit, sertis mollibus expleatur umbra. centum Thespiaeis odora lucis stent altaria victimaeque centum, quas Dirce lavat aut alit Cithaeron: Lucanum canimus, favete linguinis, vestra est ista dies, favete, Musae, dum qui vos geminas tulit per artes, et vinctae pede vocis et solutae, Romani colitur chori sacerdos.

\(^1\) patet aut \(m\): pater aut \(L\): patera ut \(M\): patulam Mark-land: Patareus coni. Verrall.

\(a\) The fountain of Hippocrene caused by the hoof of Pegasus, which Statius here places on the Isthmus; he seems to confuse it with Pirene, the spring at Corinth (cf. Theb. iv. 60). Pirene was also connected with the Pegasus story, see Pindar. \(O\). 13. 60. It is not clear what Dione (Venus) has to do with the Isthmus.
VII. AN ODE TO POLLA IN HONOUR OF LUCAN’S BIRTHDAY

The title Genethliacon was usually applied to an ode written in honour of a living person. This ode, however, is a commemoration of Lucan after his death, addressed to Polla, his widow. Into it is introduced a prophecy of his fame spoken by Calliope on the day of his birth.

Come to Lucan’s birthday-feast, all ye who on the hills of Isthmian Dione, with hearts fired by poetic frenzy, drink of the spring that the flying hoof struck forth. Ye who have the privilege of song in your keeping, Arcadian discoverer of the vocal lyre, and thou, Euan. whirler of thy Bassarids, and Paean and the Hyantian Sisters, joyfully deck yourselves anew with purple fillets, make your tresses trim and let fresh ivy enwreathe your shining raiment. Flow more abundantly, poetic streams, and be more brightly green, ye woodlands of Aonia, and if anywhere your shade hath opened and taken in the sunlight, let soft garlands fill the room. Let a hundred fragrant altars stand in the Thespian groves, and a hundred victims that Dirce laves and Cithaeron pastures: ’tis of Lucan we sing, keep holy silence; this is your day, ye Muses, keep silence, while he who made you glorious in two arts, in the measures of fettered speech and free, is honoured as the high priest of the Roman choir.

b Mercury, Bacchus, Apollo, and the Muses. Hyantian = Boeotian.
c Boeotia, i.e. Helicon or Parnassus.
d Thespiae was at the foot of Helicon.
e Poetry was often described as “fettered,” i.e. bound by the rules of metre, prose as freed from such rules.
Felix—heu nimis!—et beata tellus, quae pronos Hyperionis meatus summis Oceani vides in undis stridoremque rotae cadentis audis, quae Tritonidi¹ fertiles Athenas unctis, Baetica, provocas trapetis: Lucanum potes imputare terris!

hoc plus quam Senecam dedisse mundo aut dulcem generasse Gallionem. attollat refluos in astra fontes Graio nobilior Melete Baetis²; Baetim, Mantua, provocare noli.

Naturn protinus atque humum per ipsam primo murmure dulce vagientem blando Calliope sinu recepit, tum primum posito remissa luctu longos Orpheos exuit dolores et dixit: "puer o dicate Musis, longaevos eito transiture vates, non tu flumina nee greges ferarum nee plectro Geticas movebis ornos, sed sepetm iuga Martiumquc Thybrim et doctos equites et eloquente cantu purpureum trahes senatum, nocturnas alii Phrygum ruinas et tardi reducis vias Ulixis et puppem temerariam Minervae, trita vatibus orbita, sequantur: tu carus Latio memorde gentis carmen fortior exseris togatum, ac primum teneris adhuc in annis

¹ Tritonidi Bentley: tritonide M.
² Melete Betis M: m&eleb&is L.
Happy land—too happy alas!—and blest, that on the verge of Ocean's waves beholdest Hyperion slope downward to his setting, and hearest the hiss of plunging wheels; even thou, Baetica, whose dripping olive-presses vie with Athens, that is fertile for Tritonis: thou eanst account mankind in debt to thee for Lucan! This is more than to have given Seneca to the world, or to have borne the sweet-tongued Gallio. Let Baetis, more renowned than Grecian Meles, flow backward and be exalted to the stars; Mantua, dare not to challenge Baetis!

Straightway, while yet a new-born babe he crawled and with earliest accents sweetly whimpered, Calliope took him to her loving bosom. Then first did she lay aside her grief and cease her long lament for Orpheus, and said: "O boy, consecrate to poesy, soon destined to outmatch the bards of old, thou shalt move no rivers or wild herds or Thracian ash-trees with thy music, but with eloquent song shalt draw after thee the seven hills and Martian Tiber and the learned knights and purple Senate. Let others follow the tracks that poets' wheels have worn, the night of Phrygia's overthrow, Ulysses' slow returning path, Minerva's daring vessel: thou, dear to Latium and mindful of thy race, more boldly dost unsheathe a Roman epic. And first, while in tender youth, thou

---

a Lucan was born at Corduba, as was also the philosopher Seneca, his uncle. Gallio was a rhetorician, brother of the younger Seneca, and the adopted son of Junius Gallio.

b The river near Homer's birthplace, Smyrna; hence he is sometimes called Melesigenes. Lucan was born at Corduba in Baetica. "Tritonis" = Pallas.

c i.e. Iliad, Odyssey, Argonautica.

131
Hectora Thessalosque currus et supplex Priami potentis aurum, et sedes reserabis inferorum, ingratus Nero dulcis theatris et noster tibi proferetur Orpheus. dices culminibus Remi vagantis infandos domini nocentis ignes. hinc castae titulum decusque Pollaeiocunda dabis adlocutione.

mox coepta generosior iuventa albos ossibus Italis Philippos et Pharsalica bella detonabis, convulsunm2 ducis inter arma divi, libertate gravem pia Catonem et gratum popularitate Magnum. tu Pelusiaci scelus Canopi deflebis pius et Pharo cruenta Pompeio dabis altius sepulcrum. haec primo iuvenis canes sub aevo, ante annos Culicis Maroniani. cedet Musa rudis feroceis Enni et docti furor arduus Lucreti, et qui per freta duxit Argonautas, et qui corpora prima transfigurat. quid maius loquar? ipsa te Latinis Aeneis venerabitur canentem.

1 ludes L: laudes M1: laudas m.

The works of Lucan here alluded to are (i.) The Tale of Troy, (ii.) A Catacathanion, or Journey to the Underworld, (iii.) A Praise of Nero, (iv.) The Story of Orpheus, (v.) a de-shalt practise thy pen \(^a\) on Hector and the chariots of Thessaly and king Priam's suppliant gold, and shalt unlock the abodes of hell: ungrateful Nero and my own Orpheus shall be set forth by thee to favouring theatres. Thou shalt tell how the impious fires of the guilty monarch ranged the heights of Remus. Then by a charming address thou shalt bestow fame and glory upon chaste Polla. Thereafter more generous in ripened manhood thou shalt thunderously rehearse Philippi, white with Italian bones, and Pharsalian wars, and Cato, grave champion of Freedom, blasted amidst the arms of the divine chief,\(^b\) and Magnus, favourite of the people. Thou shalt shed reverent tears for the crime of Pelusian Canopus, and raise to Pompey\(^c\) a memorial loftier than blood-stained Pharos. These lays shalt thou sing as a youth in early prime,\(^d\) before the age at which Virgil wrote his \(\text{Name}\). The untutored Muse of bold Ennius shall give way to thine, and the towering frenzy of learned Lucretius, he\(^e\) too who led the Argonauts through the narrow seas, and he who changes bodies from their former shapes.\(^f\) What greater praise can I give? the \(Aeneid\) itself, as thou singest to Roman folk, shall do thee homage. Nor will I give thee splendour of song alone, but with \(^a\) Caesar, subsequently deified.

---

\(^b\) The murder of Pompey there after Pharsalus.

\(^c\) \(i.e.,\) before he was twenty-six: hence it is argued that "XVI." in Donatus's life of Virgil must be changed to "XXVI.," as the year in which he wrote the \(Cul\)ex.

\(^d\) Varro Atacinus.

\(^f\) Ovid in the \(Metamorphoses.\) sed taedis genialibus dicabo doctam atque ingenio tuo decoram, qualem blanda Venus daretque Iuno forma, simplicitate, comitate, census, sanguine, gratia, decore, et vestros hymenaeon ante postes festis cantibus ipsa personabo.
o saevae nimium gravesque Parcae!
o numquam data longa fata summis!
ceur plus, ardua, casibus patetis?
ceur saeva vice magna non senescunt?
sic natum Nasamonii Tonantis post ortus obitusque fulminatos angusto Babylon premit sepulcro.
sic fixum Paridis manu trementis¹ Peliden Thetis horruit cadentem.
sic ripis ego murmuratione Hebri non mutum caput Orpheos sequebar.
sic et tu—rabidi nefas tyranni!— iussus praecipitem subire Lethen, dum pugnas canis arduaque voce das solacia grandibus sepulcris,
—o dirum scelus! o scelus!—tacebis."
sic fatal est leviterque decidentes abrasit lacrinas nitente plectro.
At tu, seu rapidum poli per axem Famae curribus arduis levatus, qua surgunt animae potentiores,

¹ trementis /lists: prementis L.M.

---

a The construction is paralleled by Plautus, Miles 619
"neque te decora neque tuis virtutibus."

b Alexander the Great, who proclaimed himself the son of the Libyan god Ammon (= Jupiter).
the torches of wedlock \(^a\) will bestow on thee a poetess suited to thy genius, for beauty, simplicity, graciousness, wealth, lineage, charm, and loveliness worthy of kindly Venus’ or of Juno’s giving, and myself will chant before your gate the festal marriage-hymn. Alas! ye Fates, too stern and cruel! Alas! that the highest never long endure! Why are lofty things most prone to fall? Why by a cruel chance doth greatness ne’er grow old? Even so is the son of the Nasamonian Thunderer,\(^b\) whose lightning flashed from rising to setting sun,\(^c\) confined in a narrow tomb at Babylon. Even so did Thetis swoon to see Pelides fall, pierced by the hand of coward Paris. Even so did I upon the banks of murmuring Hebrus follow the head of Orpheus not mute in death. Even so on thee—ah! the impious \(^d\) frenzied tyrant!—bidden while singing of battles and with lofty utterance solacing the mighty dead to plunge in Lethe’s rushing stream—O crime. O most foul crime!—on thee too shall silence fall.” She spoke, and with shining quill brushed away her lightly-falling tears.

But \(^e\) thou, whether uplifted in the soaring chariot of fame through the whirling vault of heaven, whither rise more puissant souls, thou lookest down upon the

\(^a\) Or “after his lightning-swift rise and setting.” But “fulmen” is commonly used in poetry of a warlike hero, as “duo fulmina belli” of the Scipios by Virgil, and Sidonius seems to be imitating Statius in “paterno actum fulmine pervolasse terras” (ix. 50), and in “vitam fulminibus parem peregit” (xxiii. 96).

\(^b\) Postgate takes “nefas” in apposition to “tu,” “a reproach to the frenzied tyrant,” i.e. Lucan is to be a reproach to the tyrant Nero.

\(^c\) Cf. the opening of Phars. ix.
Statius

terras despies et sepulera rides; seu pacis merito nemus reclusi felix Elysi tenes in oris, quo Pharsaliea turba congregatur, et te nobile carmen insonantem Pompeia comitantur et Catones, seu magnas aeceret superbus umbra noseis Tartaron et procul nocentum audis verbera pallidumque visa matris lampade respices Neronem, adis lucidus et vocante Polla unum, quae, diem deos silentum exores: solet hoe patere limen ad nuptas redentibus maritis.
haec te non thiasis proeas dolosis falsi numinis induit figura, ipsum sed colit et frequentat ipsum imis altius insitum medullis, ac solacia vana subministrat vultus, qui simili notatus auro stratis praenitet incubatque somno securae. procul hine abite, Mortes:
haec vitae genialis est origo.
ceedat luctus atrox genisque manent iam dulces lacrimae dolorque festus, quicquid fleverat ante, nune adoret.

1 seu Heinsius: tu L.M: dum Bursian.
2 noseis Haupt: neseis L.M.
3 vana L.M: vera Baehrens.

a Nero had his mother Agrippina put to death.
b Statius has in mind here the story of Laodamia and Protesilaus, who was allowed to return to his wife for one day. Laodamia venerated her husband in the form of earth and laughest at sepulchres; or whether on Elysian shores that thy deserts have won thee thou hast gained the blissful bower of peace, where the heroes of Pharsalus forgather, and as thy noble lay resounds a Pompey or a Cato bears thee company; or whether a mighty shade, inviolable and proud, thou visitest Tartarus and hearest afar the stripes of the guilty and beholdest Nero pale at the sight of his mother’s torch: \( ^{a} \) be present in shining splendour, and, since Polla calls thee, gain one day, I beg, from the gods of the silent world: \( ^{b} \) open is that door to husbands returning to their brides. She clothes thee not in the shape of an unreal deity, in the wantonness of lying revels, but worships thy very self and has communion with thee in her being’s inmost depths, and wins but empty solace from thy countenance which carved to thy likeness in gold shines above her couch and broods over her untroubled slumbers. Depart far hence, ye Deaths: here is the well-spring of sustaining life.\( ^{c} \) Let stubborn sorrow have an end, and tears of happiness now fall, and the mourning of solemn grief be turned to adoration.

Bacchus, and seems to have feigned herself a votary of that god, to avoid a second marriage. Polla’s reverence for her husband does not need such aid. It was a contemporary custom, to honour the dead in the form of deities, \( \text{cf. Silvae, v. 1. 231, Suet. Cal. 7} \) of the young son of Germanicus and Agrippina, who died in early boyhood; Livia set up an image of him in the character of Cupid, \( \text{cf. also Apuleius, Met. viii. 7.} \)

\( ^{c} \) The Genius or vital principle, incarnate in the head of the family while he is alive, still abides for Polla in the spirit of the departed, with whom she enjoys a mystic communion.
Tibi certe, Polli duleissime et hae cui tam fideliter inhaeres quiete dignissime, non habeo diu probandam libellorum istorum temeritatem, cum seias multos ex illis in sinu tuo subito natos et hanc audaciam stili nostri frequenter expaveris, quotiens in illius faeundiae tuae penetrati seductus altius litteras intro et in omnes a te studiorum sinus dueor.
Securus itaque tertius hie silvarum nostrarum liber ad te mittitur. Habuerat quidem te secundus testem sed hie habet auctorem. Nam primum limen eius Hercules Surrentinus aperit, quem in litore tuo conseeratum, statim ut videram, his versibus adoravi.
Sequitur libellus, quo splendidissimum et mihi iucundissimum iuvenem, Maecium Celerem, a saera-tissimo imperatore missum ad legionem Syriaeam, quia sequi non poteram, sie prosecutus sum. Mebebatur et Claudi Etrusei mei pietas aliquod ex studiis nostriis solaeum, cum lugeret veris—quod iam

\[a\] Pollius: see on ii. 2 and iii. 1.
BOOK III

Statius to his Friend Pollius: Greeting!

To you at least, my dearest Pollius, than whom none is more worthy of that tranquillity to which you cling so faithfully, to you at least I need not justify at great length the boldness of my verses, for you know that many of them came suddenly to birth under your protecting care, and often have you been alarmed at the audacity of my pen, when in the intimacy of your genius I have ventured deep into the secluded realm of letters, and have been led by you through all the winding ways of poesy.

And so it is without fear that I send you this third volume of my Impromptu verses. For while you lent your witness to the second, to this you have given the authority of your name. For its gates are unbarred by the Surrentine Hercules, to which, when I had seen it after its dedication on your shore, I at once paid my tribute in these lines. Then comes a poem, which, when my charming and distinguished friend, Maecius Celer, was ordered by our sacred Emperor to the Syrian front, since I could not follow him, I sent to attend him on his way. The devotion of my dear Claudius Etruseus also deserved some solace from my pen when in real grief—and how rare that is!—he was mourning... rarissimum\textsuperscript{1} est—lacrimis senem patrem. Earinus praeterea, Germanici nostri libertus—seis\textsuperscript{2} quamdiu desiderium cius moratus sim, cum petisset ut capillos suos, quos cum gemmata pyxide et speculo ad Per-gamenum Asclepium mittebat, versibus dedicarem. Summa est egloga, qua mecum secedere Neapolim Claudiam meam exhortor. Hic, si verum dicimus, sermo et quidem securus, ut cum uxor et qui persuadere malit quam placere. Huic praeceipue libello favebis, cum seias hanc destinationem quietis meae tibi maxime intendere meque non tam in patriam quam ad te secedere. Vale.

\textbf{I}

\textbf{HERCULES SURRENTINUS POLLII FELICIS}

Intermissa tibi renovat, Tirynthie, sacra Pollius et causas designat desidis anni, quod coleris maiore tholo, nec litora pauper nuda tenes tectumque vagis habitabile nautis, sed nitidos postes Graisque effulta metallis culmina, ceu taedis iterum lustratus honesti ignis ab Oetaea conscenderis aethera flamma. vix oculis animoque fides. tune ille reclusi

\textsuperscript{1} iam rarissimum \textit{Bachrens}: amarissimum \textit{M}: rarissimum \textsuperscript{5}.

\textsuperscript{2} seis \textit{Vollmer}: seit \textit{M}.

\textit{a} A common epithet of Hercules, who was reared at Tiryns, though born at Thebes.
\textit{b} \textit{i.e.}, having the new temple is like being deified anew. Oeta was the scene of the burning of Hercules and his apotheosis.

140
for his aged father. Next Earinus, freedman of our prince Germanicus—you know how long I have put off the Emperor's expressed desire that I should write some verses in honour of his tresses, which he was sending to Aselepius at Pergamum together with a mirror and a jewelled box. Finally there is the piece in which I entreat my wife Claudia to retire with me to Naples. This, to tell the truth, is just talk, quite unreserved, from a husband to a wife, and that would persuade rather than delight. You will particularly favour this poem, since you will know that you above all are the object of my proposed retreat, and that my retirement is not so much to my own country as to yourself. Farewell.

I. THE TEMPLE OF HERCULES BUILT BY POLLIUS FELIX AT SURRENTUM

The poem describes how Pollius built a more worthy temple for Hercules in the neighbourhood of his villa; the god himself gave assistance, and the work was finished with miraculous speed. The piece ends with praise of Pollius, put into the mouth of the grateful deity.

Pollius renews thy interrupted rites, O lord of Tiryns, and makes clear the causes of a year's neglect, seeing that now thou art worshipped beneath a mightier dome, and no longer hast a beggarly home on the naked shore, a shanty where wandering mariners can lodge, but shining portals and towers upheld by Grecian marbles, as though purified by the brands of ennobling fire thou hadst a second time ascended heavenward from Oeta's flames. Scarce can sight or memory be trusted. Art thou verily that liminis et parvae custos inglorius arae?

144
unde haec aula recens fulgorque inopinus agresti Alcidae? sunt fata deum, sunt fata locorum!
o velox pietas! steriles hie nuper harenas, adsparsum pelago montis latus hirtaque dumis saxa nec ulla pati faciles vestigia terras cernere erat. quaenam subito fortuna rigentes ditavit scopulos? Tyrione haec moenia plectro an Getica venere lyra? stupet ipse labores annus, et angusti bisseno limite menses longaevum mirantur opus. deus attulit arces erexitque suas atque obluetantia saxa summovit uitens et magno pectore montem reppulit: immitem credas iussisse novercam.
Ergo age, seu patrios liber iam legibus Argos incolis et mersum tumulis Eurysthea cales, sive tui solium Lovis et virtute parata astra tenes, haustumque tibi succincta beati nectaris excluso melior Phryge porrigit Hebe:
huc ades et genium templis nascentibus infer.
non te Lerna nocens nec pauperis arva Molorchi nec formidatus Nemees ager antraque poscunt Thracia nec Pharii polluta altaria regis, sed felix simplexque domus fraudumque malarum inscia et hospitibus superis dignissima sedes.
pone truces arcus agmenque immite pharetrae et regum multo perfusum sanguine robur, instratumque umeris dimitte rigentibus1 hostem:

1 rigentibus Gervart: gerentibus M: ingentibus Markland.

142
inglorious warden of a gateless threshold and a puny altar? Whence hath the rustic Aleides this new court and this unwonted splendour? Gods have their destinies and places also! What swift devotion! Here of late could be seen but barren sands, a wave-beaten mountain-side, and boulders rough with scrub, and cliffs that would scarce admit a foothold. What sudden fortune has embellished these stark crags? Did those walls rise to Tyrian music or to the Getic harp? The year itself marvels at the toil, and the months in their twelfe-fold orbit are amazed to see the work of ages. 'Twas the god that brought and uplifted his own towers, and by might and main moved the resisting boulders, and with huge breast drove back the mountain; you would have thought his cruel stepdame bade him.

Come then, whether free at last from thraldom thou dwellest in thy ancestral Argos, and spurnest Eurystheus in his grave, or whether the throne of thy father Jove and the stars thy valour won thee are thy abode, and Hebe with robe upgirt, more charming than the banished Phrygian lad, hands thee the draught of blissful nectar: hither come, and bring thy presence to the new-born shrine. No harmful Lerna calls thee, nor the acres of poor Molochus nor Nemea's dreaded field, nor Thracian caves nor the polluted altars of the Pharian prince, but a blest and innocent home that knows naught of evil fraud, an abode most worthy of a divine guest. Lay aside thy ruthless bow and thy quiver's cruel horde and the club that plenteous blood of kings hath stained; cast off the foe that is spread upon thy

---

\(^a\) The capture of the Horses of Diomed in Thrace and the slaughter of Busiris in Egypt are referred to.
hie tibi Sidonio celsum pulvinar acantho texitur et signis crescit torus asper eburnis, pacatus mitisque veni nec turbidus ira nec famulare timens, sed quem te Maenalis Auge 40 confectum thiasis et multo fratre madentem detinuit qualemque vagae post crimina noctis Thespius obstupuit, totiens socer. hic tibi festa gymnas, et insontes iuvenum sine caestibus\(^1\) irae annua veloci peragunt certamina lustro.
45
hie templis inscriptus avo gauidente sacerdos parvus adhuc similisque tui, cum prima novercae monstra manu premeres atque exanimata doleres.

Sed quaenam subiti, veneranda, exordia templi, die age, Calliope; socius tibi grande sonabit 50 Acleides tensoque modos imitabitur areu.

Tempus erat, caeli cum torrentissimus axis incumbit terris ictusque Hyperione multo acer anhelantes incendit Sirius agros.
iamque dies aderat, profugis cum regibus aptum 55 fumat Aricinum Triviae nemus et face multa conseius Hippolyti splendet lacus; ipsa coronat emeritos Diana canes et spicula terget et tutas sinit ire feras, omnisque pudieis

\(^1\) caestibus M; testibus \(\vec{5}\); caedibus Markland.

---

\(a\) Of Tegea in Arcadia, mother of Telephus by Hercules. The jovial and amatory character of the god is a common theme of ancient literature.

\(b\) Bacchus was a brother of Hercules, being equally son of Zeus.

\(c\) Probably the eldest son of Julius Menecrates, to whom iv. 8 is addressed.

\(d\) The snakes that Hera sent to slay him in his cradle.

\(e\) Hippolytus when healed by Asclepios was hidden by Diana in her precinct by the lake. The lake of Nemi is stalwart shoulders: here are high-piled cushions for thee, embroidered with acanthus in purple hue, and a lofty couch all rough with ivory carving. Come in a peaceable and gentle spirit, not turbulent with wrath nor suspicious like a slave, but in such mood as when Auge a the Maenalian maid detained thee, worn out with revel and drenched with thy brother’s wine, b or when Thespius, the father of thy many brides, marvelled at thee after the reproach of that roving night. Here hast thou a festal playing-ground, where ungloved youths in innocent rivalry perform the yearly, swift-recurring contests. Here on thy temple is written thy priest’s name to the joy of his grandsire: c small is he yet, and like to thee when with thy hand thou didst quell the first monsters of thy stepdame d and weep that they were slain.

But come, august Calliope, tell how the sudden shrine arose; Alcides will bear thee company with ringing voice, and twang his bowstring to imitate thy strains.

'Twas the season when the vault of heaven bends its most scorching heat upon the earth, and the Dog-star smitten by Hyperion’s full might pitilessly burns the panting fields. And now the day had come, when the torch-smoke rises from Trivia’s grove at Aricia, refuge of the runaways who reign there, and the lights twinkle on the lake that knew the secret of Hippolytus e; Diana herself sets garlands on her faithful hounds, and polishes her darts and lets the wild beasts go free, while at its virtuous close to Aricia; the priest of the shrine was called "rex Nemorensis," and was a runaway slave who "slays the slayer and shall himself be slain."

Itala terra foecis Hecateidas excolit idus.
ast ego, Dardaniae quamvis sub collibus Albae rus proprium magnique ducis mihi munere currens unda domi curas mulcere aestusque levare sufficerent, notas Sirenum nomine rupeus facundique larem Polli non hospes habebam, assidue moresque viri pacemque novosque Pieridum flores intactaque carmina discens, forte diem Triviae dum litore ducimus udo angustaque fores adsuetaque tecta gravati frondibus et patula defendimus arbore soles, delituit caelum et subitis lux candida cessit nubibus ae tennis graviore favonius austro immaduit; qualem Libyae Saturnia nimbum attulit, Iliaco dum dives Elissa marito donatur testesque ululant per devia nymphae.
diffugimus, festasque dapes redimitaque vina abripiunt famuli: nec quo convivia migrent, quamvis innumeræ gaudentia rura superne insedere domus et multo culmine dives mons nitet: instantes sed proxima quaerere nimbi suadebant laesique fides reeditura sereni.
stabat dicta sacri tenuis casa nomine templi et magnum Alciden humili lare parva premebat, fluctivagos nautas scrutatoresque profundi vix operire capax. huc omnis turba coimus, huc epulae ditesque tori coetusque ministrum stipantur nitidaeque cohors gratissima Pollae.
non cepere fores, angustaque deficit aedes.

a August 13th.
b i.e., Diana.
c Because founded by the Trojans under Aeneas.
d Domitian had built the poet a water-conduit on his estate at Alba, where the Emperor himself had a residence.
e Surrentum, cf. ii. 2.
hearths all Italy celebrates the Ides of Hecate. But I, although beneath Dardanian Alba's hills an estate of my own and a rivulet that runs for me by the grace of our great prince sufficed to soothe my cares and to allay the summer heat, was making the rocks of the Sirens and the home of eloquent Pollius my abode, no stranger there, and zealously gaining knowledge of his peaceful soul and studying the new Pierian blooms of his innocent Muse. It chanced that, while we were spending Trivia's day upon the watery shore, and discontented with narrow doors and wonted house were sheltering from the sun 'neath the foliage of a spreading tree, the sky was hid, the bright light gave place to sudden cloud and the faint breeze changed to a heavy downpour from the south; such a storm as Saturnia brought upon Libya, while wealthy Elissa was given to her Ilian lover and the witnessing Nymphs shrieked in the pathless glades. Helter-skelter we fly, and the slaves snatch up the festal banquet and wreathed goblets; nor was there any refuge for the guests, though countless houses were planted on the happy fields above, and the mountain glittered with a wealth of towers; but the lowering clouds and the assurance that the fair weather, though ruined, would return, urged us to seek the nearest shelter. There stood a mean shanty bearing the name of a sacred shrine, that confined the great Alcides within its humble walls, scarce large enough to house sea-wandering mariners and searchers of the deep. Hither all the crowd of us gather, hither throng the band of slaves with the costly couches and the feast, and all the pleasant household of elegant Polla. The doors would not contain us, the narrow shrine lacked room.
erubuit risitque deus dilectaque Polli corda subit blandisque virum complectitur ulnis. 90
"tune," inquit, "largitor opum, qui mente profusa tecta Dicarchei pariter iuvenemque replesti Parthenopen? nostro qui tot fastigia monti, tot virides lucos, tot saxa imitantia vultus aeraque, tot scripto viventes lumine ceras fixisti? quid enim ista domus, quid terra, priusquam te ganderet, erat? longo tu tramite nudos texisti seopulos, fueratque ubi semita tantum, nunc tibi distinctis stat porticus alta columnis, ne sorderet iter. curvi tu litoris ora 100
clausisti calidas gemina testudine nymphas.
vix opera enumerem; mihi pauper et indigus uni Pollius? et tales hilaris tamen intro penates et litus, quod pandis, amo. sed proxima sedem despicit et tacite ridet mea limina luno.
da templum dignasque tuis conatibus aras,
quas puppes velis nolint transire secundis, quo pater aetherius mensisque accita deorum turba et ab excelso veniat soror hospita templo.
nec te, quod solidus contra riget umbo maligni montis et immenso non umquam exesus ab aevo, terreat: ipse adero et conamina tanta iuvabo asperaque invitae perfringam viscera terrae.
incipe et Herculeis fidens hortatibus aude.

\[a\] Founder of Puteoli.

\[b\] "iuvenem" seems to be a play upon the literal meaning of Parthenope (πάρθηνος = maiden), cf. iv. 8. 55. Statius is fond of doing this, cf. Phemonoe (iv. 2. 38), Pimplea (ib. 37).

\[c\] Not otherwise mentioned, exc. l. 137.

\[d\] It would stop either to look at and salute the temple,
The god blushed, and laughing stole into the heart of his beloved Pollius, and with caressing arms embraced his friend: "Art thou," said he, "that lavisher of wealth, who with generous heart hast filled full alike the dwellings of Dicarcheus and youthful Parthenope? who on my own mount hast set so many towers, so many verdant groves, so many lifelike marbles and bronzes, and waxen forms that the glow of colour animates? For what was that house of thine, that country before it rejoiced in thee? Thou didst clothe bare rock with a long pathway, and where before was but a track, now stands a lofty colonnade with painted pillars, that the road might be seemly. Upon the curving strand thou didst imprison heated waters 'neath cupolas twain. Scarce can I number all thy works: and to me alone is Pollius needy and in want? yet even such a shrine I enter cheerfully, and love the shore thou openest to me. But Juno hard by scorns my dwelling, and laughs silently at my shrine. Give me a temple and an altar worthy of thy endeavours, an altar such as no vessel would fain neglect though speeding with prosperous sail, one to which the ethereal Sire and the guests of heavenly banquets and my sister invited from her lofty shrine might come. Nor be dismayed that a mass of stark, malignant mountain doth confront thee, which unnumbered ages have not worn away; I will myself be present to aid so great an enterprise, and will break through the flinty bowels of the unwilling earth. Begin, and dare the task, trusting in Hereules' encouragement.

e From the promontory of Minerva near by.
non Amphioniae steterint velocius areces Pergameusve labor." dixit mentemque reliquit.
         Nec mora, cum scripta formatur imagine tela, innumerae coiure manus: his caedere silvas et levare trabes, illis immergere curae fundamenta solo. coquitur pars umida terrae protectura hiemes atque exclusura pruinas, indomitusque silex curva fornace liquescit. praecipuus sed enim labor est exscindere dextra oppositasrupes et saxa negantia ferro. hic pater ipse loci positis Tirynthius armis insudat validaque solum deformebipenni, cum grave nocturna eaelum subtexitur umbra, ipse fodit. ditesque Caprae\textsuperscript{1} viridesque resultant Taurubulae, et terris ingens redit aequoris echo. non tam grande sonat motis incudibus Aetne, cum Brontes Steropesque ferit, nec maior ab antris Lemniacis fragor est, ubi flammeus aegida caelat Muleiber et castis exornat Pallada donis. decrescent scopuli, et rosea sub luce reversi artifices mirantur opus. vix annus anhelat alter, et ingenti dives Tirynthius arce despectat fluctus et innetae tecta novercae provocat et dignis invitat Pallada templis. iam placidae dant signa tubae, iam fortibus ardens fumat harena saeris. hos nec Pisaeus honores Iuppiter aut Cirrhae pater aspernetur opacae. nil his triste locis: cedat lacrimabilis Isthmos, \textsuperscript{1} ditesque Caprae \textit{M}: dites Capreae \textit{S}.

\textsuperscript{a} The walls of Troy were built by Apollo and Neptune, those of Thebes by the music of Amphion.
\textsuperscript{b} Cf. "corda subit," l. 90. \textsuperscript{c} An island near Naples.
Anchises's towers will not have risen more swiftly, nor the toilsome walls of Troy.\" He spoke, and went from out his heart.\"

Without delay the design is sketched and the plan shaped. Innumerable workers gather: some have the task of felling trees or planing beams, others sink the foundations in the soil. Moist clay is baked to protect against storm and to keep out frost, and untamed limestone is melted in the round furnace. But the chief labour is to cleave by might and main the opposing rock and the boulders that resist the steel. Hereupon the patron of the place, the Tirynthian himself, lays by his arms and sweats at the work, and himself with strong axe hews at the shapeless mass, when the lowering sky is veiled by the shades of night. Rich Caprae and green Taurubulae\c resound, and the mighty echo of the sea returns again to the land. Not so loud is Aetna's din, when the anvils are busy and Brontes and Steropes ply the hammer, nor greater the noise from the Lemnian caves when Mulciber amid his flames forges the aegis and makes chaste gifts for Pallas. The cliffs diminish, and the workmen returning in the rosy dawn marvel at the achievement. Scarcely has a second panting summer come, when the Tirynthian enriched by a mighty dome looks down upon the waves and challenges his stepdame's neighbouring abode, and invites Pallas to a temple worthy of her. Already the peaceful trumpets give the signal, already the sand smokes and burns with the valiant contests. Such honours would neither Pisaean Jove nor the sire of leafy Cirrha spurn.\d No sadness is here: let tearful Isthmos and cruel Nemea give eedat atrox Nemeae : litat hie felicior infans.

\d i.e., at the games of Olympia and Delphi.
ipsae pumiceis\(^1\) virides Nereides antris exsiliunt ultro : scopulis uentibus haerent nec pudet occulte nudas spectare palaestras.
spectat et Icario nemorosus palmitae Gaurus silvaeque, quae fixam pelago Nesida coronat, et placidus Limon omenque\(^2\) Euploea carinis et Lucina Venus, Phrygioque e vertice Graias addisse, Misene, tubas, ridetque benigna Parthenope gentile sacrum nudosque virorum ecretatus et parva suae simulacra coronae.
Quin age et ipse libens proprii certaminis actus invicta dignare manu ; seu nubila disco findere seu volucres zephyros praeecedere telo seu tibi dulee manu Libycas nodare palaestras, indulge sacris, et, si tibi poma supersunt Hesperidum, gremio venerabilis ingere Pollae ; nam capit et tantum non degenerabit\(^3\) honorem.
quod si dulee decus viridesque resumeret annos,
—da veniam, Aleide—fors huic et pensa tulisses.
Haec ego nascentes laetus bacchatus ad aras libamenta tuli. nunc ipse\(^4\) in limine—erno solventem voces et talia dicta ferentem :

\(^1\) pumiceis \^\text{3}: \text{pumiceis } M \text{ Pol. (from } P).
\(^2\) Limon omenque \text{Guyet}: \text{limo numenque } M.
\(^3\) degenerabit \text{M}: \text{degener ambit Gronovius.}
\(^4\) ipse \text{M}: \text{ipsam Dom.}: \text{ipso \^\text{3}. Macnaghten's punctua-}

---

\(^a\) The Isthmian games were held in honour of the child Palaemon, son of Ino, those at Nemea in honour of Opheltes (Archemorus), for whom see Thebaid iv. (end), v. and vi.
(init.).
\(^b\) Now Monte Barbaro in Campania; its wines were famous; Icarus was a son of Oebalus, king of Sparta, and place; a luckier infant here makes sacrifice." The very Nymphs of the green waters leap forth unbidden from their pumice caves; they cling to the streaming rocks nor think shame to gaze unseen on the naked wrestlers. Gaurus too beholds them with its grove of Icarian vines, and the wood that crowns the peak of Nesis set fast in ocean, and calm Limon and Euploea of good omen for ships and the Lucrine Venus; thou too, Misenus, from thy Phrygian height shalt learn the Grecian trumpet-calls, while Parthenope smiles with kindly heart upon the ceremonies of her race and the naked bouts of youths and the humble garlands that emulate her own.

Come now thyself, and graciously deign to honour the feats of thine own festival with thy invincible might: whether it please thee to cleave the clouds with the discus, or with thy shaft to outstrip the speedy Zephyrs, or to lock fast thy arms in a Libyan wrestle, grant our rites this boon, and, if thou hast still the apples of the Hesperides, place them in the lap of venerable Polla; for she is worthy to take them, and will not dishonour so great a gift. Nay, might she but recover the charm and beauty of her youth—forgive me, Alcides—perchance for her thou hadst even spun the wool.

Such is the offering I have brought in joyful revelry to the new-born shrine. Lo! now he himself upon the threshold—I see him opening his mouth and speaking: "A blessing on thy spirit and thy father of Penelope; he was taught the use of the vine by Bacchus. A temple of Venus near Baiae.

\textsuperscript{a} The reference is to Hercules' bout with Antaeus, the Libyan giant; this leads to the mention of the apples of the Hesperides.

\textsuperscript{b} As he did for Omphale, the Lydian princess.
"maecte animis opibusque meos imitate labores, qui rigidas rupes infecundaeque pudenda naturae deserta domas et vertis in usum lustra habitata feris foedeque latentia profers numina. quae tibi nunc meritorum praemia solvam? quas referam grates? Parcarum fila tenebo extendamque colus—duram scio vincere Mortem—, avertam luctus et tristia damna vetabo teque nihil laesum viridi renovabo senecta concedamque diu iuvenes spectare nepotes, donec et hic sponsae maturus et illa marito, rursus et ex illis sofoles nova grexque protervus nunc umeris inreptet avi. nunc agmine blando certatim placidae concurrat ad oscula Pollae. nam templis numquam statuetur terminus aevi, dum me flammigeri portabit machina caeli. nec mihi plus Nemee priscumque habitabitur Argos nec Tiburna domus solisque cubilia Gades." sie ait; et tangens surgentem altaribus ignem populeaque movens albentia tempora silva et Styga et aetherii iuravit fulmina patris.

II

PROPEMPTICON MAECIO CELERI

Di, quibus audaces amor est servare carinas

\[a\] A different meaning in i. 4. 64: here the threads are to be stretched out and made longer.

\[b\] Strabo mentions a shrine of Hercules at Gades.
wealth, wherewith thou hast imitated my own labours, who canst tame the rugged rocks and the abhorred wastes of barren nature, and turnest to thy use the wild beasts' lairs, and bringest forth my godhead from shameful hiding! What reward shall I now give thee for thy merits? How show my gratitude? I will hold fast the threads of the Fates and stretch out the wool upon their distaffs—I can subdue remorseless Death—I will bid sorrow flee and suffer not sad loss to harm thee, and I will renew thee in a green old age untouched by time, and grant thee long to behold thy growing grandchildren, until the one is ripe for a bride and the other for a husband, and from them a new progeny springs, and a merry band now clammers about their grandsire's shoulders, now run in eager and loving rivalry for the kisses of tranquil Polla. To this shrine shall no term of age be set, so long as the fabrie of the flaming sky shall carry me. Not in Nemea or ancient Argos shall I more often dwell, or in my home at Tibur or in Gades, resting-place of the sun.” So he speaks, and touching the fire that rose upon the altar and nodding his temples white with poplar-leaves he swore by Styx and by the thunderbolt of his ethereal sire.

II. A SEND-OFF POEM TO MAECIUS CELER

The Propempticon or valedictory poem seems to have been one of the regular types of poem for which rules were laid down in the schools of rhetoric; Horace, C. i. 3, Epod. 1, Tibullus, i. 3, may be called Propemptica, cf. also the song in Theocritus, Id. 7. Nothing more is known of Maecius, except that he was consul suffectus in 101.

Ye Gods whose delight it is to preserve adventurous saevaque ventosi malecere pericula ponti, stermite molle fretum placidumque advertite votis concilium, et lenis non obstrepat unda precanti:
"grande tuo rarumque damus, Neptune, profundo 5 depositum. iuvenis dubio committitur alto Maecius atque animae partem super aequora nostrae maiorem transferre parat. proferte benigna sidera et antennaes gemino considite cornu, Oebalii fratres: vobis pontusque polusque lueat: Iliacae longe nimbosa sororis astra fugate, precor. totoque exclusidite caelo.
yos quoque caeruleum ponti. Nereides, agmen, quis honor et regni cessit fortuna secundi
—dicere quae¹ magni fas sit mihi sidera ponti—, surgite de vitreis spumosae Doridos antris Baianosque sinus et feta tepentibus undis litora tranquillo certatim ambite natatu.
quaerentes ubi celsa ratis, quam seandere gaudet nobilis Ausoniae Celer armipotentis alumnus. nee quaerenda diu: modo nam trans aequora terris prima Dicarcheis Pharium gravis intulis annum, prima salutavit Capreas et margine dextro sparsit Tyrrehnae Marcotica vina Minervae.
huis utrumque latus molli praecingite gyro, partitaque vices vos stuppea tendite mali vincula, vos summis adnexit sipara velis, yos zephyris aperite sinus; pars transtra reponat,

¹ quae M: quas Heinsius.

² Spartan, from Oebalus, king of Sparta; i.e., Castor and Pollux.
³ The star of Helen was considered dangerous to ships.
cf. Theb. vii. 792.

156
ships, and to assuage the angry perils of the gusty sea, make the waters smooth and calm, and listen in peaceful council to my entreaties, and let the waves be gentle nor make uproar as I pray: "Great and rare, O Neptune, is the pledge I commit unto thy deep; young Maecius is entrusted to the doubtful main, and is about to take across the seas the dearer half of my soul. Bring forth your favouring stars, Oebalian brethren, and sit upon the twin horns of the yard-arm; let your light illumine sea and sky; drive far away, I pray, your Ilian sister's tempestuous star, and banish her wholly from the heavens. And ye too, Nereids, sea-blue horde of ocean, to whom the glory and the fortune of the second realm have fallen by lot—suffer me to call you stars of the mighty deep!—arise from the glassy caverns of foam-encompassed Doris, and in peaceful rivalry swim round the bays of Baiae and the shores where the hot springs abound; seek out the lofty ship whereon Celer, noble offspring of Ausonia mighty in arms, rejoices to embark. Nor need ye long inquire, for lately came she across the seas, the first of her convoy, to the Dicarhean strand, laden with the Pharian harvest, and first was she to salute Capreae, and over her starboard side to pour libation of Mareotic wine to Tyrrhene Minerva. Circle gracefully about her on either side, and divide your duties: some stretch taut from the mast the hempen rigging, some set the topsails and spread the canvas to the Zephyrs; let others place the benches, or let down into the water

\[c\] The reference is to the warm springs of Baiae, cf. iii. 5. 96, v. 3. 170.
\[d\] i.e., of Egypt, so also "Mareotic."
\[e\] Cf. note on ii. 2. 2.
pars demittat aquis curvae moderamina puppis; sint quibus exploret\textsuperscript{1} plumbo gravis alta molybdus,\textsuperscript{2} quaeque secuturam religent post terga phaselon uncaque summersae penitus retinacula vellant; temperet haec aestus pelagusque inclinet ad ortus: officio careat glaucarum nulla sororum. hinc multo Proteus geminoque hinc corpore Triton praenatet, et subitis qui perdidit inguina monstris Glaucus adhuc patriis quotiens adlabit oris litoream blanda feriens Anthedona cauda. tu tamen ante omnes, diva cum matre Palaemon, annue, si vestras amor est mihi pandere Thebas, nec cano degeneri Phoebeum Amphionia plectro. et pater, Aeolio frangit qui carceri ventos, cui varii flatus omnisque per aequora mundi spiritus atque hiemes nimbosaque nubila parent, artius obiecto Borean Eurumque Notumque monte premat: soli Zephyro sit copia caeli, solus agat puppes summasque supernatet undas assiduus pelago; donec tua turbine nullo laeta\textsuperscript{3} Paraetonii adsignet carbasa ripis."

 Audimur. vocat ipse ratem nautasque morantes increpat. ecce meum timido iam frigore pectus labitur et nequeo, quamvis monet ominis horror, claudere suspensos oculorum in margine fletus. iamque ratem terris divisit fune soluto

\textsuperscript{1} exploret \textit{Dom.} : explorent \textit{M.}

\textsuperscript{2} plumbo gravis alta molybdus \textit{Turnebus}: primos gravis arte molorchos \textit{M}. \textit{The emendations of this line are numerous, but none satisfactory}: primos gravis artemo lembos \textit{Vollmer}: plenos gravis artemo lintres, primos gravia arma ceruchos \textit{are various suggestions}.

\textsuperscript{3} laeta \textit{M} : laesa \textit{Heinsius}.
the rudder that guides the curving bark; let there be some to make the heavy sounding-lead explore the depths, and others to fasten the skiff that will follow astern, and to dive down and drag the hooked anchor from the depths, and one to control the tides and make the sea flow eastward: let none of the sea-green sisterhood be without a task. Then let Proteus of manifold shape and twy-formed Triton swim before, and Glaucus a whose loins vanished by sudden enchantment, and who, so oft as he glides up to his native shores, wistfully beats his fish-tail on Anthedon's strand. But above all others thou, Palaemon, with thy goddess mother, be favourable, if 'tis thy desire that I should tell of thine own Thebes, and sing of Amphion, bard of Phoebus, with no unworthy quill. And may the father whose Aeolian prison constrains the winds, whom the various blasts obey, and every air that stirs on the world's seas, and storms and cloudy tempests, keep the North wind and South and East in closer custody behind his wall of mountain; but may Zephyr alone have the freedom of the sky, alone drive vessels onward and skim uneasingly o'er the crests of the billows, until he bring without a storm thy glad sails safe to the Paraetonian b haven."

My prayer is heard. The West wind himself calls the ship and chides the laggard crew. Lo! already my heart sinks, chilled with fear, and I cannot, though the omen shocks me, hold back the tears that hover upon my eyelids' verge. And already the sailor has loosed the rope and sundered the vessel

---

b Egyptian, from Paraetonium, a town on the Libyan coast.
navita et angustum deiecit in aequora pontem. 55
saevus et e puppy longo clamore magister dissipat amplexus atque oscula fida revellit, nee longum cara licet in cervice morari.
attamen in terras e plebe novissimus omni ibo nec egrediar nisi iam cedente carina.1 60

Quis rude et abscessum miseris animantibus aequor fecit iter solidaeque pios telluris alumnos expulit in fluctus pelagoque immisit hianti audax ingenii? nec enim temeraria virtus illa magis, summae geliford quae Pelion Ossae iunxit anhelantemque ingis bis pressit Olympum.
usque adeone parum lentas transire paludes stagnaque et angustos summittere pontibus amnes?
imus in abruptum gentilesque undique terras fugimus exigua clausi trabe et aere nudo.
inde furor ventis indignataeque procellae et caeli fremitus et fulmina plura Tonanti.
ante rates pigro torpebant aequora somno, nec spumare Thetis nec spargere nubila fluctus auedabant. visis tumuerunt puppibus undae, inque hominem surrexit hiems. tune nubila Plias Oleniumque pecus, solito tune peior Orion.
justa queror; fugit eee vagas ratis aeta per undas paulatim minor et longe servantia vincit lumina tot graci legno complexa timores, quaeque super reliquos te, nostri pignus amoris, portatura, Celer. quo nune ego pectore somnos quove2 queam perferre dies? quis cuncta paventi

1 iam cedente carina Dom.: iam carina M.
2 quo . . . quove Skutsch: quos . . . quosve M.

a The star called Capella, see note on i. 3. 96. Its rising denoted the beginning of stormy weather.
160
from the land, and dropped the narrow gangway into the water. On the stern the ruthless master with long-drawn shout severs our embraces and parts loving lips, nor may one linger long upon the dear one's breast. Yet last of all will I be to go on land, nor will I leave the ship until she is already under way.

Who made of the strange and sundered sea a high-way for miserable men, and east forth upon the waves the loyal children of the solid earth and hurled them into the jaws of ocean—daring of spirit? for not more adventurous was the valour that joined frozen Pelion to Ossa's summit, and crushed panting Olympus beneath two mountains. So small a feat was it to traverse sluggish lakes and meres and fling bridges across the narrowed streams? Forth we go into sheer void, and are fled from the native lands about us, enclosed in nought but a few planks and the empty air. Therefore do the winds and angry tempests rage, the sky thunders and many a bolt is sped from the hand of Jove. Before ships were, the waters lay in a slumbrous calm, Thetis dared not foam nor the waves assault the clouds. But when they spied vessels, the billows swelled with rage, and the hurricane arose against man. Then the Pleiads and the Olenian goat grew dark with storm, and Orion was more wrathful than his wont. Not in vain is my complaint: lo! speeding over the pathless waters flies the ship, lessening by degrees and baffling the eyes that view her from afar; how many fears does she hold within her slender timbers! thee above all must she bear onward, Celer, object of my love! With what feelings can I endure night's slumbers or the day? Who will tell me, a prey to nuntius, an facili te praetermiserit unda Lucani rabida ora maris, num torta Charybdis fluctuet aut Siculi populatrix virgo profundi, quos tibi currenti praeeeps gerat Hadria mores, quae pax Carpathio, quali te subvehat aura Doris Agenorei furtis blandita iuveni?
sed merui questus. quid enim te castra petente non vel ad ignotos ibam comes impiger Indos Cimmeriumque chaos? starem prope bellica regis signa mei, seu tela manu seu frena teneres, armatis seu iura dares; operumque tuorum etsi non socius, certe mirator adessem.

si quondam magno Phoenix reverendus Achilli litus ad Iliacum Thymbraeaque Pergama venit imbellis tumidoque nihil iuratus Atridae, cur nobis ignavus amor? sed pectore fido numquam abero longisque sequar tua carbasa votis.

Isi, Phoroneis olim stabulata sub antris, nunc regina Phari numenque orientis anheli, excipe multisono puppem Mareotida sistro, ac iuvenem egregium, Latius cui dctor Eoa signa Palaestinasque dedit frenare cohortes, ipsa manu placida per limina festa sacrosque due portus urbesque tuas. te praeside noscat, unde paludosi fecunda licentia Nili, cur vada desidant et ripa coercet undas

---

a i.e., Scylla.
b i.e., the sea between Crete and the Phoenician coast, over which travelled the bull that carried off Europa, daughter of Agenor, king of Phoenicia.
c The regions to the north of the Euxine, whence the name Crimea.
d The sistrum was a sort of rattle much used in the worship of Isis, here identified with Io, whom Hera out of jealousy every terror, whether the raging coast of the Lucanian sea has sped thee by on favouring waves, whether eddying Charybdis be heaving or the maid that ravages the Sicilian deep, how the furious Adriatic aids thy course, whether the Carpathian be at peace, and with what breeze the sea-nymph be wafting thee, that once smiled on the cunning of the Tyrian bull? But I have deserved to mourn: for why, when thou wert bound for the wars, went I not with thee, an unwearied traveller, to unknown India and Cimmerian gloom? By my patron's warlike banner had I been standing, were it weapon or bridle thou wert holding, or whether thou wert giving laws to armed peoples, present if not to share, at least to admire thy deeds. If Phoenix whom great Achilles honoured came long ago to the Ilian shore and Thymbraean Troy, though not a warrior nor bound by oath to proud Atrides, why is my affection cowardly? But my loyal thoughts shall be ever with thee, and my prayers shall follow thy sails to distant lands.

Isis, once stalled in Phoroneus' eaves, now queen of Pharos and a deity of the breathless East, welcome with sound of many a sistrum the Mareotic bark, and gently with thine own hand lead the peerless youth, on whom the Latian prince hath bestowed the standards of the East and the bridling of the cohorts of Palestine, through festal gate and sacred haven and the cities of thy land. Under thy protection may he learn whence comes the fruitful licence of marshy Nile, why the waters abate and are hemmed within the banks that the Cecropian bird has coated turned into a heifer. Phoroneus was a former king of Argos.

^i.e., a command on the Syrian front.
Cecropio stagnata luto, cur invida Memphis, curve Therapnaei lasciviat ora Canopi, cur servet Pharias Lethaeus ianitor aras, vilia cur magnos aequent animalia divos;
quae sibi praesternat vivax altaria Phoenix, quos dignetur agros aut quo se gurgite Nili mergat adoratus trepidis pastoribus Apis.
due et ad Emathios manes, ubi belliger urbis conditor Hyblaeo perfusus nectare durat, anguiferanique domum, blando qua mersa veneno¹ Actias Ausonias fugit Cleopatra catenas.
usque et in Assyrias sedes mandataque castra prosequere et Marti iuvenem, dea, trade Latino.
nec novus hospes erit: puer his sudavit in arvis notus adhuc tantum maioris lumine² clavi, iam tamen et turmas facili praevertere gyro fortis et Eoas iaculo damnare sagittas.
Ergo erit illa dies, qua te maiora daturus

¹ qua mersa veneno ॐ: quaqua m. v. M, morsa Heinsius.
² lumine Nohl: numine M: munere ॐ.

* Pliny, N.H. x. 94, in speaking of swallows says that their nests prevent the Nile from overflowing for the extent of about a furlong: "in Aegypti Heracleotico ostio molem continuacione nidorum evaganti Nilo inexpugnabilem opponunt," etc., and "insula sacra Isidi, quam ne laceret amnis, muniant opere, palea et stramento rostrum eius firmantes," "on the Heracleotic mouth of the Nile they oppose an unshakable barrier to the river-floods," and "an island sacred to Isis, which they fortify by their labour, lest the river hurt it, strengthening its headland with litter and straw." Cecropian, i.e. Athenian, from Proene, daughter of Pandion, king of Athens, turned into a swallow.

"invida," perhaps to be explained by Juv. xv. 33,
"inter finitimos vetus atque antiqua simultas," "neighbours' quarrel." Note the etymology again, Memphis from μεμφεσθαι to blame!
with clay, \(a\) why Memphis is jealous, \(b\) why the shore of Therapnean Canopus \(c\) makes wanton revel, why the warden of Lethe \(d\) guards the Pharian shrines, why vile beasts are held equal to mighty gods; \(e\) what altars the long-lived Phoenix prepares for his own death, what fields Apis,\(f\) adored by trembling shepherds, deigns to graze, and in what waters of Nile he bathes. Lead him also to the Emathian tomb,\(g\) where steeped in nectar of Hybla abides the warrior founder of the city, and to the serpent-haunted palace where, sunk in lulling poison, Cleopatra of Actian story escaped Ausonian chains. Escort the youth even to his Assyrian station and the appointed camp, O goddess, and deliver him to the Roman god of war. No stranger will he be there; as a boy he laboured in those fields, known as yet only by his gleaming laticlave,\(h\) though already strong to outstrip the squadrons in nimble wheeling flight, and with his javelin to discredit the arrows of the East.\(i\)

Therefore that day will come when Caesar, to give

\(e\) A luxurious bathing-resort: "Therapnaean," from Therapnae in Laconia, because Canopus, helmsman of Menelaus, king of Sparta, was buried there.

\(d\) Probably Anubis is here identified with Cerberus.

\(e\) e.g. ibis, crocodile, cat, dog, snake, and others, see Herod. ii. 65; Cic. Tusc. Disp. v. 27.

\(f\) The sacred ox, called Epaphus by the Greeks, the son of Io by Zeus, worshipped by the Egyptians, see Herod. iii. 27.

\(g\) i.e., of Alexander the Great at Alexandria.

\(h\) Maccius would have worn the "tunica laticlavia" as a young son of a noble family: it was a tunic with a broad purple band inwoven, extending from the neck down across the chest. (The angusticlave was a tunic with two narrow purple stripes in place of the one broad one.)

\(i\) i.e., he could hurl his javelin farther than the flight of an arrow; for their relative ranges see Theb. vi. 354 n.
Caesar ab emerito iubeat discedere bello, at nos hoc iterum stantes in litore vastos cernemus fluctus aliasque rogabimus auras. o tum quantus ego aut quanta votiva movebo plectra lyra! cum me magna cervice ligatum attolles umeris atque in mea pectora primum incumbes e puppe novus servataque reddes colloquia inque vicem medios narrabimus annos, tu rapidum Euphraten et regia Bactra sacrasque antiquae Babylonis opes et Zeugma, Latinae pacis iter, quam dulce nemus florentis Idymes, quo pretiosa Tyros rubeat, quo purpura suco Sidoniis iterata cadis, ubi germine primum candida felices sudent opobalsama virgae: ast ego, devietis dederim quae busta Pelasgis quaeve laboratas claudat mihi pagina Thebas.

III

CONSOLATIO AD CLAUDIUM ETRUSCUM

Summa deum, Pietas, cuius gratissima caelo rara profanatas insp ectant numina terras,

\[1 \text{quam } Bae hren s : \text{qua } M.\]
\[2 \text{ quo . . . quo } G r onov ius : \text{qua . . . qua } M.\]
\[3 \text{ cadis } G r onov ius : \text{vadis } M.\]

\(a\) Where the Euphrates was usually crossed by the Roman armies. "Zeugma" means a "joining," "yoking." "pacis," because their object was to maintain the "pax Romana."

\(b\) "iterata," usually known as the "dibapha" (twice dipped), described by Pliny, \textit{N.H.} xxi. 45.

\(c\) Burial of the Pelasgi (= Argives), see \textit{Theb.} xii. 105; the last line seems to point to some perplexity on Statius's part as to how he would bring his epic to a close.

\(d\) Duty is addressed as though identified with Astraea, as again v. 2. 92, 3. 89; \textit{cf. Theb.} xi. 457.

166
thee a nobler prize, shall bid thee return from the warfare thou hast ended, and I standing again upon this shore shall view the mighty waves and pray for other breezes. How proud then shall I be! How bravely shall I sound my votive lyre! when you lift me to your shoulders and I cling about your stalwart neck, and you, fresh from the ship, fall first upon my breast, and give me all your stored-up converse, and in turn we tell the story of the years between, you of rapid Euphrates and royal Bactra and the sacred wealth of ancient Babylon, and of Zeugma,\(^a\) the way of the Peace of Rome; how sweet is Idume's luxuriant grove, with what dye costly Tyre glows scarlet, and the purple, twice plunged in Sidonian vats,\(^b\) is stained, where the fruitful sprays first exude the shining spikenard from the bud: while I relate what burial I have granted to the conquered Pelasgians, and rehearse the page that closes the laboured tale of Thebes.\(^c\)

III. A POEM OF CONSOLATION TO CLAUDIUS ETRUSCUS

In this Epicedion Statius has given the chief place to the story of the dead man's career, more in the manner of a "laudatio"; the opening is also varied, cf. on ii. 6. Claudius Etruscus, the father of the man whom Statius is addressing in this poem, was born a slave at Smyrna, but rapidly rose from post to post in the Imperial household till he finally became Secretary of Finances under Nero; he was made a Knight by Vespasian, and after a brief disgrace under Domitian died at about the age of 90. His wife was of noble birth. Martial wrote a poem on the same occasion (vii. 40).

Duty,\(^d\) most high among gods, whose heaven-favoured deity rarely beholds the guilty earth, come
STATIUS

hue vittata comam niveauque insignis amictu, qualis adhuc praesens nullaque expulsa nocentum fraude rudes populos atque aurea regna colebas, mitibus exsequiis ades et lugentis Etrusci cerne pios fletus laudataque lumina terge.
nam quis inexpleto rumpentem pectora quistru complexumque rogos incumbentemque favillis aspiens non aut primaevae funera plangi coniugis aut nati modo pubescentia credat ora rapi flammis? pater est, qui fletur. adeste dique hominesque sacris. procul hinc, procul ite nocentes,
si cui corde nefas tacitum fessique senectus longa patris, si quis pulsatae conscius umquam matris et inferna rigidum timet Aeacou urna:
insontes castosque voco. tenet ecce seniles leniter implicitos vultus sanctamque parentis canitiem spargit lacrimis animaeque supremum frigus amat; celeres genitoris filius annos
—mira fides!—nigrasque putat properasse sorores.
exsultent placidi Lethaea ad flumina manes, Elysiae gaudete domus; date serta per aras festaque pallentes hilarent altaria lucos.
felix, haec, nimium felix plorataque nato umbra venit. longe Furiarum sibila, longe tergemimus custos, penitus via longa patescat manibus egregiis. eat horrendumque silentis accedat domini solium gratesque supremas perferat et totidem iuveni roget anxius annos.

1 unquam M: anguem Postgate.
2 haec Slater: et M: a, heu, o, en edd.

a Cerberus.
hither with fillets on thy hair and adorned with snow-white robe, as when still a present goddess, before the violence of sinful men had driven thee away, thou didst dwell among innocent folk in a reign of gold; come to these quiet obsequies, and look upon the duteous tears of sorrowing Etruscus, and brush them from his eyes with words of praise. For who that saw him bursting his heart with unsatisfied lament and embracing the pyre and bending o'er the ashes would not think that it was a young wife whose death he mourned, or a son whose face just growing into manhood the flames were devouring? But it is a father whom he weeps. Come, gods and men, to the holy rites. Begone, begone, ye wicked, all in whose hearts is a crime unspoken, any who deems his aged sire has lived too long, or, conscious of ever having struck his mother, fears the urn of unbending Aeacus in the world below: 'tis the pure and guiltless I invite. Lo! gently in his arms he holds the aged face and lets his tears bedew the sacred white hairs of his sire, and lovingly gathers the last cold breath; marvellous, yet true! a son is thinking that his father's life is swiftly flown, that the black Sisters have brought the end too soon. Exult, ye placid ghosts by the streams of Lethe, rejoice, Elysian abodes! enwreathe the shrines, and let festal altars gladden the pale groves. 'Tis a happy shade that is coming, ay, too happy, for his son laments him. Avaunt, ye hissing Furies, avaunt the threefold guardian a! let the long road lie clear for peerless spirits. Let him come, and approach the awful throne of the silent monarch and pay his last due of gratitude and anxiously request for his son as long a life.
Maecte pio gemitu! dabimus solacia dignis luctibus Aoniasque tuo saecrabimus ultro inferias, Etrusce, seni! tu largus Eoa germina, tu messes Cilicumque Arabumque superbas merge rogis; ferat ignis opes heredis et alto aggere missuri nitido pia nubila caelo stipentur cineres: nos non arsura feremus munera, venturosque tuus durabit in annos me monstrante dolor. neque enim mihi flere parentem ignotum, similis gemui proiectus ad ignem.
ille mihi tua damna dies compescere cantu suadet: et ipse tuli quos nunc tibi confero questus.

Non tibi clara quidem, senior placidissime, gentis linea nee proavis demissum stemma, sed ingens supplevit fortuna genus culpamque parentum occuluit. nee enim dominos de plebe tulisti, sed quibus occasus pariter famulantur et ortus.
nec pudor iste tibi: quid enim terrisque poloque parendi sine lege manet? vice cuncta reguntur alternisque premunt. propriis sub regibus omnis terra; premit felix regum diademata Roma;
hanc ducibus frenare datum; mox crescit in illos imperium superis. sed habent et numina legem:
servit et astrorum velox chorus et vaga servit luna nec iniussae totiens redit orbita lueis, et—modo si fas est aequare iacentia summis—

1 reguntur Gevart: geruntur M.

Statius now addresses the father. At l. 85 he again
A blessing on thy pious moans! I will bring solace for a grief so worthy, and unbidden pay thy sire, Etruscus, an offering of song. Do thou with lavish hand plunge Eastern incense in the flames, and the proud harvests of Cilicia and Araby; let the fire consume thy heritage of wealth; heap high the burning mass that shall waft duteous clouds to the bright sky. My gift is not for burning, but my record of thy grief shall endure through the years to come. For I too know what it is to mourn a father; I too have groaned prostrate before the pyre. That day bids me assuage thy loss by song; the lament I offer thee now was once my own.

No brilliant lineage indeed was thine,\(^a\) serene old man, no descent traced down from distant ancestors, but high fortune made good thy birth and hid the blemish of thy parentage. For thy masters were not of common stock, but those to whom East and West are alike in thrall. No shame is that servitude to thee;\(^b\) for what in heaven and earth remains unbound by the law of obedience? All things in turn are ruled and in turn hold sway. To its own monarch every land is subject: fortunate Rome lords it o'er monarchs' crowns: 'tis her rulers' duty to bridle Rome: o'er these in turn rises the sovereignty of heaven. But even deities have their laws: in thraldom is the swift choir of the stars, in thraldom is the wandering moon, not unbidden is the light whose path so oft returns. And, if only it be not a sin to compare the lowly with the highest, the speaks of him in the 3rd person, but returns to the 2nd person at l. 106.

\(^a\) More familiar parallels to this idea are Soph. Ajax, 669 ff. and Hor. Od. iii. 1. 5.
pertulit et saevi Tirynthius horrida regis pacta, nec erubuit famulantis fistula Phoebi.

Sed neque barbaricis Latio transmissus ab oris: Smyrna tibi gentile solum potusque verendo fonte Meles Hermique vadum, quo Lydius intrat Bacchus et aurato reficit sua cornua limo. laeta dehinc series variisque ex ordine curis auctus honos; semperque gradi prope numina, semper Caesareum coluisse latus sacrisque deorum arcans haerere datum. Tiberea primum aula tibi vixdum ora nova mutante iuventa panditur—hic annis multa super indole vietis libertas oblata venit—nec proximus heres, immitis quamquam et Furiis agitatus, abegit.

huic et in Arctoas tenuis comes usque pruinias terribilem adfatu passus visuque tyrannum immanemque suis, ut qui metuenda ferarum corda domant mersasque iubent iam sanguine tacto reddere ab ore manus et nulla vivere praeda.

praecipuos sed enim merito surrexit in actus nondum stelligerum senior dimissus in axem Claudius et longo\(^3\) transmittit habere nepoti.

---

^1 huic Pol.: hinc M: hunc Aldine.
^2 surrexit M: subvexit Pol. (but cf. Theb. ii. 27).
^3 longo M: longum Gevart.

---

\(^a\) Hercules served King Eurystheus of Argos, Apollo was shepherd (hence "fistula") to Admetus, king of Thessaly.

\(^b\) Because Homer was born on its banks.

\(^c\) The Dionysus of the Indian legends has a bull's horns; the same Oriental figure appears in Theb. iv. 389, "Hermi de fontibus aureus exis."

\(^d\) "latus" is often used in this sense; cf. the Papal legate "a latere."

\(^e\) Caligula. The next line seems to be a reference to the Tirynthian also performed his dread covenant with the cruel king, nor did bondage shame the pipe of Phoebus.\(^a\)

But neither wert thou sent to Latium from barbarous shores: Smyrna was thy native soil, and thou didst drink the honoured\(^b\) springs of Meles and of Hermus' stream, where Lydian Bæchus bathes and tricks his horns anew in the golden silt.\(^c\) Thereafter a prosperous career was thine, and divers offices in due succession increased thy dignity: it was thy privilege ever to walk near divinities, ever to be close to Caesar's person\(^d\) and to share the holy secrets of the gods. The palace of Tiberius first was opened to thee while early manhood scarce changed as yet thy boyish countenance; here—since thy varied gifts surpassed thy years—freedom came to thee unsought; nor did the next heir,\(^e\) though fierce and Fury-haunted, banish thee. In his train didst thou go, frail as thou wert, even to the frozen North, and endure the tyrant terrible in word and look and cruel to his subjects, as those who tame the dread rage of beasts and command them, though they have tasted blood, to let go the hand thrust down their jaws, and to live without need of prey. But Claudius for thy merit raised thee to highest office in his old age,\(^f\) ere he was summoned to the starry vault, and gave thee over to the keeping of his nephew's late-born expedition to Britain, which ended so ridiculously (Suet. Cal. 46).

\(f\) This seems the most satisfactory meaning that can be got for "longo"; others are "long-reigning," for which "longus exul" of Theb. ii. 114, is not a very good parallel, and "the long series of descendants," which could only refer to the Flavians. Nero succeeded at the age of seventeen. He was the son of Claudius's niece Agrippina.
quia superos metuens pariter tot templae, tot aras promeruisse datur: summi Iovis aliger Areas nuntius imbrifera potitum Thaumantide Iuno; stat celer obsequio iussa ad Neptunia Triton:
tu totiens mutata dueum inga rite tulisti templa, inque omni felix tua cumba profundo.

Iamque piam lux alta domum praecelsaque toto intravit Fortuna gradu; iam creditur uni sanctarum digestus opum partaeque per omnis divitiae populos magnique impendia mundi.
quicquid ab auriferis eiecat Hiberia fossis, Dalmatico quod monte nitet, quod messibus Afris verritur, aestiferi quicquid terit area Nili, quodque legit mersus pelagi serulator Eoi, et Lacedemonii pecuaria culta Galaesi perspicuaeque nives Massylaque robora et Indi dentis honos: uni parent eommissa ministro, quae Boreas quaeque Eurus atrox, quae nubilus Auster
invehit: hibernos citius numeraveris imbres silvarumque comas. vigil idem animique sagacis et citus evolvit quantum Romana sub omni pila die quantumque tribus, quid templae, quid alti undarum cursus, quid propugnacula poseant

1 vigil idem animique sagacis Leo: vigilite animaeque sagaces M, variously emended; usque, iste, ipse edd., vigili tu animoque sagaci Peyrared (evolvis 99) etc.
2 et citus Salmasius: exitus M: anxius Hirschfeld.

a Mercury and Iris.
b See Pliny, N.H. xxxiii. 78, for the mines of Spain: the gold-mines of Dalmatia are also mentioned iv. 7. 13; cf.
also the simile in Theb. vi. 880. Since Tiberius mining rights were vested in the Emperor. The Imperial fiscus also derived income from African wheat, from pearl-fisheries, son. Who that fears the gods was ever suffered to serve so many temples, so many altars? The winged Arcadian is the messenger of supreme Jove; Juno hath power over the rain-bringing Thaumantian; Triton, swift to obey, stands ready at Neptune's bidding: thou hast duly borne unharmed the yoke of princes, changed so many times, and thy little boat has weathered every sea.

And now from on high a light illumined his loyal home, and Fortune towering to her loftiest entered apace. Now was entrusted to him alone the controlling of the sacred treasure, wealth drawn from every race, the revenue of the mighty world. All that Iberia hews from out her gold-mines, the glittering metal of Dalmatian hills, the produce of African harvests: all that is threshed on the floors of sultry Nile, or gathered by the divers who search the Eastern seas: the tended flocks of Lacedaemonian Galaesus, frozen crystals, Massylian citron-wood, the glory of the Indian tusk: all is committed to his charge and subject to him alone, all that the North wind and fierce East wind and the cloudy South bring with them; sooner would you count the winter rains or forest leaves. Watchful too is he and shrewd of mind, and quick to reckon what the Roman arms beneath every sky demand, how much the tribes and the temples, how much the lofty aqua- and considerable wealth from Egypt, which was the Emperor's own domain.

* "tribus," probably the supplies of free corn, distributed by tribes; "propugn. aeq.," perhaps the care of harbours rather than fortresses; "quod domini," etc., Domitian had recently built a new palace on the Palatine; "quae divum," etc., the general supervision of statues of the Emperors (= "divum"), and of the Mint.
aequoris aut longe series porrecta viarum; quod domini celsis niteat laquearibus aurum, quae divum in vultus igni formanda liquescat massa, quid Ausoniae scriptum crepet igne Monetae. hine tibi rara quies animoque exclusa voluptas, exiguaeque dapes et numquam laesa profundo cura mero; sed iura tamen genialia cordi et mentem vincire toris ac iungere festa conubia et fidos domino genuisse clientes.

Quis sublime genus formamque insignis Etruscae nesciat? haud quamquam proprio mihi cognita visu, sed decus eximium famae par reddit imago, vultibus et similis natorum gratia monstrat. nec vulgaris genus; fasces summamque curulem frater et Ausonios enses mandataque fidus signa tulit, cum prima truces amentia Dacos impulit et magno gens est damnata triumpho. sic quicquid patrio cessatum a sanguine, mater reddidit, obscurumque latus clarescere vidit conubio gavisa domus. nec pignora longe; quippe bis ad partus venit Lucina manuque ipsa levi gravidos tetigit fecunda labores. felix a! si longa dies, si cernere vultus natorum viridesque genas tibi iusta dedissent stamina! sed media cecidere abrupta iuventa gaudia, florentesque manu scidit Atropos annos; qualia pallentes declinant lilia culmos

1 vultibus et similis Phillimore; vultibus et sibimet similis M; et sibimet similis Skutsch, Krohn.

a i.e., the consulship.

b Domitian triumphed in 85, though without having obtained any real success.

c The goddess of child-birth, lit. that first brings light to the infant’s eyes; identified with Juno later.
ducts, and the fortresses by the sea, or the far-flung lines of road; what wealth of gold gleams on the high ceilings of our prince, what weight of ore must be melted in the fire and shaped into the countenance of gods, how much shall ring when stamped in the fiery heat of Ausonia's mint. Therefore hadst thou but scant repose, thy mind took no thought for pleasure, thy feasting was meagre and thy cares never assuaged by plenteous draughts of wine; yet thou hadst joy in the ties of marriage, in binding thy heart with chains of love, in the union of festal wedlock, and in begetting faithful clients for thy lord.

Who can but know the high birth and loveliness of fair Etrusca? Never with my own eyes have I beheld her, yet the trusty image of fame reflects her peerless beauty, and a like charm of countenance in her sons reveals it. No common birth was hers; her brother wielded the rods and the highest curule power, and faithfully led Anonian swordsmen and the standards entrusted to him, when frenzy first inspired the ruthless Dacians, and their race was doomed to afford us a mighty triumph. Thus whatso'er was lacking in the father's blood was made good by the mother, and the household rejoicing in the union saw its obscurity turned to brightness. Children too were nigh at hand; twice was Lucina present at the birth and deftly with fruitful hand eased the pain of travail. Ah! happy, had length of days and a due measure of years suffered thee to behold the faces of thy children and the bloom of youth upon their cheeks! but in the midst of thy prime those joys fell shattered, and Atropos roughly tore the thread of flourishing life; even so do lilies... pubentesque rosae primos moriuntur ad austros, aut ubi verna novis exspirat purpura pratis. 130
illa sagittiferi circumvolitastis, Amores, funera maternoque rogos unxistis amomo;
nee modus aut pennis laceris aut erinibus ignem spargere, collectaeque pyram struxere pharetrae.
quas tunc inferias aut quae lamenta dedisses 135 maternis, Etrusce, rogis, qui funera patris haud matura putas atque hos pius ingemis annos!

Illum et qui nutu superas nunc temperat aeres, progeniem claram terris partitus et astris, lactus Idumaei donavit honore triumphi 140 dignatusque loco victricis et ordine pompa non vetuit, tenuesque nihil minuere parentes.
atque idem in cuneos populo deduxit equestres mutavitque genus laevaeque ignobile ferrum exuit et celso natorum acquavit honorem.\footnote{celso ... honorem Krohn: celso ... honore M: celse ... honori Salmasius.} dextra bis octonis fluxerunt saecula lustris, atque aevi sine nube tenor. quam dives in usus natorum totoque volens excedere censu, testis adhuc largi nitor inde adsuetus Etrusei, cui tua non humilis dedit indulgentia mores. 150 hunc siquidem amplexu semper revocante tenebas blandus et imperio numquam pater; huius honor pronior ipse etiam gaudebat cedere frater.

Quas tibi devoti iuvenes pro patre renato, summe ducum, grates, aut quae pia vota reprendunt!

\footnote{Vespasian, whose sons were Titus (d. 81) and Domitian.}
\footnote{Here=Judaean; the reference is to the revolt of the Jews that culminated in the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus.}
\footnote{The gold ring and the fourteen seats above the orchestra were privileges of the Equestrian order.}

178
droop pale heads and roses die at the first South wind, or on fresh meadows the purple flower of spring withers away. Around that funeral train did ye hover, ye arrow-bearing Loves, and anoint the bier with your mother's balm; freely did ye scatter your torn hair and feathers on the flames, and your quivers were heaped to build the pyre. What offerings, what tears wouldest thou have paid at thy mother's grave, Etruscus, who deemest thy father's death untimely and mournest with true affection for his years!

He who with his nod now sways the heights of heaven, a and has given of his glorious offspring to earth and sky alike, gladly granted to him the honour of an Idumaean b triumph, and deeming him worthy the distinction and rank that the procession of victory brings forbade it not, nor did obscurity of birth diminish his renown. c He too led him down to the benches of the knights from among the people, and ennobled him and took off the humble iron ring and made him equal to his sons in lofty eminence. Twice eight lustres of prosperity flowed by, and his life's course was without a cloud. How lavish he was in the service of his sons, how willing to strip himself of all his wealth, the wonted splendour of Etruscus from that day to this bears witness, for it was thy indulgence that gave him his lordly mien. Thou didst clasp him in an embrace that ever called him back to thee, and didst rule by the love and not the sternness of a father; to him even his brother rejoiced to give way, more anxious for his renown than for his own.

What gratitude, greatest of princes, what loyal vows do these youths, devoted to thy service, pay tu—seu tarda situ rebusque exhausta senectus erravit seu blanda diu Fortuna regressum maluit—attonitum et venturi fulminis ictus horrentem tonitru tantum lenique procella contentus monuisse senem; cumque horrida supra aequora curarum socius procul Italia rura linqueret, hic molles Campani litoris oras et Diomedes concedere iussus in arces atque hospes, non exsul, erat. nec longa moratus Romuleum reseras iterum, Germanice, limen maerentemque foves inclinatosque penates erigis. haud mirum, dactor placidissime, quando haec est quae victis parcentia foedera Cattis quaequo suum Dacis donat elementia montem, quae modo Marcomanos post horrida bella vagosque Sauromatas Latio non est dignata triumpho.

Iamque in fine dies et inexorabile pensum deficit. hic maesti pietas me poscit Etrusci, qualia nec Siculae moderantur carmina rupe nee fati iam certusolor saevique marita Tereos. heu quantis lassantembrachia vidi planetibus et prono fusum super oscula vultu!
vix famuli comitesque tenent, vix arduus ignis summovet. haud aliter gemuit per Sunia\(^a\) Theseus litora,\(^b\) qui falsis deceperat Aegea velis.
tunc immane gemens foedatusque ora tepentes

\(^1\) per Sunia Polster: periuriam M; per inania Bursian; per Ionia Phillimore.
\(^2\) litora M: litore S, and keep periuria.

\(^a\) Diomede was supposed by legend to have come to S.
Italy and founded Arpi in Apulia.
\(^b\) Campaign against the Chatti, 82, unsuccessful fighting against Dacians and Marcomanni about 88, Sarmatian war, probably successful but no triumph, 92.
thee for their sire's rebirth! For whether he erred through age, fatigued by decay and exhausted by affairs, or whether Fortune so long favourable now had a mind to leave him, thou wert content, while in shuddering dismay he awaited the coming lightning-stroke, to warn the old man by thunder alone and by a storm that spared him; and when the partner of his cares left far behind him the fields of Italy and crossed the raging seas, he was bidden retire to Campania's mild coast and the towers of Diomede, a stranger but no exile. Nor didst thou wait long, Germanicus, before thou didst once more unbar the gates of Romulus and console his grief and raise again the stricken house. No wonder, most tranquil prince; for this is that clemency that gives terms of mercy to the conquered Catti and restores their mountain to the Dacians; that lately though after a fierce struggle deigned not that the Marcomanni and the Sarmatian Nomads should furnish forth a Roman triumph.

And now his day is ended, and the inexorable thread runs out. The sorrowing heart of Etruseus asks me for a dirge, such as even the cliffs of Sicily re-echoed not, nor doomed swan ever sang nor cruel Tereus' bride. Ah! with what violent beating of his breast did I see him wearying his arms, flung prostrate with face bowed down to kiss his sire! Scarce can his friends and servants hold him, scarce do the towering flames make him withdraw. Not otherwise did Theseus on the Sunian shore mourn Aegeus whom his false sails had deceived. Then fearfully groaning, with disfiguring marks upon his

\(^{c}\) The Sirens, and the nightingale (Philomela, ravished by Tereus) are referred to.
adfatur cineres: "cur nos, fidissime, linquis Fortuna redeunte, pater? modo numina magni praesidis atque breves superum placavimus iras, nec frueris tantique orbatus muneris usu ad manes, ingrate, fugis. nec flectere Parcas aut placare malae datur aspera numina Lethes?
felix, cui magna patrem cervice vehenti sacra Mycenaeae patuit reverentia flammae!
qui temp tener saevis genitorem Scipio Poenis abstulit et Lydi pietas temeraria Lausi.
ergo et Thessalici coniunx pensare mariti funus et immitem potuit Styga vincere supplex Thraces? hoc quanto melius pro patre liceret!
non totus rapiere tamen, nec funera mittam longius; hic manes, hic intra teeta tenebo:
tu custos dominusque laris, tibi cuncta tuorum parebunt; ego rite minor semperque secundus assiduas libabo dapes et pocula sacris manibus effigiesque colam; te lucida saxa, te similem doctae referet mihi linea cerae,
nune ebur et fulvum vultus imitabitur aurum.
inde viam morum longaeque examina vitae adfatusque pios monituraque somnia poscam." Talia dicerem genitor dulcedine laeta audit et immites lente descendit ad umbras verbaque dilectae fert narraturus Etruscae.
Salve supremum, senior mitissime patrum,

Aeneas who carried his father out of burning Troy:
Mycenean = kindled by Greeks.
At the battle of Ticinus, 218 B.C.
Son of Mezentius = Virg. Aen. x. 786 sqq.
Alcestis, wife of Admetus, and Orpheus, husband of Eurydice.
face, he cries to the warm ashes: "Why, truest of fathers, dost thou leave us, when Fortune smiles once more? Only of late did we assuage the godhead of our mighty prince and the brief anger of the gods, but thou, naught profiting, dost lose the enjoyment of a boon so great, and fleest, ungrateful, to the shades. And is it not granted to move the Fates, or appease the ruthless deities of deadly Lethe? Happy he, before whom as he carried his father on stalwart shoulders the Grecian flames gave way in reverent awe! and Scipio too, who while yet a lad rescued his sire from the cruel Carthaginians; happy also the daring devotion of Lydian Lausus! Is it so, then, that the Thessalian consort could give her life to save her lord? that the suppliant Thracian could defeat remorseless Styx? surely a father's life hath a juster claim! Yet shalt thou not be wholly taken, nor will I send thy ashes far: here, here within the house will I keep thy shade. Thou art the guardian and master of the hearth, all that is thine shall obey thee; I will ever, as is right, be second, and hold a lesser place, and to thy sacred shade bring constant offering of meat and drink, and worship thy image; shining marble and the cunning lines of wax shall repeat thy likeness to me; now ivory, now tawny gold shall imitate thy features. There in thy long life's story will I seek a guide for conduct, and loving converse and dreams that bring good counsel."

So he spoke, and his father heard him with joy and gladness, and went down slowly to the pitiless shades, bearing the message to tell to his beloved Etrusca.

Hail for the last time, aged sire, gentlest of fathers,
STATIUS

supremumque vale, qui numquam sospite nato triste chaos maestique situs patiere sepulcri. 210 semper odoratis spirabunt floribus arae, semper et Assyrios felix bibet urna liquores et lacrimas, qui maior honos. hie sacra litabit manibus eque tua tumulum tellure levabit.
nostra quoque exemplo meritus tibi carmina sancit hoc etiam gaudens cinerem donasse sepulcro. 216

IV. CAPILLI FLAVI EARINI¹

Ite, comae, facilemque precor transcurrite pontum, ite coronato recubantes molliter auro ;
ite, dabit cursus mitis Cytherea secundos placabitque notos, fors et de puppe timenda transferet inque sua ducet super aequora concha. 5 accipe laudatos, invenis Phoebeie, crines, quos tibi Caesareus donat puer, accipe laetus intonsoque ostende patri. sine dulce nitentes comparet atque diu fratris putet esse Lyaei.
forsan et ipse comae numquam labentis honorem 10
praemetet atque alio clusum tibi ponet in auro.

Pergame, pinifera multum felicior Ida !

¹ EARINI Pol. : IERINI M.

a Asclepius.

184
and for the last time farewell! Never while thy son lives shalt thou suffer the despair of Tartarus, or the sorrow of a grave forgotten. Ever shall thy altar exhale the scent of flowers, ever shall thy happy urn drink Assyrian perfumes, and tears, a greater honour. Thy son shall make sacrifice to thy spirit, and from thy own soil raise a monument to thee. My song too, won by his own worth, he dedicates to thee, glad to have given this sepulchre also to thy ashes.

IV. THE TRESSES OF FLAVIUS EARINUS

A poem upon the dedication of the tresses of the Emperor's favourite Earinus; they were to be sent in a golden box to the temple of Asclepius at Pergamum, his birthplace. The dedication of hair was an ancient Greek custom (cf. Achilles in the Iliad), and should not be confused with the first clipping of the beard, for which see Petronius, 29, Suetonius, Nero, 12, Juvenal, viii. 166. Martial has similar poems, ix. 16, 17, 36.

Speed, ye tresses, and may ocean smile upon your passage! Speed, while ye softly rest upon the enwreathed gold! Speed onward, for gentle Venus will give you a fair voyage, and make the South winds tranquil, and perchance will take you from the dangerous bark and convey you over the sea in her own shell. Accept, O son of Phoebus, these much-praised locks that Caesar's favourite presents to thee, accept them joyfully and show them to thy unshorn sire. Let him compare their beauteous sheen, and long deem them the tresses of his brother Lyaeus. Perchance too with his own hand he will shear a lock from his hair's unfailing glory, and enclose it for thee in other gold.

Pergamus, more blest by far than pine-clad Ida, illa licet sacrae placeat sibi nube\(^1\) rapinae—nempe dedit superis illum, quem turbida semper Iuno videt refugitque manum nectarque recusat—, at tu grata deis pulchroque insignis alumno misisti Latio, placida quem fronte ministrum Iuppiter Ausonius pariter Romanaque Iuno aspiciiunt et uterque probant. nec tanta potenti terrarum domino divino sine mente voluptas.

Dicitur Idalios Erycis de vertice lucos dum petit et molles agitat Venus aurea cygnos, Pergameas intrasse domos, ubi maximus aegris auxiliator adest et festinantia sistens fata salutifero mitis deus incubat angui. hic puerum egregiae praeclarum sidere formae ipsius ante dei ludentem conspicit aras. ac primum subita paulum decepta figura natorum de plebe putat; sed non erat illi arcus et ex umeris nullae fulgentibus umbrae. miratur puerile decus vultumque comasque aspiciens "tune Ausonias" ait "ibis ad arces, neglectus Veneri? tu sordida tecta ignumque servitii vulgare feres? procul absit: ego isti, quem meruit, formae dominum dabo. vade age mecum, vade, puer: ducam volucris per sidera curru donum immane duci; nec te plebeia manebunt iura: Palatino famulus deberis amor.
nil ego, nil, fateor, toto tam dulce sub orbe aut vidi aut genui. cedet tibi Latmius\(^2\) ultro

---

\(^1\) nube \(M\): laude \(Markland\); pube \(Koestlin\).
\(^2\) Latmius \(Dom\.\): lamus \(M\).

\(a\) That of Ganymede. \(b\) Domitian and Domitia.
though she boast the cloud that veiled the heavenly rape a! She verily gave to the gods him on whom Juno ever looks in wrath, and withdraws her hand and refuses the nectar; but thou, beloved of heaven and famed for thy fair foster-son, hast sent to Latium him whom Ausonian Jove and Roman Juno b alike behold with favouring brow and both approve. Nor without the will of heaven was such pleasure vouchsafed to the lord of earth.

Golden Venus, it is said, while on her way from the height of Eryx to the Idalian groves, driving her gentle swans, entered the shrine at Pergamum, where the great helper of the sick is present to aid, and stays the hurrying fates and bends, a kindly deity, o'er his health-bringing snake. Here she espies a lad of wondrous, starlike beauty, playing before the very altars of the god. And at first deceived somewhat by the sudden sight of his fair form she deems him one of her own sons; but he had no bow nor shade of wings on his bright shoulders. She marvels at his boyish charm, and gazing at his features and his locks, "Shalt thou go," she cries, "to the Ausonian city, neglected by Venus, and endure a mean dwelling and slavery's base yoke? May that never be! I myself will find a master worthy of that beauty. Come, lad, come with me! I will convey thee in my winged chariot through the air, a wondrous present to a monarch. No common servitude awaits thee: to the Palace art thou destined, to be the minister of love. Never, I declare, never the whole world over have I beheld or given birth to aught so fair.c Straightway will the Latmian

c Endymion, Attis, Narcissus, and Hylas are referred to in what follows.
Sangariusque puer quemque irrita fontis imago et sterilis consumpsit amor. te caerula Nais mallet et adprensa traxisset fortius urna. tu, puer, ante omnis; solus formasior ille, cui daberis."

sae orsa leves secum ipsa per auras tollit olorinaque iubet considere biga.

nec mora. iam Latii montes veterisque penates Evandri, quos mole nova pater inelitus orbis excolit et summis aequat Germanicus astris. tune propior iam cura deae, quae forma capillis optima, quae vestis roseos ascendere vultus apta, quod in digitis, collo quod dignius aurum. norat caelestis oculos ducis ipsaque taedas iunxerat et plena dederat conubia dextra: sic ornat crines, Tyrios sic fundit amictus, dat radios ignemque suum. cessere priores deliciae famulumque greges; hic pocula magno prima duci murrasque graves crystallaque portat candidiore manu: crescit nova gratia Baccho.

Care puer superis, qui praelibare verendum nectar et ingentem totiens contingere dextram electus, quam nosse Getae, quam tangere Persae Armeniiique Indique petunt! o sidere dextro edite, multa tibi divum indulgentia favit! olim etiam, ne prima genas lanugo nitentes earperet et pulchrae fuscaret gratia formae, ipse deus patriae celsam trans aequora liquit Pergamon. haud ulli puerum mollire potestas

---

* i.e., the Palatine, where Domitian had recently built a new palace.
yield to thee, and the Sangarian youth, and he whom the fruitless image in the fountain and barren love consumed. The Nymph of the dark-blue water would have preferred thee, and grasped thy urn and drawn thee down more boldly. Thou, boy, dost surpass them all; only he to whom I shall give thee is more beautiful.” So speaking she lifted him with her own hand through the light air, and bade him sit in the swan-drawn chariot. Straightway appeared the Latian hills and the home of ancient Evander, which Germanicus, renowned lord of the world, is adorning with new structures and making as glorious as the stars above. Then more anxious grew the goddess, what tiring of the hair best suited him, what raiment was fittest to light up his rosy countenance, what gold was worthiest of his neck or his finger. She knew the Emperor’s godlike glance: herself she had joined the torches of wedlock, and with lavish hand bestowed on him his bride. So decks she his hair, so drapes the Tyrian folds about him, and gives him her own radiant fire. The former favourites yield, and the crowds of slaves; ’tis he who bears the first goblet to our great Chief, and the crystal cups and heavy murrhine vessels in hands that are fairer than they; there is a sweeter savour in the wine.

O youth beloved of heaven, who hast been chosen to sip first the sacred nectar, and so oft to touch the mighty hand that the Getae seek to know, and the Persians and Armenians and Indians to kiss! O born under a favouring star, the gods have blest thee with much goodwill! Once, lest the first down should spoil thy radiant cheeks and the charm of thy comeliness be darkened, the god of thy land left his lofty Pergamum and crossed the sea. None else was credita, sed tacita iuvenis Phoebeius arte leniter haud ullo concussum vulnere corpus\(^1\) de sexu transire iubet. tamen anxia curis mordetur puerique timet Cytherea dolores. nondum pulchra ducis clementia coeperat ortu intactos servare mares; nunc frangere sexum atque hominem mutare nefas, gavisaque solos quos genuit natura videt, nec lege sinistra ferre timent famulae natorum pondera matres. Tu quoque nunc iuvenis, genitus si tardius esses, umbratusque genas et adultos fortior artus, non unum gaudens Phoebea ad limina munus misisses; patrias nunc solus crinis ad oras naviget. hunc multo Paphie saturabat amomo, hunc nova tergemina pectebat Gratia dextra; huic et purpurei cedet coma saucia Nisi, et quam Sperchio tumidus servabat Achilles.

ipsi, cum primum niveam praeceperere frontem decretum est unerosque manu nudare nitentes, adcurrunt teneri Paphia cum matre volucres expeduntque comas et Serica pectore ponunt pallia. tunc iunctis crinem incidere sagittis atque auro gemmisque locant, rapit ipsa cadentem mater et arcanos iterat Cytherea liquores.\(^2\) tunc puer e turba, manibus qui forte supinis nobile gemmato speculum portaverat auro, "hoc quoque demus," ait; "patriis nec gratius ullum munus erit templis ipsoque potentius auro.

\(^1\) corpus \(\varpi\): corpeus \(M\), and Pol. (from \(P\), whence Phillimore suspects corpus cum vulnere carpens.
\(^2\) arcanos . . . liquores \(M\): arcano saturat . . . liquore Schrader.

\(^a\) See Suet. Dom. vii. \(^b\) Venus.
\(^c\) The "purpureus senex" of Theb. i. 334, the king of 190 trusted to unman the lad, but the son of Phoebus with quiet skill gently bids his body lose its sex, unmarred by any wound. But Cytherea is devoured by anxious care, and fears lest the boy suffer. Not yet had the noble clemency of our prince begun to keep our males untouched from birth; to-day it is forbidden to destroy sex and violate manhood, and nature rejoices to behold none but as she brought them forth, nor does a harsh law make slave-mothers afraid to bear the burden of sons.

Thou too, had thy birth been later, wert now a man, and with darkened cheeks and limbs full-grown and strong hadst gladly sent not one gift only to Phoebus' fane; now let this single tress make voyage to thy country's shores. This did the Paphian steep in much balm, this did the fresh Graeae eomb with threefold hand; to this will yield the ravished purple tress of Nisus, and that which wrathful Achilles kept for Spercheus. When first it was decreed to spoil that snow-white brow and by force to rob those gleaming shoulders, winged Cupids with their Paphian mother flew to thee, and prepared thy locks and put a silken robe about thee. Then with joined arrows they cut off the tress, and laid it on gold and jewels, and Venus their mother seized it as it fell, and anointed it once and twice with her mystic essences. Then one of the troop of boys, who by chance had brought in his upturned hands a mirror finely set in jewelled gold, cried: "This too let us give, no gift could be more pleasing to his country's shrine, and more powerful even than gold. Do thou but gaze Megara, who had the purple lock on which depended the safety of his realm. He was betrayed by his daughter Scylla, who cut it off.

tu modo fige aciem et vultus hic usque relinque.”
sie ait et speculum reclusit imagine rapta.

   At puere egregius tendens ad sidera palmas, “his mihi pro donis, hominum mitissime custos, 100 si merui, longa dominum renovare inventa atque orbi servare velis! hoc sidera mecum, hoc undae terraeque rogant. eat, oro, per annos Hiacos Pyliosque simul, propriosque penates gaudeat et secum Tarpeia senescere templum.” 105 sic ait et motas miratur Pergamos aras.

V. ECLOGA AD UXOREM

Quid mihi maesta die, sociis quid noctibus, uxor, anxia pervigili ducis suspiria cura?
non metuo ne laesa fides aut pectore in isto alter amor; nullis in te datur ire sagittis
—audiat infesto licet hoc Rhamnusia vultu—, non datur. et si egomet patrio de litore raptus quattuor emeritis per bella, per aequora lustris errarem, tu mille procos intacta fugares, non intersectas commenta retexere telas,
sem sine fraude palam, thalamosque armata negasses.
die tamen, unde alta2 mihi fronte et nubila vultus? 11
anne quod Euboicos fessus remeare penates auguror et patria senium componere terra?

1 ECLOGA AD UXOREM: VIA DOMITIANA M: AD CLAUDIAM

Ed. Priv.

2 alta M: alia Aldine.

i.e., Nemesis, from Rhamnus, a town in Attica, which possessed a statue of that goddess.

Like Penelope.
therein, and leave thy likeness here for ever.” He spoke, and shut the mirror, imprisoning the image.

But the peerless boy stretched forth his hands to heaven, and cried: “Most gentle guardian of men, vouchsafe in reward for my gift, if I so deserve, to keep our prince in the freshness of undying youth, and save him for the world. The sky, the sea, and the earth join with me in my prayer. May he live, I pray, through the years of a Priam and a Nestor both, and rejoicing see his own home and the Tarpeian shrine grow to old age with himself.” He spoke, and Pergamus marvelled that her fanes were shaken.

V. THE POET TO HIS WIFE CLAUDIA

The poet pleads with his wife to fall in with his plan to return from Rome to Naples, his birthplace.

Why are you sad, my wife, in the day-time and in the nights we share together? Why do you sigh for anxiety and wakeful sorrow? I have no fear lest it be unfaithfulness and a rival passion in your heart; you are safe against all poisoned shafts, ay—though the Rhamnusian a hear my words and frown—safe indeed! Even were I torn from my native shores and after twenty years of war and seafaring a wanderer still, you would repel unharmed a thousand wooers; b nor would you plan to weave again the unravelled web, but would be frank and open, and even with arms deny your chamber. But say, whence comes this sullen brow, this elrowned countenance? Is it that, broken in health, I purpose to return to my Euboean home, and to settle in old age on my cur hoc triste tibi? certe lascivia corde¹ nulla nec aut rapidi mulecent te proelia Circe aut intrat sensus clamosi turba theatri;
ese probitas et opaca quies et sordida numquam gaudia.

Quas autem comitem te rapto per undas?
quamquam et si gelidas irem mansurus ad Arctos vel super Hesperiae vada caligantia Thyles aut septemgeminis caput haud penetrabile Nili, hortarere vias. etenim tua — nempe benigna quam mihi sorte Venus iunctam florentibus annis servat et in senium —, tua, quae me vulnere primo intactum thalamis et adhuc iuvenile vagantem fixisti, tua frena libens docilisque recepi, et semel insertas non mutaturus habenas usque premo. tu me nitidis Albana ferentem dona comis sanctoque indutum Caesaris auro visceribus complexa tuis sertisque dedisti oscula anhela meis; tu, cum Capitolia nostrae infitiata lyrae, saevum ingratumque dolebas² meum victa Iovem; tu procurrentia primis carmina nostra sonis totasque in murmure noctes aure rapis vigili; longi tu sola laboris conscia, cumque tuis crevit mea Thebais annis, qualem te nuper Stygias prope raptus ad umbras, cum iam Lethaeos audirem comminus amnes, aspexi, tenuique oculos iam morte cadentes, scilicet exhausti Lachesis mihi tempora fati

¹ corde M: cordi Dom.
² dolebas Dom.: doleres M: dolere Krohn.
native soil? Why does this cause you sorrow? Certainly there is no wantonness in your heart; the contests of the rushing Circus have no charm for you, no clamorous theatre-crowds find a place in your soul, but virtue and sheltered quiet and innocent joys.

But what are the waters o'er which I fain would hurry you with me? although even if I went to dwell at the cold North, or beyond the misty seas of western Thule, or to the unattainable source of sevenfold Nile, you would be urging our departure. For it is you—you, whom Venus of her grace united to me in the springtime of my days, and in old age keeps mine, you, who while yet I roved in youth nor knew aught of love did transfixed my heart—you it is whose rein in willing submission I obeyed, and yet press the bit once put within my mouth, without e'er thought of change. When the Alban wreath adorned my gleaming locks, and I put on Caesar's sacred gold, you clasped me to your bosom, and showered breathless kisses on my garlands; when the Capitol rejected my lyre, you shared my defeat and mourned the cruelty and ingratitude of Jove. Your wakeful ears caught the first notes of the songs I ventured and whole nights of murmured sound; you alone knew of my long labour, and my Thebaid grew with the years of your companionship. When lately I was near snatched away to the Stygian shades, and already heard close at hand the stream of Lethe, how grateful wert thou to my sight! My eyes, already failing in death, were stayed. Surely it was in pity of thee alone that Lachesis prolonged the more important Capitoline contest later on (31): cf. also v. 3. 225 f. te tantum miserata dedit, superque potentes invidiam timuere tuam. post ista propinquum nunc iter optandosque sinus eomes ire moraris?
heu ubi nota fides totque explorata per usus, qua veteres Latias Graias heroidas aequas?
isset ad Iliacas—quid enim deterret amantes?
Penelope gavisa domos, si passus Ulixes:
questa est Aegiale, questa est Meliboea relinqui, et quam—quam saevi!—fecerunt maenada planetus.
nee minor his tu nosse fidem vitamque maritis dedere. sic certe eineres umbramque priorem quaeris adhuc, sic exsequias amplexa canori coniugis ingentes iterasti pectore planetus, iam mea. nec pietas alia est tibi curaque natae, sic et mater amas, sic numquam corde recedit nata tuo, fixamque animi penetrabilibus imis nocte dieque tenes. non sic Trachinia\(^1\) nidos Alcyone, vernos non sic Philomela penates circuit amplectens animamque in pignora transfert.
te\(^3\) nunc illa tenet, viduo quod sola cubili otia iam pulchrae terit infecunda iuventae.

\begin{itemize}
  \item sed venient, plenis venient conubia taedis.
  \item sic certe formaeque bonis animique meretur;
  \item sive chelyn complexa petit seu voce paterna \end{itemize}

1 \textit{quamquam saevi} \textit{M}; \textit{quam} — \textit{quam saevi} — \textit{Pol.}
2 \textit{Trachinia} \textit{S}: \textit{intracia} \textit{M.}
3 \textit{te Phillimore}: et \textit{M.} heu \textit{Dom.}

\textbf{a} Aegiale, wife of Diomede and daughter of Adrastus, called Deipyle in the \textit{Thebaid}; Meliboea is mentioned by Athenaeus as the wife of Theseus (\textit{Ath.} p. 557), also by Servius (\textit{Aen.} i. 724) as the wife of an Ephesian youth named Alexis.

\textbf{b} Laodamia, see ii. 7. 126 n.
my exhausted term of life, and the gods above feared thy displeasure. After that do you hesitate to go with me on this short journey to the desirable bay? Ah! where is that loyalty of yours, well-known and put to many a test, that makes you one with the heroines of Greece and Rome? Penelope would have rejoiced to go to Ilium's town—for what deters true lovers?—had Ulysses suffered her; Aegiale chafed, and Meliboea chafed to be left behind. and she too whom grief—how savage!—drove to frenzy. Yet you no less than these are loyal, and your life is devoted to your lord. Not otherwise indeed do you still seek the ashes and shade of your former husband, and embracing the relics of your poet-spouse renew your bitter heartfelt lamentation, even now that you are mine. As great too is your care and devotion for your daughter: your love as a mother is as tender; she is never absent from your heart, but the thought of her abides day and night in the inmost chambers of your being. Less lovingly does Aleyone of Trachis flutter round her nest, and Philomela cherish her vernal home, and give her young ones the warmth of her own life. 'Tis she now keeps you, because alone and unmarried she is wasting her youth and beauty in barren leisure. But wedlock will come, ay come with all its festal torches. So assuredly does she deserve for her sweet face and virtuous mind; whether she clasp and strike the lute, or with voice as tuneful as her sire's sing melodies that the Muses

\[e\] It is not known who he was; he, not Statius, was the father of her daughter.

\[d\] Changed by Zeus into the sea-bird called ἀλκυόν; according to the fable, while the bird was nesting, the seas were all calm.
discendum Musis sonat et mea carmina flectit, candida seu molli diducit brachia motu: ingeniun probitas artemque modestia vincit. nonne leves pueros, non te, Cytherea, pulebit hoc cessare decus? nec tantum Roma inguales conciliare toros festasque accendere taedas fertilis: et nostra generi tellure dabuntur. non adeo Vesuvinus apex et flammea diri montis hiemis trepidas exhaust civibus urbes: stant populisque vigent. hinc auspice condita Phoebotecta Dicarchei portusque et litora mundi hospita: at hinc magnae tractus imitantia Romae quae Capys adventis implevit moenia Teucris. nostra quoque et propriis tenuiss nec rara colonis Parthenope, cui mite solum trans aequora vectae ipse Dionaeae\(^1\) monstravit Apollo columba.

Has ego te sedes—nam nec mihi barbar Thrae nec Libye natale solum—transferre laboro, quas et mollis hiem et frigida temperat aestas, quas imbelle fretum torpentibus adluit undis. pax secura locis et desidis otia vitae et numquam turbata quies somnique peracti. nulla foro rabies aut strictae in iurgia leges: morum iura viris solum et sine fascibus aequum. quid nunc magnificas species cultusque locorum templaque et innumeris spatia interstincta columnis, et geminam molem nudi tectique theatri

\(^1\) Dionae . . . columba Pol.: Dionae . . . columbae M.
\(^a\) Puteoli, Capua, Naples. Dione = Venus.
might learn, while she follows the course of my songs, or whether with lithe movement she toss her snow-white arms: her innocence and modesty surpass her talent and her skill. Surely the nimble Loves, surely thou, Cytherea, wilt feel shame that such loveliness is wasted. Nor is it only Rome that is fruitful in marriage unions and blazing festal torches: in my country too are bridegrooms found. Not so utterly has Vesuvius' peak and the flaming tempest of the baleful mountain drained of their townsmen the terror-stricken cities; they stand yet and their people flourish. Here are the dwellings of Dicarchus, founded with Phoebus' auspices, and the harbour and the shores that the whole world visits; there are the walls that counterfeit the vastness of mighty Rome, which Capys filled with newcomers from Troy. There too is my own Parthenope, too small for her own citizens, yet with no lack of strangers, Parthenope, whom after she had fared across the sea Apollo himself by the help of Dione's dove guided to a kindly soil.¹

This is the spot—for neither barbarous Thrace nor Libya is my native land—whither I fain would bring you; mild winters and cool summers temper its climate, its shores are lapped by the sluggish waters of a harmless sea. Peace untroubled reigns there, and life is leisurely and calm, with quiet undisturbed and sleep unbroken. No madness of the forum, no laws unsheathed in quarrel; our citizens admit but duty's ordinance, and Right holds sway without rod or axe. Why should I now praise the gorgeous scenes and adornments of that land, the temples and wide halls spaced off by countless columns, the two great theatres, one open and one covered, and the ¹See note a.

et Capitolinis quinquennia proxima lustris, quid laudem litus\(^1\) libertatemque Menandri, quam Romanus honos et Graia licentia miscent? nec desunt variae circa oblectamina vitae: sive vaporiferas, blandissima litora, Baias, enthea fatidicae seu visere tecta Sibyllae dulce sit Iliacoque iugum memorabile remo, seu tibi Bacchei vineta madentia Gauri Teleboumque domos, trepidis ubi dulcia nautis lumina noctivagae tollit Pharus aemula lunae, caraque non molli iuga Surrentina Lyaeo, quae meus ante alios habitator Pollius auget, Aenarumque\(^2\) lacus medicos Stabiasque renatas: mille tibi nostrae referam telluris amores? sed tibi socium longos adstvinxit in annos. nonne haec amborum genetrix altrixque videri digna? sed ingratus qui plura adnecto tuisque moribus indubito: venies, carissima coniunx, praeveniesque etiam; sine me tibi ductor aquarum Thybris et armiferi sordebunt tecta Quirini.

1 litus \textit{M}: lusus, risus, lites, ritus \textit{edd}.
2 Aenarumque Vollmer: Denarumque \textit{M}: Aenariaeque Dom.: Inarimesque Unger.

\(^{\text{a}}\) The "freedom of Menander" means the free, unhampered life that Menander valued highly, and which forms the subject of some of his extant sayings, \textit{e.g.} βίον διδάσκαλος | ἐλευθέρον τοῖς πάσιν ἀνθρώποις ἀγρός, "the country is a teacher of the free life to all." The mixture of Greek and Roman would be a characteristic of Neapolitan life.
quinquennial contests that rival the Capitoline festival? Why should I praise the shore and the freedom of Menander, \(^a\) a blend of Roman dignity and Grecian licence? Nor are there lacking all around the amusements that a varied life affords: whether you please to visit Baiae with its steaming springs and alluring coast, or the prophetic Sibyl’s inspired abode, or the hill made memorable by the Ilian oar \(^b\); whether you prefer the flowing vineyards of Bacchic Gaurus, or the dwellings of the Teleboae, \(^c\) where the Pharus raises aloft the beacon that rivals the night-wandering moon and is welcomed by affrighted sailors, or the Surrentine hills beloved of fiery Bacchus, which my friend Pollius before all men honours by his dwelling, or the health-giving lake of Aenaria and Stabiae reborn \(^d\)? Shall I recount to you the thousand beauties of my country? No; ’tis enough, my wife, enough to say: This land bore me for you, and bound me to you in partnership for many a year. May it not worthily be deemed the mother and foster-mother of us both? But ’twere ingratitude in me to add more words and to doubt your loyalty; you will come with me, dearest wife, ay, even go before me; without me Tiber, prince of streams, and the halls of armed Quirinus will seem dull and worthless in your eyes.

\(^b\) Of the Trojan Misenus (Virg. \(Aen._\) vi. 233).

\(^c\) Capri, which had a lighthouse.

\(^d\) After the eruption.
Inveni librum, Marcelle carissime, quem pietati tuae dedicarem. Reor equidem aliter quam invocato numine maximi imperatoris nullum opuseulum meum coepisse: sed hie liber tres habet... se quam quod quarta ad honorem tuum pertinet. Primo autem septimum decimum Germanici nostri consulatum adoravi: secundo gratias egì sacratissimis eius epulis honoratus: tertio viam Domitianam miratus sum, qua gravissimam harenarum moram exemit. Cuius beneficio tu quoque maturius epistolam meam accipies, quam tibi in hoc libro a Neapoli scribo. Proximum est lyricum carmen ad Septimum Severum, invenem. uti seis, inter ornatis-simos secundi ordinis, tuum quidem et condiscipulum, sed mihi citra hoc quoque ius artissime carum. Nam Vindicis nostri Herculem Epitrapezion secundum honorem, quem de me et de ipsis studiis meretur.

1 Lacuna recognized by Hahn, though none in mss.: se quam quod M Pot. (from P): sequitur $\varepsilon$, inserting quae after quarta: nisi quod quarta etc. $\varepsilon$. sed nec hic aliter res habet se quam quod etc. Phillimore. Vollmer would fill the lacuna thus: (libellos in honorem eius, tum denuum secuntur eelogae ad amicos: vides igitur te magis honorari non (potuis)se) quam quod etc. 2 citra Nohl: contra M. 202
BOOK IV

Statius to his Friend Marcellus: Greeting.

I have found a volume, my dearest Marcellus, that I can dedicate to your loyal friendship. I believe that no work of mine has opened without an invocation of the godhead of our mighty Prince; but this book has three <such poems>, . . ., and it is only the fourth that does you honour. In the first I have paid homage to the seventeenth consulship of our lord Germanicus; in the second I have returned thanks for the privilege of attending his most august banquet; in the third I express my admiration of the Domitian Road, whereby he has ended the serious waste of time caused by the sandy track. To him it is due that you will the sooner receive my letter which I am sending from Naples in this volume. Then follows an Ode to Septimius Severus, who is, as you know, one of the most distinguished young men of equestrian rank, and not only a school-companion of yours, but, even apart from that claim on me, one of my closest friends. As for the Hercules-statuette of our friend Vindex, I can make you responsible for that also, for he has deserved well a This seems to be the general sense.

imputare etiam tibi possum. Maximum Vibium et dignitatis et eloquentiae nomine a nobis diligi satis eram testatus epistola, quam ad illum de editione Thebaidos meae publicavi; sed nune quoque eum reverti maturius ex Dalmatia rogo. Iuneta est egloga ad municipem meum Iulium Menecratem, splendidum iuvenem et Pollii mei generum, cui gratulor quod Neapolim nostram numero liberorum honestaverit. Plotio Grypo, maioris gradus iuveni, dignius opuseulum reddam, sed interim hendecasyllabos, quos Saturnalibus una risimus, huic volumini inserui.

Quare ergo plura in quarto silvarum quam in prioribus? ne se putent aliquid egisse, qui reprehenderunt, ut audio, quod hoc stili genus edidissem. Primum supervacuum est dissuadere rem factam; deinde multa ex illis iam domino Caesari dederam, et quanto hoc plus est quam edere? exercere autem ioco non licet? "secreto" inquit. Sed et sphæromachias spectamus et palaris lusio admittit. Novissime: quisquis ex meis invitus aliquid legit, statim se profitetur^1 adversum. Ita, quare consilio eius aeedam? In summam, nempe ego sum qui tradueor; taceat et gaudeat. Hunc tamen librum

---

1 profitetur Vahlen and the Aldine: profiteatur M.

---

a i.e., from the honour of the "ius trium liberorum" which had been bestowed upon him.

b I read "profitetur" with Vahlen and the Aldine, also Vollmer, as with "profitetur" the following sentence lacks point, while "taceat" gives a directly contradictory sense.

204
of poetry in general and of myself in particular. I bore ample testimony to my affection for Vibius Maximus on the score both of high character and of poetic gift in the letter which I published about the bringing-out of my Thebaid; but on this occasion I beg him to return from Dalmatia with all speed. Next comes a poem to my fellow-townsmen Julius Meneocrates, a brilliant youth, noble knight, and the son-in-law of my friend Pollius: I congratulate him on having done honour to our city of Naples by the number of his children. Plotius Grypus, a youth of senatorial rank, shall have a poem more worthy of him, but in the mean time I have included in this volume some hendecasyllables that we laughed over together at the Saturnalia.

Why then, you will ask, are there more pieces in the fourth book of my Occasional Verses than in the former? Why, that they who, as I hear, have criticized me for publishing this kind of verse may feel that they have accomplished nothing. In the first place, the thing is done, and it is useless to grumble; in the second, I had already presented many of them to our Imperial Master, compared with which publication is a trivial affair. Besides, surely one may write in sportive vein? "Only privately," say they. But we go to see games of ball, and are admitted to fencing-matches. Finally: whoever of my friends reads anything unwillingly, then and there declares himself an enemy; very well, why should I take his advice? After all, surely it is I who am being abused; let him hold his peace and "ex meis" might perhaps be taken with "aliquid:" "anything of mine." Markland reads "invidus" for "invitus": "with disapproval." tu, Marcelle, defendes, et si videtur, haec tenus, sin minus, reprehendemur. Vale.

I

SEPTIMUS DECIMUS CONSULATUS IMP. AUG. GERMANICI

Laeta bis octonis accedit purpura fastis Caesaris insignemque aperit Germanicus annum atque oritur eum sole novo, cum grandibus aquis clarius ipse nitens et primo maior Eoo, exsultent leges Latiae, gaudete curules, et septemgeminino iactantior aethera pulset Roma iugo, plusque ante alias Evandrius aeces collis ovet : subiere novi Palatia fasces, et requiem bissenus honos precibusque receptis curia Caesareum gaudet vicisse pudorem.
ipse etiam immensi reparator maximus aevi attollit vultus et utroque a limine grates Ianus agit, quem tu vicina Paece ligatum

1 defendes, et, si videtur etc., M: defendes; haec, si videtur etc. conj. Phillimore: sed, si videtur etc. Vollmer, who transposes hune . . . defendes to between haec tenus and sin minus.
2 bissenus Stangius: bis-sextus M.

a The purple is that of the consulship, not of the principate. The date is 95 A.D.
b The title was given him for his campaigns in Germany, for which he triumphed in 83. It was probably a favourite title of his. See note on 43.
c The Palatine.
d Lit. “the twelfefold honour (the consulship, from the twelve lictors of the Consul) rejoices to have overcome repose,” i.e. to have obtained Caesar as consul; others take 206 be glad. But you, Marcellus, will champion this book; if you agree, well, so far so good! otherwise, I must submit to criticism. Farewell!

I. THE SEVENTEENTH CONSULSHIP OF THE EMPEROR AUGUSTUS GERMANICUS

This poem belongs to the class of Panegyric or laudation of the Emperor or other distinguished personage, which becomes common in later times, e.g. Claudian, Sidonius, etc.

With happy augury the Imperial consulship adds yet another to its twice eight terms, and Germanicus opens a year of glory; he rises with the rising sun and the mighty constellations, himself more brilliant than they and outshining the early Morning Star. Exult, ye laws of Latium, rejoice, ye eurule chairs, and let Rome more proudly strike the sky with her sevenfold summit, and Evander’s hill make louder boast than other heights! Once more the rods and axes have entered the Palace, the twelfofold honour rejoices to rest idle no more, and the Senate that its prayers are heard and Caesar’s modesty is overcome. Janus himself, great renewer of eternal Time, near whom thou hast set Peace "requiem" as "Caesar’s repose.” The former interpretation implies that only when Caesar was consul was the office really alive, a characteristic bit of flattery, as Domitian rarely held it for long, never beyond May 1st, and often only till January 13th, according to Suetonius, Dom. 13.

Vespasian built a temple of Pax "near the Forum" (Romanum), Suet. Vesp. 9, see iv. 3. 17 n. Whether the old Janus-arch of the Forum or the new Janus Quadrirrons of the Forum Transitorium, between the Roman and Julian Fora, is meant, is uncertain, though "utroque" suggests the former. The "new forum" is probably the F. Transitorium.
omnia insisti componere bella novique in leges iurare fori. levat ecce supinas hinc atque inde manus geminaque haec voce profatur:
"Salve, magne parens mundi, qui saecula mecum instaurare paras, talem te cernere semper mense meo tua Roma cupit; sic tempora nasei, sic annos intrare deecet. da gaudia fastis continua: hos umeros multo sinus ambiat ostro et properata tuae manibus praetexta Minervae.
aspicis ut templis alius nitor, altior aris ignis et ipsa meae tepeant tibi sidera brumae?
moribus atque tuis gaudent turmaeque tribusque purpureique patres. lucemque a consule ducit omnis honos? quid tale, precor, prior annus habebat?
die age, Roma potens, et mecum. longa Vetustas, dinumera fastos nee parva exempla recense, sed quae sola meus dignetur vincere Caesar.

ter Latio deciesque tulit labentibus annis Augustus fases, sed coepit sero mereri:
tu iuvenis praegressus avos. et quanta recusas, quanta vetas! fletere tamen precibusque senatus promittes hunc saepe diem. manet insuper ordo longior, et totidem felix tibi Roma eurules terque quaterque dabit. mecum altera saecula condes,
et tibi longaevi renovabitur ara parentis;
mille tropaea feres, tantum permitte triumphos:

1 aris M: astris M1 in marg. Pol. notes that P has both readings.
2 parentis M: Tarenti Turnebus.
3 permitte S : promitte M.

a Augustus owed his earlier consulship to force of arms rather than to merit.
to fetter him, and bidden him bring all warfare to an end, and swear allegiance to the laws of thy new Forum, Janus lifts up his head and from either threshold utters his gratitude. Lo! on this side and on that he raises suppliant hands, and speaks thus with twofold voice: "Hail, great Father of the world, who with me preparst to begin the ages anew, thus would thy Rome ever see thee in my month; thus should eras be born, thus should the year be opened. Give joys perpetual to our annals; let those shoulders many a time be draped in purple folds, and in the bordered robe that thy own Minerva's hands make haste to weave for thee.
Seest thou how the temples gleam more radiant, how the fire leaps higher on the altars, and even my mid-winter sky grows warmer? how tribes and knights and purple-clad Senators rejoice in thy virtues, and every rank shines in the lustre of its consul? What glory so great, I ask, had the year just gone? Come, speak, imperial Rome, recount. Antiquity, with me the long annals, take no note of petty names, but such only as my Caesar would deign to surpass.
Thrice and ten times in the lapse of years did Augustus wield the fasces over Latium, but only late by right of merit a: thou as a youth didst outstrip thy grandsires. And how many a time hast thou refused, how many a time forbidden to offer! Yet wilt thou be persuaded, and oft vouchsafe this day to the Senate's prayers. A longer line awaits thee yet, and as oft again, ay, thrice and four times as often will fortunate Rome grant thee the curule chair. With me shalt thou found a second age, and the altar of thy long-lived sire shall be restored: a thousand trophies shalt thou win, wilt thou but restat Baetra novis, restat Babylonae tributis frenari; nondum gremio Iovis Indica laurus, nondum Arabes Seresque rogant, nondum omnis annus habet, cupiuntque decem tua nomina menses."

Sic Ianus clausoque libens se poste reepit.
tune omnes patuere dei laetoque dederunt signa polo, longamque tibi, dux magne, iuventam annuit atque suos promisit Juppiter annos.

II

EUCHARISTICON AD IMP. AUG. GERM. DOMITIANUM

Regia Sidoniae convivia laudat Elissae.
qui magnum Aenean Laurentibus intulit arvis, Alcinoique dapes mansuro carmine monstrat, aequore qui multo reducem consumpsit Ulixem:
ast ego, cui sacrae Caesar nova gaudia cenae nune primum dominaque dedit consurgere mensa, qua celebrem mea vota lyra, quas solvere grates sufficiam? non, si pariter mihi vertice lacto nectat odoratas et Smyrna et Mantua lauros, digna loquar. mediis videor discumbere in astris

1 dux Markland : rex M.

 Statius elsewhere flatters Domitian for abstaining from triumphs that he might have celebrated, cf. iv. 3. 159.

b After his triumph at the end of 83 Domitian had adopted the title of Germanicus, and later on, probably in 86, had the months September and October called Germanicus and Domitianus (Suet. Dom. 13).

c See Virgil, Aen. i. 696; Homer, Odyssey. viii. 57.

210
permit the triumphs.\textsuperscript{a} Baetra and Babylon are still to be curbed with new tribute, not yet have Indian laurels been laid in the lap of Jove; not yet do the Arabs and Seres make petition, not yet hath the year its full tale of honour: ten months still yearn for thee to name them.”\textsuperscript{b}

So Janus ended, and gladly withdrew into his closed portals. Then all the gods flung wide their temples, and gave signs in the glad vault of heaven, and Jupiter vouchsafed thee, O mighty leader, a perpetual youth and his own years.

II. A POEM OF THANKSGIVING TO THE EMPEROR AUGUSTUS GERMANICUS DOMITIANUS

\textit{Statius offers his thanks to the Emperor for the great banquet given to Senators and Knights in his new palace, to which the poet had been invited.}

He who brought great Aeneas to the Laurentian fields extols the royal banquet of Sidonian Elissa, and he who ended Ulysses’ story with his return after long seafaring portrays in lasting verse the supper of Alcinous: \textsuperscript{c} but I, on whom now for the first time Caesar has bestowed the unwonted rapture of a feast divine, and granted me to ascend to the table of my prince, what skill have I to sing my blessings, what power to express my thankfulness? Not even if Smyrna\textsuperscript{d} and Mantua both were to bind their laurels on my exultant head, could I make worthy utterance. Methinks I recline with Jove in mid-heaven, and take \textsuperscript{d} One of the reputed birthplaces of Homer.

cum Iove et Iliac porrectum sumere dextra immortale merum! steriles transmisimus annos:
haec aevi mihi prima dies, hic limina vitae.
tene ego, regnator terrarum orbisque subae tagne parens, te. spes hominum, te, cura deorum. 15 cerno iacens? datur haec iuxta. datur ora tueri vina inter mensasque et non adsurgere fas est?
Tectum augustum, ingens, non centum insigne columnis,
se(d quantify superos caelum que Atlante remiso sustentare queant. stupet hoc vicina Tonantis 20 regia, teque pari laetantur sede locatum numina. nec magnum properes escendere caelum1;
tanta patet moles effusaeque impetus aulae liberior campo2 multumque amplexus operti aetherae et tantum domino minor: ille penates 25 implet et ingenti genio invat. aemulus illie mons Libys Iliacusque nitens et3 multa Syene et Chios et glaucae certantia Doridi saxa Lunaque portandis tantum suffecta columnis.
longa supra species: fessis vix culmina prendas 30
visibis auraticae putes laquearia caeli.
hic cum Romuleos proceres trabeataque Caesar agmina mille simul iussit discumbere mensis, ipsa sinus accincta Ceres Bacchusque laborat

1 nec magnum properes escendere caelum Gronovius: excedere M: ne in m. pr. excedere c. Lundstroem.
2 campo Pol.: campi M.
3 Iliacusque nitens et. I have filled the lacuna of the MSS.
thus: Iliacusque nitet . . multa M, Nilaca Syene Slater, cumulata conj. Phyllimore; others in various ways.

a Of Ganymede.
b The temple of Jupiter on the Capitol, or, perhaps,
"magnum caelum," i.e. Olympus (22). Some edd. take
"nec properes" as "do not hasten."
the immortal wine proffered by an Ilian hand! I have lived barren years, but this is my natal day, this day is the threshold of my life. Is it thou, O ruler of the nations and mighty sire of the conquered world, is it thou, O hope of men and care of the gods, whom I behold while I lie at meat? Is it granted me indeed to gaze at those features face to face, amid the feasting and the wine, and lawful not to rise up in thy presence?

An edifice august, huge, magnificent not with an hundred columns, but with as many as would support heaven and the gods, were Atlas eased of his burden. The neighbouring palace of the Thunderer views it with awe, and the Powers rejoice that thou hast a like abode. Nor wouldst thou hasten to ascend to the great sky; so huge expands the pile, and the reach of the far-flung hall, more unhampered than a plain, embracing beneath its shelter a vast expanse of air, and only lesser than its lord; he fills the house, and gladdens it with his mighty spirit. Libyan mountain and gleaming Ilian stone are rivals there, and much Syenite and Chian and the marble that vies with the grey-green sea; and Luna also, chosen but to bear the pillars' weight. Far upward travels the view; scarce does the tired vision reach the summit, and you would deem it the golden ceiling of the sky. Here when Caesar has bidden the Roman chieftains and the ranks of knighthood recline together at a thousand tables, Ceres herself with robe upgirt and \[^c\] See note on i. 2. 148. The quarries of Luna in Etruria supplied white marble only, despised in comparison with the coloured kinds.

\[^d\] The "trabea" was a decorated robe worn by the knights on solemn occasions, also sometimes by the consuls, and originally by the kings.
sufficere. aetherii felix sic orbita fluxit

Triptolemi; sic vitifero\(^1\) sub palmita nudos umbravit colles et sobria rura Lyaeus.

Sed mihi non epulas Indisque innixa columnis roborae Maurorum famulasque ex ordine turmas, ipsam, ipsum cupido tantum spectare vacavit tranquillum vultus et maiestate serena mulcentem radios summittentemque modesta fortunae vexilla suae; tamen ore nitebat dissimulatus honos. talem quoque barbarus hostis posset et ignotae conspectum agnoscere gentes.
non aliter gelida Rhodopes in valle recumbit dimissis Gradivus equis; sic lubrica ponit membra Therapnaeae resolatus gymnade Pollux, sic iacet ad Gangen Indis ululantibus Euhan, sic gravis Alcides post horrida iussa reversus gaudebat strato latus adclinare leoni.
parva loquer needum aequo tuos, Germanice, vultus:
talis, ubi Oceani finem mensasque revisit Aethiopum sacro diffusus nectare vultus dux superum secreta iubet dare carmina Musas et Pallenaecos Phoebum laudare triumphos.

Di tibi—namque animas saepe exaudire minores dicuntur—patriae bis terque exire senectae annuerint fines! rata numina miseris astris,

\(^1\) vitifero \(M\); uvifero \(Krohn\).

---

\(a\) He taught men how to sow corn, as Bacchus how to cultivate the grape.

\(b\) There was a cycle of legends about Bacchus’s conquests in India, for which see the \textit{Dionysiaca} of Nonnus.

\(c\) Supposed scene of the battle of gods and giants, more usually called Phlegra.
Bacchus strive to serve them. So bounteous were the gliding wheels of airy Triptolemus; so did Lyaeus overshadow the bare hills and sober fields with the branches of his vines.

But no leisure had I to behold the feast or the tables of Moorish wood resting on supports of Indian ivory, or the rows of attendant slaves, so eager was I to gaze upon himself, ay himself, calm-visaged and in majesty serene tempering his rays and gently veiling the glory of his state; yet the splendour that he would fain conceal shone in his countenance. Such as he was, barbarian foes and foreign tribes would have known him had they seen him. Not otherwise does Gradivus recline in the cool vale of Rhodope, his steeds unyoked; even so does Pollux weary from the wrestling-bouts of Therapnae lay down his slippery limbs; so lies Euhan by Ganges' side while Indians howl; so stern Alcides, returning after his grim errand, rejoices to lay his side upon the outstretched lion-skin. I speak of trivial things, nor can I yet find any rival to thy countenance, O Germanicus: such is the monarch of the gods, when he visits once more the bounds of Ocean and the Ethiopian board, and, his face suffused with sacred nectar, bids the Muses utter their mystic songs, and Phoebus praise the triumph of Pallene.

May the gods grant thee—for 'tis said they oft give ear to lesser souls—to surpass, twice and thrice over, the limits of thy sire's old age! Mayst thou send appointed deities to the sky, and grant temples and

---

\( a \) An allusion may be intended here to the Temple of the Flavian Gens consecrated by Domitian. Cf. Theb. i. 30. Divine honours were given by Domitian to his brother Titus and to his niece Julia. "domos" = the Palatine.
templaque des habitesque domos! saepe annua pandas limina, saepe novo Ianum lictore salutes, saepe coronatis iteres quinquennia lustris!
qua mihi felices epulas mensaeque dedisti sacra tuae, talis longo post tempore venit lux mihi, Troianae qualis sub collibus Albae, cum modo Germanas acies modo Daca sonantem proelia Palladio tua me manus induit auro.

III

VIA DOMITIANA

Quis duri silicis gravisque ferri immanis somus aequori propinquum saxosae latus Appiae replevit?
certe non Libycae sonant catervae nec dux advena peierante bello Campanos quartit inquietus agros, nec frangit vada montibusque caesis inducit Nero sordidas paludes, sed qui limina bellica Iani iustis legibus et foro coronat, qui castae Cereri diu negata

\[a\] The Capitoline contest.
\[b\] See note on iii. 5. 28.
\[c\] The prize was a golden olive-wreath.
\[d\] The reference is to Hannibal’s army, and to the bad faith (“punica fides”) of that commander.
\[e\] The reference is to Nero’s attempt to make a canal from Lake Avernus to the mouth of the Tiber, which meant abide in thy palace! Many a time mayst thou fling wide the threshold of the year, and many a time with new lectors offer thy greetings to Janus, many a time renew the garlanded festival of the quinquennial games! The day whereon thou didst vouchsafe to me the sacred blessings of thy feast and board came to me after long time as glorious as that when beneath the hills of Trojan Alba I sang now of German wars, now of Dacian battles, and thy hand set the golden circlet of Pallas on my brow.

III. THE DOMITIAN ROAD

The Via Domitiana, built in 95, replaced the old, very bad road along the coast from Sinuessa to Naples; the Appian Way struck inland at Sinuessa, and a long detour was necessary, if travellers to Naples wished to avoid the bad road. The new road thus effected a considerable shortening of the journey.

What fearful sound of hard flint and heavy iron fills the stony Appian way where it draws nigh the sea? Certainly no Libyan hordes are thundering, no foreign chieftain seours restlessly the Campanian fields in treacherous warfare, nor is Nero hewing a canal, and making a way for squalid meres through cloven mountains. Nay, he who encircles the warlike threshold of Janus with justice and courts of law, he who restores to innocent Ceres acres long cutting through two mountain ridges, see Tac. Ann. xv. 42. "paludes," probably the Pompitine marshes.

Probably the Forum Transitorium, see iv. 1. 13 n., and the new Janus Quadrifrons. Cf. Mart. x. 28. 5.

217
STATIUS

reddit iugera sobriasque terras, qui fortém vetat interire sexum et censor prohibet mares adultos pulehrae supplicium timere formae, qui reddit Capitolio Tonantem et Paeem propria domo reponit, qui genti patriae futura semper saneit lumina\(^1\) Flavinumque caelum\(^2\): hie segnis\(^3\) populi vias gravatus\(^4\) et campos iter omne detinentes longos eximit ambitus novoque inieictu solidat graves harenas gaudens Euboicae domum Sibyllae Ganranosque sinus et aestuantes septem montibus admove re Baias.

Hie quondam piger axe vectus uno nutabat cruce pendula viator sorbebatque rotas maligna tellus, et plebs in mediis Latina campis horrebat mala navigationis;
nec eursus agiles, sed impeditum tardabant iter orbitae taentès,\(^5\) dum pondus nimium querens sub alta repit languida quadrupes statera.

\(^1\) lumina \(M\): limina \(\S\), numina Buecheler.
\(^2\) caelum Turnebus: calvum \(M\), cultum, culmen, clivum, clavum (J. Ph. 13) edd.
\(^3\) segnis \(\S\): senis \(M\): caenis Gronovius.
\(^4\) gravatus Heinsius: gravatas \(M\).
\(^5\) taentes \(M\): tenaees Davies.

\(a\) Domitian encouraged wheat-growing at the expense of vine-growing in Italy, and actually ordered vineyards to be destroyed in the provinces, Suet. Dom. 7.

218
denied her, and a sober countryside, he who forbids the strength of sex to be destroyed, and as Censor will allow grown males no more to fear the punishment of beauteous form, he who restores the Thunderer to the Capitol, and sets Peace in her own home, he who consecrates to his father's line lights that will aye endure, a Flavian heaven—'tis he who, brooking ill the slow journeys of his people and the plains that clog every minute of the road, sweeps away tedious windings and lays a new solid paving upon the weary sands, rejoicing to bring the Euboean Sibyl's home and the dells of Gaurus and sweltering Baiae nearer to the seven hills.

Here on a time the tardy traveller, borne on a single axle, was balanced on the swaying pole, while the unkindly earth sucked in the wheels, and Latin folk shuddered in mid-plain at the evils of a sea-voyage; nor could carriages run nimbly, but the noiseless track made their course hampered and slow, while the fainting beast, complaining of a too heavy load, crept on beneath its lofty yoke. But

^ Refers to Domitian's prohibition of the practice of castration.

The restoration of the Temple of Jupiter on the Capitol after the fire of 69.

d Domitian was only completing the work of Vespasian. Cf. Suet. Dom. 5, "omnia sub titulo tantum suo, ac sine ullo pristini auctoris memoria."

e The "Flavia domus" on the Quirinal was made a shrine of that family, cf. v. 1. 240.

f The picture seems to be of a two-wheeled gig with its wheels sunk in the mud and the unfortunate traveller precariously clinging to the pole; "crux" is not elsewhere so used, but can easily be understood of the pole with the yoke; "axe vectus uno" is perhaps "with one wheel foundered" (Slater), but Vollmer is surely wrong in making it a four-wheeled carriage.
at nunc, quae solidum diem terebat, horarum via facta vix duarum.
non tensae volucrum per astra pennaee nee velocius ibitis, carinae.
Hic primus labor incohare sulcos et rescindere limites et alto egestu penitus cavare terras;
mox haustas aliter replere fossas et summo gremium parare dorso, ne nutent sola, ne maligna sedes det pressis dubium cubile saxis;
tunc umberibus hinc et hinc eoactis et crebris iter alligare gomphis.
o quantae pariter manus laborant!
hi caedunt nemus exuuntque montes,
hi ferro scopolus trabesque levant;
illi saxa ligant opusque texunt cocto pulvere sordidoque tofo;
hi siecant bibulas manu lacunas et longe fluvios agunt minores.
hae possent et Athon cavare dextrae et maestum pelagus gementis Helles tereludere ponte non natanti.
his parvus, nisi di via\(^1\) vetarent, Inous freta misceuisset Isthmos.
fervent litora mobilesque silvae,
it\(^2\) longus medias fragor per urbes,

---

\(^1\) di via Macnaghten: deviae M, di viam Barth, cliviae
I. Voss (wh. Vollmer reads), laurus nisi Deliae Constantinus Fanensis (and Ellis).

\(^2\) it Pol.: et M.

---

\(^a\) This description of road-making is confirmed by excavations, see extract from Bergier’s Histoire des grands
now a journey that once wore out a solid day is performed in scarce two hours. No swifter fare ye through the heavens, ye birds with outstretched pinions, nor will ye more swiftly sail, ye ships.

The first labour was to prepare furrows and mark out the borders of the road, and to hollow out the ground with deep excavation; then to fill up the dug trench with other material, and to make ready a base for the road’s arched ridge, lest the soil give way and a treacherous bed provide a doubtful resting-place for the o’erburdened stones; then to bind it with blocks set close on either side and frequent wedges. Oh! how many gangs are at work together! Some cut down the forest and strip the mountain-sides, some plane down beams and boulders with iron; others bind the stones together, and interweave the work with baked sand and dirty tufa; others by dint of toil dry up the thirsty pools, and lead far away the lesser streams. These hands could hollow out Athos, and bar with no floating bridge the doleful sea of moaning Helle. These hands, did not the gods forbid the passage, had made Ino’s puny Isthmus mingle the sundered seas. The shores are astir and the waving woods, the din travels afar through the cities that lie between, and

\[\text{chemins de l'Empire Romain, in Pauly’s Real-Encycl. iv. 2. 2547.} \]
\[\text{See also Smith’s Dict. Ant. s.v. “Via.”} \]
\[\text{b Lime was used to cement the intermediate strata of the road, consisting of stones, broken brick and pottery. “sordido”: called by Vitruvius “ tofus niger.”} \]
\[\text{c Various attempts were made to cut through the Isthmus by Demetrius of Macedon, Julius Caesar, Caligula, and Nero, but the gods seemed to be against the undertaking, “ nefasto, ut omnium exitu patuit, incepto,” Plin. N.H. iv. 10.} \]
\[\text{d It was at Lechaeum, a port on the Isthmus, that Ino was worshipped.} \] atque echon simul hine et inde fraetam Gauro Massicus uvifer remittit.
miratur sonitum quieta Cyme et Literna palus pigerque Savo.

At flavum caput umidumque late crinem mollibus impeditus ulvis Vulturturnus levat ora maximoque pontis Caesarei reclinus aren ducis talia faucibus redundat:
"camporum bone conditor meorum, qui me vallibus avis refusum et ripas habitare nescentem recti legibus alvei ligasti, et nunc ille ego turbidus minaxque, vix passus dubias prius carinas,
iam pontem fero perviusque calceor;
qui terras rapere et rotare silvas adsueram—pudet!—n. amnis esse coepi;
sed grates ago servitusque tanti est,
quod sub te duce, te iubente cessi, quod tu maximus arbiter meaeque victor perpetuus legere ripae.
et nunc limite me colis beato nec sordere sinis malunque late deterges sterilis soli pudorem, ne me pulvereum gravemque caelo Tyrrheni sinus obluat^{2} profundi, qualis Cinyphius tacente ripa Poenos Bagrada serpit inter agros, sed talis ferar, ut nitente cursu tranquillum mare proximumque possim puro gurgite provocare Lirim."

^{1} et \( \ddot{e} \) : it \( M. \)
^{2} obluat \( M. \) : obruat \( \ddot{s}. \)
the vine-bearing Massie mount throws back to Gaurus the echoes that scatter on every side. Quiet Cyme marvels at the noise, and the Liternian lake and sluggish Savo.

But Vulturnus, his yellow head and wide-flung watery tresses entangled in soft sedge, raises his face and leaning against the mighty arch of Caesar's bridge pours out from his strident throat such words as these: "Gracious benefactor of my plains, who, while I poured o'er trackless vales nor knew how to dwell within my banks didst bind me by the law of a strict channel, now do I, that turbulent and dangerous stream, who once scarce brooked frail vessels, already endure a bridge, and am trodden by travellers underfoot; I who was wont to whirl forest and field to ruin, shame on me! am beginning to be a river. But I give thee thanks, and my servitude is worth the while, because under thy rule and at thy command I have yielded, and because thou wilt be read of perpetually as supreme lord and conqueror of my bank. And now thou honourest me with splendid embankments, nor sufferest me to be foul, and far and wide dost purge away the evil shame of barren soil; so that the gulf of the Tyrrhenian sea need not cleanse my muddy, sky-polluting stream, like to Cinyphian Bagrada crawling between silent banks through Punic fields: nay, so brightly shall I flow that I shall challenge the calm sea with my sparkling current, or neighbouring Liris with my unstained waters."

\[a\] The Vulturnus flows into the sea about 10 miles S. of Sinuessa: the road would cross it not far from its mouth.

\[b\] Or, "with a splendid channel," as Ov. Met. viii. 559 "solito dum limite currunt flumina," etc.
Haec amnis pariterque se levarat ingenti plaga marmorata dorso.
huius ianua prosperunque limen arcus, belligeris ducis tropaeis et totis Ligurum nitens metallis, quantus nubila qui coronat imbri.\(^1\) illie flectitur excitus viator, illie Appia se dolet relinqui.
tunc velocior acriorque cursus, tunc ipsos iuvat impetus iugales ;
ceu fessis ubi remigum lacertis primae carbasa ventilatis, auroae.
ergo omnes, age, quae sub axe primo Romani colitis fidem parentis, prono limite commeate gentes, Eoae citius venite laurus.
nil obstat cupidis, nihil moratur : qui primo Tiberim relinquit ortu, primo vespere naviget Lucreiunm.

Sed quam fine viae recentis imo, qua monstrat veteres Apollo Cumas, albam crinibus infulisque cerno ! visu fallimur ? an sacris ab antris profert Chalcidicas Sibylla laurus ? cedamus ; chely, iam repone cantus : vates sanctior incipit, tacendum est. en ! et colla rotat novisque late baechatur spatiis viamque replet.
tunc sic virgineo profatur ore :
" dicebam, veniet—manete campi atque amnis—, veniet favente caelo, \(^1\) imbri \(M \): Iri \(\delta\).
Thus spoke the river, and therewith a marbled stretch of roadway had arisen with mighty ridge. Its portal and auspicious threshold was an arch that shone with the warlike trophies of the Prince and all Liguria's mines, as vast as that which rings the clouds with rain. There the wayfarer turns aside with quickened speed, there the Appian road grieves that she is left. Then swifter and more furious grows the pace, and even the beasts exult in the speed: as when the rowers' arms are weary and the first breezes fan the sails. Come then all ye who beneath the sky of dawn owe fealty to the Roman Sire, flock hither all ye races on this easy road, come more swiftly than before, ye laurels of the East. Nought hinders your eagerness, nought delays your course: he who leaves Tiber at dawn of day, let him sail the Lucrine lake at earliest eventide.

But what woman is this with snow-white hair and fillet whom I see at the new road's extremest end, where Apollo's temple shows Cumae's ancient site? Does my vision err? or does the Sibyl bring forth the Chalcidic bayleaves from her sacred grot? Let us retire: lute, lay by thy song! a holier bard begins, and we must be silent. Lo! how she whirls her head around, and rushing in frenzy far and wide about the new-made track fills all the roadway! Then thus she speaks with virgin mouth: "I said it, he will come—have patience, ye fields and river!—he will come by heaven's favour, who will raise this a Possibly the mines of Luna are referred to.

---

b It is a habit of Statius to reinforce his own praise with that of some supernatural person, e.g. Hercules in iii. 1, Janus in iv. 1, Venus in iii. 4, etc.

c Cumae (Cyme) was a colony of Chalcis in Enboea.
qui foedum nemus et putres harenas celsis pontibus et via levabit.
en! hic est deus, hunc iubet beatis pro se Iuppiter imperare terris;
quo non dignior has subit habenas, ex quo me duce praescios Averni Aeneas avide futura quaerens luces et penetrasit et reliquit.
hic paci bonus, hic timendus armis, Natura melior potentiorque.
hic si flammigeros teneret axes, largis, India, nubibus maderes.
undaret1 Libye, teperet Haemus.
salve, dux hominum et parens deorum, provisum mihi conditumque numen.
nec iam putribus evoluta chartis sollemni prece quindecim virorum perluxtra mea dieta, sed canentem ipsam comminus, ut mereris, audi.
vidi2 quam seriem3 merentis4 aevi pronectant tibi candidae sorores:
magnus te manet ordo saeculorum,
natis longior abnepotibusque annis perpetua geres iuventa, quos fertur placidos adisse Nestor, quos Tithonia computat senectus et quantos ego Delium poposci.
iuravit tibi iam nivalis Areus, nunc magnos Oriens dabit triumphos.
ibis qua vagus Hercules et Euhan ultra sidera flammeumque solem et Nili caput et nives Atlantis, rotting woodland and these pestilent sands on lofty bridges and a causeway. Lo! a god is he, at Jove's command he rules for him the happy world; none worthier than he has held this sway since under my guidance Aeneas, eagerly searching out the future, penetrated Avernus' prescient groves and went forth again. A friend is he to peace, and terrible in arms, more bountiful than Nature and more powerful. Were his the government of the flaming sky, thou India wouldst be moist with abundant showers, Libya would stream with waters, Haemus would be warm. Hail, ruler of men and parent of gods, foreseen by me and fore-ordained was thy godhead. No longer scan those words of mine that the fifteen men \(^a\) with solemn prayer unroll on mouldering sheets, but face to face, as thou deservest, hear me chant my oracle. I have seen what chain of meritorious years the Fates white-clad are weaving for thee; a mighty roll of centuries awaits thee, longer than son or grandson shalt thou bear the years that Nestor reached, as they say, in tranquil age, as many as old Tithonus counted or I myself asked of the Delian god.\(^b\) Already the snowy North has paid thee homage, soon the Orient will give thee mighty triumphs. Where wandering Hercules and Euhan \(^c\) went thou shalt go, beyond the stars and the flaming sun, and the source of Nile and the snows of Atlas, and blest

\(^a\) The XVviri, who had charge of the Sibylline oracles.
\(^b\) i.e., as many grains as were in a handful of dust; see Ovid, Met. xiv. 130.
\(^c\) Bacchus.
et laudum cumulo beatus omni scandes belliger abnuesque currus;
donee Troicus ignis et renatae Tarpeius pater intonabit aulae, haec donee via te regente terras annosa magis Appia senescat.”

IV. EPISTOLA AD VITORIUM MARCELLUM

Curre per Euboicos non segnis, epistola, campos, hae ingressa vias, qua nobilis Appia crescit in latus et molles solidus premit agger harenas.
atque ubi Romuleas velox penetraveris arces, continuo dextras flavi pete Thybridis oras.
Lydia qua penitus stagnum navale coercet ripa suburbanisque vadum praetexitur hortis.
illic egregium formaque animisque videbis Marcellum et celso praesignem vertice noscees.
cui primam solito vulgi de more salutem, mox inclusa modis haec reddere verba memento:

1 scandes $\dagger$: sandes $\dagger$ for $\dagger$ laudes $\dagger$ conj. $\dagger$ Phill., frondes $\dagger$ Slater.
2 regente $\dagger$: gerente $\dagger$ for $\dagger$ vias $\dagger$ for $\dagger$ Vollmer.

$^d$ Apparently a reference to Domitian’s supposed magnanimity in refusing triumphs, cf. iii. 3. 168 n.
$^b$ The fire brought from Troy and kept in the temple of Vesta.
$^c$ The plains of Campania, so-called from the town of Cumae, originally colonized by Chalcis in Euboea.
$^d$ This (leftward) bend of the Appian Way to the sea is the same as that referred to in the note at the beginning of the last poem, where the road is mentioned as striking inland (to one travelling from Rome) at Sinuessa.
in all thy wealth of noble deeds thou shalt mount and again refuse the chariots of war\(^a\): so long as the Trojan fire\(^b\) shall abide and the Tarpeian Father thunder in his reborn shrine, yea, until under thy governance of the earth this road grows older than the Appian's years.”

IV. A LETTER TO VITORIUS MARCELLUS

Vitorius Marcellus was of equestrian family, but became Praetor, and was also given charge of the Via Latina; for other details see IV Praef., II. 9, 41 ff. and 65 of this poem.

Haste at no laggard speed, my letter, o’er the Euboean plains\(^c\); set out upon thy road where the famous Appia branches sideward,\(^d\) and a solid mound is planted on the yielding sands. And when swiftly travelling thou hast reached the towers of Romulus, seek forthwith the right bank of yellow Tiber, where the Lydian shore straitens narrowly the naval basin,\(^e\) and suburban pleasure-gardens fringe the water. There shalt thou see Marcellus, peerless both in valour and in looks, and thou shalt know him by the mark of his lofty stature. First pay thy greeting in the accustomed manner, then remember to deliver this verse-embodied message:

\(^a\) The “stagnum navale” was a lake excavated by Augustus at the foot of the Janiculum for the purpose of naval displays and sham fights; it was about 50 acres in extent, and surrounded by pleasure gardens. “Lydia ripa” probably means the rising ground on the right bank, \textit{i.e.} the Etruscan side of the river. The Etruscans were supposed to have come originally from Lydia; \textit{cf.} Virg. \textit{Aen.} ii. 781 “Lydius fluvius,” of the Tiber.
"Iam terras volueremque polum fuga veris aquosi laxat et Icariis caelum latratibus urit; ardua iam densae rarescunt moenia Romae. hos Praeneste sacrum, nemus hos glaciale Dianae, 15 Algidus aut horrens aut Tuscula protegit umbra, Tiburis hi lucus Anienaque\(^1\) frigora captant. te quoque clamosae quaenam plaga mitior urbi subtrahit? aestivos quo decipis aere soles? quid? tuus ante omnis, tua cura potissima, Gallus, nec non noster amor—dubium morumne probandus ingeniine bonis—Latii aestival in oris anne metalliferae repetit iam moenia Lunae Tyrrenasque domos? quod si tibi proximus haeret, non ego nunc vestro procul a sermone recedo; certum est, inde sonus geminas mihi circuit aures. sed tu, dum nimio possessa Hyperione flagrat torva Cleonaei iuba sideris, exue curis pectus et assiduo temet furare labori. et sones operit pharetras areumque retendit 30 Parthus et Eleis auriga laboribus actos Alpheo permulcet equos et nostra fatescit laxaturque chelys: vires instigat alique tempestiva quies, maior post otia virtus! talis cantata Briseide venit Achilles aerior et positis erupit in Hectora plectris. te quoque flammabit tacite repetita parumper desidia et solitos\(^2\) novus exultabis in actus. certe iam Latiae non miscent iurgia leges,

\(^1\) Anienaque \(\Sigma\): amenaque \(M\).
\(^2\) solitos \(\Sigma\): solidos \(M\) and Vollmer.

\(^a\) i.e., of the Dogstar, "canis Icarius" (Ov. Am. ii. 16. 4); the dog, named Maera, belonged to Icarus, son of Oebalus, king of Sparta, and was made a star after its death.
"Already the flight of rainy spring sets free the earth and the rushing pole, and scorches the heaven with Icarian bayings; already the high walls of crowded Rome grow empty. Some sacred Praeneste shelters, some Diana's ice-cool glade or rugged Algidus or the shades of Tuseulum; others are eager for the groves of Tibur or Anio's cold waves. And thou—what gentler region draws thee from the clamorous city? With what sky art thou baffling the summer suns? And Gallus, thy favourite, thy chiefest care, whom I too love—whether more to be praised for virtue or for wit I know not—does he pass the summer on Latium's coast, or seek again the walls of Luna rich in mines and his Tyrrhenian home? But if he is close by thy side, my name now is not far from thy converse; ay, 'tis certain; that is why both my ears are buzzing. But do thou, while the angry mane of Cleonae's star is blazing, possessed by Hyperion's exceeding might, set free thy heart from cares and escape from constant toil. The Parthian puts up his noxious arrows and unstrings his bow, and the charioteer refreshes in Alpheus the steeds that Elean labours have exhausted, and my lyre grows weary and is relaxed: timely repose heartens and nourishes strength, valour is increased by a spell of ease. Even so Achilles, when he had sung of Briseis, went forth the fiercer, and putting by his quill burst out against Heetor. Thee too will leisure sought once more awhile secretly kindle, and thou wilt go forth refreshed and exultant to thy wonted tasks. Now indeed the Roman courts have ceased to bicker, 'tis the season of idleness and peace.

b The Constellation Leo, from Cleonae, near Nemea, where Hercules killed the lion.
et pacem piger annus habet messesque reversae dimisere forum. nce iam tibi turba reorum vestibulo querulique rogant exire clientes; cessat centeni moderatrix iudicis hasta, qua tibi sublimi iam nune celeberrima fama eminet et iuvenis facundia praeterit annos. felix curarum, cui non Helieonia cordi serta nec imbelles Parnasi e vertice laurus, sed viget ingenium et magnos accinctus in usus fert animus quascumque vicee; nos otia vitae solamur cantu ventosaque gaudia famae quae rimus, en egomet somnum et geniale secutus litus, ubi Ausonio se condidit hospita portu Parthenope, tennes ignavo pollice chordas pulso Maroneique sedens in margine templi sumo animum et magni tumulis adeanto magistri: at tu, si longi cursum dabat Atropos aevi,—detque, precor, Latiique ducis sie numina pergant, quem tibi posthabito studium est coluisse Tonante, quique tuos alio subtextit muncre fases et spatia obliquae mandat renovare Latinae!—forsitan Ausonias ibis frenare cohortes aut Rheni populus aut nigrae litora Thyles aut Histrum servare datur metuendaque portae limina Caspiacae. nec enim tibi sola potentis eloquii virtus: sunt membra accommoda bellis

\[a\] The Centumviri were an important court of civil jurisdiction. Its emblem was the spear, originally set up at sales of property captured from the enemy, as questions of property, e.g. inheritance, often came before it.

\[b\] According to the legend the Siren of that name threw herself into the sea after being foiled by Ulysses and was 232 and the return of the harvest has emptied the forum. Defendants no more throng thy chambers, no querulous clients pray thee to come forth. Idle is the spear that rules the Hundred Judges, a before whom even now, in all the brilliance of high renown, thy eloquence is pre-eminent and outstrips thy youthful years. Happy thou in thy labours, who carest not for the chaplets of Helicon nor for unwarlike bays from Parnassus' summit, but thy intellect is keen, and thy mind girt up for mighty deeds endures whatever may befall: we beguile a leisured life with song, and seek the fickle delights of fame. Lo! I myself, in quest of sleep and that genial shore where the stranger Parthenope b found refuge in an Ausonian haven, pluck at my frail strings with feeble fingers, and seated by the threshold of Maro's shrine take heart and make melody at the mighty master's tomb. c But thou, if Atropos gives thee a long span of life—and 'tis my prayer she may, and that the godhead of the Latian prince may so appoint, whose zealous worshipper, ay even before the Thunderer, thou art, and who adds another duty to thy year of office, and bids thee renew the hilly courses of the Latin Way—thou pereliance shalt go to curb the cohorts of Ausonia, or 'tis thy task to guard the peoples of the Rhine or dark Thule's shores, or Ister and the dread approaches of the Caspian gate. For it is not only the gift of powerful eloquence that is thine: thou hast limbs that are made for war, and washed up in the harbour of Naples, which was called after her. For another legend see iv. 8. 48 n.

Virgil's tomb was on the road from Naples to Puteoli, about two miles out from Naples, and was the object of the pious worship of Silius Italicus and many others.
STATIUS

qui gratem tarde^ subeant thoraca lacerti: seu campo pedes ire pares, est agmina supra nutaturus apex; seu frena sonantia flectes, serviet asper equus. nos facta aliena canendo vergimur in senium: propriis tu pulcher in armis 70 ipse canenda geres parvoque exempla parabis magna Getae, dignos quem iam nunc helliger actus poscit avus praestatque^2 domi novisse triumphos. surge, agedum, iuvenemque, puer, deprende paren-tem,

stemmate materno felix, virtute paterna. 75 iam te blanda sinu Tyrio sibi Gloria^3 felix educeat et cunctas gaudet spondere curules."

Haec ego Chalcidicis ad te, Marcelle, sonabam litoribus, fractas ubi Vesvius erigit iras, aemula Trinacriis volvens incendia flammis. 80 mira fides! credetne virum ventura propago, cum segetes iterum, cum iam haec deserta virebunt, infra urbes populosque premi proavitaque fato^4 rura abiisse pari^5? necdum letale minari cessat apex. procul ista tuo sint fata Teati 85 nec Marrucinos agat haec insania montes.

Nunc si forte meis quae exordia musis scire petis, iam Sidonios emensa labores Thebais optato collegit carbasa portu Parnasique ingis silvaque Heliconide festis 90

2 avus praestatque M (avos prestatque): perstatque Peyrared and Vollmer: avo spernitque Phillimore.
3 gloria M: curia Markland.
5 pari Slater: mari M.

* * *

^ tarde," apparently because his frame is so robust; the idea can be paralleled from the Thebaid, e.g. i. 489.
theuws that with difficulty put on the heavy corselet; should’st thou prepare to go on foot, thy helmet’s peak will nod high above the ranks; should’st thou bend the jingling reins, the mettlesome charger will do thy bidding. We, singing the deeds of others, fall into old age: thou resplendent in thy armour shalt perform actions meet for song, and set a noble pattern before the youthful Geta, of whom already his warrior grandsire is demanding worthy feats and grants him to know the triumphs of his house. Up, then, be doing, and overtake thy sire, though he be a man and thou but a lad, happy alike in thy mother’s lineage and thy father’s prowess. Already blissful Glory nourishes thee, and fondles thee in her robe of Tyrian dye, and delights to promise thee all the curule chairs.”

Such, Marcellus, is the song I am singing thee on the Chalcidic strand, where Vesuvius hurls forth broken rage, outpouring fire that would rival Trinacrian flames. Marvellous, but true! Will future ages believe, when once more crops are growing, and these wastes are green again, that cities and peoples lie beneath, and that their ancestral lands have perished by a like fate? And still that peak threatens ruin. Far be that fate from thy Teate, nor may such madness seize the Marrucinian hills!

If now perhance you ask what my muse is attempting, my Thebaid having completed her Sidonian toils has at last furled her sails in the wished-for haven, and on the ridges of Parnassus and in the \[b\] His son was called Vitorius Hosidius Geta after his mother, who was of the Hosidii, a senatorial family.

\[c\] i.e., Theban, from the descent of the Thebans from Cadmus.
tura dedit flammis et virginis exta iuvenae votiferaque meas suspendit ab arbore vittas.
nunc vacuos crines alio subit infula nexu:
Troia quidem magnusque mihi temptatur Achilles, se d vocat arcitenens alio pater armaque monstrat Auronii maiora ducis. trahit impetus illo iam pridem retrahitque timor. stabuntne sub illa mole umeri an magno vineetur pondere cervix?
dic, Marcella, feram? fluctus an sueta minores nosse ratis nondum Ioniis credenda periclis?

Iamque vale et penitus voti vatis honorem cor exire veta; nec enim Tirynthius aliae parces amicitiae; cedet tibi gloria fidi Theseos, et lacerum qui circa moenia Troiae Priamiden caeso solacia traxit amico.

V. ODE LYRICA AD SEPTIMIUM
    SEVERUM

Parvi beatus ruris honoribus, qua priscus Teucros Alba colit lares, fortem atque facundum Severum non solitis fidibus saluto.

1 honorem M: amorem Dom.
2 Lacuna, acc. to most ed.; after Tirynthius: Vollmer makes al. pec. am. in apposition, cf. Mart. ix. 14. 2, and explains by ellipse of te superat: others read tibi notius, retinentius.  3 parces Slater: pectus M.

See the prelude to the Achilleid: it was conventional flattery to suppose that one’s real ambition was to sing of the exploits of the Emperor.
glades of Helicon has thrown incense on the festal flames and the entrails of a virgin heifer, and hung up my chaplets on a votive tree. And now another band new twined encircles my vacant locks: ay, 'tis Troy I am attempting and great Achilles, but the Sire that wields the bow calls me elsewhere and points me to the mightier arms of the Ausonian chief. Long since has impulse urged me thither, but fear holds me back. Will my shoulders sustain so great a burden, or will my neck yield under the weight? Tell me, Marcellus, shall I essay the task? or must my bark that knows but lesser seas not yet be trusted to Ionian perils?

And now farewell, and let not regard for the poet who is wholly devoted to thee pass from thy mind; for neither was the Tirynthian chary of warm-hearted friendship; to thee shall yield the fame of loyal Theseus, and of him who to comfort his slain friend dragged Priam's mangled son around the walls of Troy.

V. A LYRIC ODE TO SEPTIMIUS SEVERUS

An Alcaic ode in the Horatian manner to his friend Septimius, a young man of equestrian family, who, like the future Emperor of that name, was born in Leptis in Africa. He had been a fellow-pupil of Vittorius Marcellus.

Happy amid the glories of my small estate, where ancient Alba dwells in her Trojan home, I salute in unwonted strains the brave and eloquent Severus.

b The Ionian and Adriatic seas were proverbially dangerous for ships that preferred to hug the shore.
Statius

iam trux ad Arctos Parrhasias hiems concessit altis obruta solibus, iam pontus ac tellus renident in Zephyros Aquilone fracto.¹

nunc cuncta veris² frondibus annuis erinitur arbos, nunc volucrum novi questus inexpertumque carmen, quod tacita statuere³ bruma.

nos parca tellus pervigil et focus culmenque multo lumine sordidum solantur exemptusque testa qua modo ferbuerat Lyaeus.

non mille balant lanigeri greges, nec vacca dulci mugit adultero, unique siquando canenti mutus ager domino reclamat.

sed terra primis post patriam mihi dilecta curis; hic mea carmina regina bellorum virago Caesareo peramavit⁴ auro, cum tu sodalis dulce periculum conisus omni pectore tolleres, ut Castor ad cunctos tremebat Bebryciae strepitus harenæ.

¹ in Zephyros . . . fracto Buecheler, Krohn: iam zephiros . . . fractos M.

238
At last harsh winter has fled to the Parrhasian North,\(^a\) o'erwhelmed by lofty suns; at last the cold winds are softened into mild zephyrs, and sea and land are smiling. Now every tree puts forth her yearly tresses of spring leaves, now are heard the birds' new plainings and the unpractised songs which they planned in the silent winter. As for me, my thrifty domain and ever-wakeful hearth and roof-tree blackened by many a fire console me, and the wine\(^b\) that I take from the jar where lately it fermented. Here no thousand woolly sheep utter bleatings, no cow lows to its sweet lover; and only to their master's voice, as he sings, whene'er he sings, do the mute fields re-echo. But this land, after my native country, holds first place in my love: here the maiden queen of battles\(^c\) favoured my songs with Caesar's golden crown, when you, striving with all your might, succoured your friend in his joyous hazard, even as Castor trembled at all the noise of the Bebryecian arena.\(^d\)

\(^a\) From Callisto, an Arcadian maiden, who was turned into a bear by Hera out of jealousy, and then made the constellation of the Bear; Parrhasus is a town in Arcadia.

\(^b\) Bacchus, i.e. wine.

\(^c\) i.e., Pallas. The reference is to the golden olive-wreath that was the prize of victory in the Alban contest; cf. iv. 2. 67.

\(^d\) When Pollux fought against Amycus, king of the Bebrycians, during the voyage of the Argo. The meaning of ll. 25-26 seems to be that his friend gave him all the encouragement he could, being as anxious for him to win as Castor was when Pollux was fighting.
tene in remotis Syrthibus avia Leptis creavit? iam feret Indicas messes odoratisque rara cinnama praeripiet Sabaeis.

quis non in omni vertice Romuli reptasse dulcem Septimium putet?
quis fonte Inturnae relictis uberibus neget esse pastum?

nee mira virtus: protinus Ausonum portus vadosae nescius Africae intras adoptatusque Tuscis gurgitibus puer innastit.

hinc parvus inter pignora curiae contentus artae lumine purpurae crescis, sed immensos labores indole patricia secutus.

non sermo Poenus, non habitus tibi, externa non mens: Italus, Italus.
sunt Urbe Romanisque turmis, qui Libyam deceant alumni.

est et frementi vox hilaris foro, venale sed non eloquium tibi;
ensisque vagina quiescit, stringere ni iubeant amici.

sed rura cordi saepius et quies, nunc in paternis sedibus et solo Veiente, nunc frondosa supra Hernica. nunc Curibus vetustis.

\[a\] A spring in Rome.
\[b\] The angusticlave, or two narrow purple stripes down
Did Leptis that loses itself in the distant Syrtes beget you? soon shall she bear Indian harvests, and despoil the perfumed Sabaeans of their rare cinnamon. Who would not think that my sweet Septimius had crawled an infant on all the hills of Rome? Who would not say that he had drunk, his weaning done, of Juturna’s fountain? Nor is your prowess to be wondered at; straightway, still ignorant of Africa and its shallows, you entered the havens of Ausonia, and sailed, an adopted child, on Tuscan waters. Then, still a lad, you grew to manhood among the sons of the Senate, content with the glory of the narrow purple, but with patrician soul seeking unmeasured labours. Neither your speech nor your dress is Punic, yours is no stranger’s mind: Italian are you, Italian! Yet in our city and among the knights of Rome are men who might well be foster-sons of Libya. Pleasing too is your voice in the strident courts, but your eloquence is never venal; your sword sleeps in its scabbard, save when your friends bid you draw it. But oftener do you enjoy the quiet country, now in your father’s home on Veientine soil, now on the leafy heights of Hernica, now in ancient Cures. Here will you plan more the front of the tunic, was the mark of knighthood (see Preface to Book IV.), but young sons of knights were sometimes granted the right of wearing the laticlave, one broad purple stripe; one may perhaps gather that this right was not granted in the case of Septimius. His soul, however, was truly noble ("patricia indole").

From which one may gather that Roman families living in Africa sometimes showed traces of Carthaginian speech; Vollmer, however, takes this as meaning "your word is true," not characterized by "punica fides," as in l. 48.

i.e., so untrustworthy are they. It could also be rendered: "Yes in the City . . . Libya has sons who would adorn her."
VI. HERCULES EPITRAPEZIOS NOVI VINDICIS

Forte remittentem euras Phoeboque levatum pectora, cum patulis tererem vagus otia Saeptis ian moriente die, rapuit me cena benigni Vindicis. haec imos animi perlapsa recessus inconsumpta manet. neque enim ludibria ventris hausimus ant epulas diverso a sole petitas vinaque perpetuis aevum certantia fastis.

a miser! quos nosse iuvat, quid Phasidis ales distet ab hiberna Rhodopes grue, quis magis anser exta ferat. cur Tuseus aper generosior Umbro, lubrica qua recubent conchylia mollius alga: nobis verus amor medioque Helicone petitus

1 passu Markland: passum M, passim s.

---

a The Saepta Julia was a much frequented public place in the Campus Martius, with some of the best shops in Rome; see Mart. ii. 14, ix. 59.

b The dinner has passed into the soul, and becomes a precious memory. Vollmer quotes Cie. Tuse. v. 100, “vestrae quidem cenae non solum in praesentia, sed etiam postero die incundae sunt,” “your dinners delight one not at the time only, but also on the morrow”; also Epicurus, who praises “plain living and high thinking.”

c The pheasant.

d Or, with more point in “hiberna,” “a crane caught on themes in the words and measures that move unfettered, but remembering me at times strike anew the lyre that lies hid in some shy grotto.

VI. THE HERCULES STATUETTE OF NOVIUS VINDEX

The poem consists chiefly of the description of the Hercules, a statuette (epitrapezios = statue to be put on a table) belonging to Novius Vindex, a connoisseur in art, who is mentioned by Martial (vii. 72. 7) in addition to the two epigrams in which the same statuette is described (ix. 43, 44). The statue was a bronze, and represented the god as seated, with a goblet in one hand and the club in the other; the type is a common one (see Roscher’s Lexicon der Mythol. i. 2176). It is clear that both Statius and Martial, as well as Novius, took it for a genuine work of Lysippus.

One day when putting aside my tasks with heart unburdened by Phoebus I was wandering aimlessly at sundown in the broad spaces of the Enclosure, a kind Vindex took me off to dine. That feast sank deep into the recesses of my soul, and remains unconsumed. For it was no wanton dainties of the belly that we devoured, no sweetmeats sought under distant suns, no wines whose ages rival our continuous Annals. Unhappy they whose delight is to know how the bird of Phasis differs from a crane of wintry Rhodope, what kind of goose has the largest liver, why a Tuscan boar is richer than an Umbrian, on what seaweed the slippery shell-fish most comfortably recline: as for us, real affection and discourse fetched from the heart of Helicon and merry jests Rhodope in winter,” i.e. a rarity, as cranes always flew south in winter.

243
sermo hilaresque ioci brumalem absumere noctem suaserunt mollemque oculis expellere somnum, donec ab Elysīs prospexisit sedibus alter Castor et hesternas risit Tithonia mensas, o bona nox iunctaque utinam Tirynthia luna!
nox et Erythraeis Thetidis signanda lapilli et memoranda diu geniumque habitura perennem!
mille ibi tune species aerisque eborisque vetusti atque locuturas mentito corpore ceras edidici. quis namque oculis certaverit usquam Vindicis, artificum veteres agnoscere ductus et non inscriptis auctorem reddere signis?
hie tibi quae docto multum vigilata Myroni aera, laboriferi vivant quae marmora caelo Praxitelis, quod ebur Pisaeo pollice rasum, quid Polyceleis iussum spirare eaminis, linea quae veterem longe fateatur Apellen, monstrabit: namque haec, quotiens chelyn exuit, illi desidia est, hie Aonius amor avocat antris.

Haec inter castae genius tutelaque mensae Amphitryoniades multo mea eepit amore pectora nec longo satiavit lumina visu:
tantus honos operi finesque inclusa per artos¹ maiestas! deus ille, deus! seseque videndum indulsit, Lysippe, tibi parvusque videri sentirique ingens! et eum mirabilis intra

¹ finesque... per artos: finesque (tennesque, iuvenesque edd.) per artus M.

---

² Castor and Pollux were allowed to live on alternate days; Tithonia is the Dawn.
³ i.e., such a night as that wherein Hercules was begotten, of twice the usual length.
⁴ i.e., pearls, fetched from the Erythraean sea; an im-persuaded us to sit out a winter’s night and to banish soft sleep from our eyes, until the other Twin a looked forth from Elysium, and Tithonia laughed at yesterday’s banquet. O night of bliss! would it had been Tirynthian, with moon added to moon! b a night to be marked with the Erythraean gems c of Thetis, a night to be long told of, a night whose spirit d will live for ever! There and then did I learn of a thousand beauties of bronze and ancient ivory, and deceiving shapes of wax on the verge of speech. For who ever rivalled the keen glance of Vindex in reeognizing the hand of an old master and telling the author of an untitled work? 'Tis he who will show you on what bronzes cunning Myron spent anxious vigils, what marbles the chisel of untiring Praxiteles has made to live, what ivories the thumb of the Pisaean e has smoothed, what statues have been bidden breathe in Polyclitus’ furnaces, what lines confess from afar the old Apelles; for this,
whensoe’er he puts his lyre from him, is his leisure,
this passion calls him from Aonian f dells.

Amid these treasures was a Hercules, the deity and guardian of his frugal board, with which I fell deeply in love; nor, though long I gazed, were my eyes sated with it; such dignity had the work, such majesty, despite its narrow limits. A god was he, ay, a god! and he granted thee to behold him, Lysippus, small to the eye, yet a giant to the mind!
And though his stature be marvellously confined provement on the usual “chalk,” as a means of marking a “white” day. Thetis was a sea-goddess.

a For “genius” see note on ii. 7. 132.

e Phidias, famed for his chryselephantine statue of Zeus at Olympia (Pisa).

f i.e., of the Muses (= Boeotian).
stet mensura pedem, tamen exclamare libebit, si visus per membra feres: "hoc pectore pressus vastator Nemees, haec exitiale ferebant robur et Argoos frangebant brachia remos." a! spatio¹ tam magna brevi mendacia formae! quis modus in dextra, quanta experientia docti artificis curis, pariter gestamina mensae fingere et ingentes animo versare colossos! tale nec Idacis quicquam Telchines in antris nee stolidus Brontes nec, qui polit arma deorum, Lemnius exigua potuisset ludere massa. nec torva effigies epulisque aliena remissis, sed qualem parci domus admirata Molorechi aut Aleae lucis vidit Tegcea sacerdos; qualis et Octaeis emissis in astra favillis nectar adhuc torva laetus Iunone bibebat: sic mitis vultus, veluti de pectore gaudens, hortatur mensas. tenet haec marcentia fratris pocula, at haec clavae² meminit manus; aspera sedis³ sustinet et cultum Nemeaeo tegmine saxum.

Digna operi fortuna sacro. Pellaeus habebat regnator laetis numen venerabile mensis et comitem occasus secum portabat et ortus, praestabatque⁴ libens modo qua diademata dextra

¹ a! spatio Bachrens: ac spatium M, hoc Pol., an Dom., nec Phillimore, spatio Dom.
² clavae Markland: levae M.
³ sedis M (=sedes acc. to Vollmer).
⁴ praestabatque M: prensabatque Pol.

This appears to be a direct reference to the “crab” caught by Heracles in the Argo through the breaking of his oar (see the Argonautica of Valerius Flaccus, iii. 476).
b "magna" by hypallage for “magnae”; the same idea within a foot's height, yet will you be fain to cry, as you cast your eyes o'er his limbs: "This is the breast that crushed the ravager of Nemea, these the arms that bore the deadly club, and broke the oars of Argo." To think that a tiny frame should hold the illusion of so mighty a form! What preciseness of touch, what daring imagination the cunning master had, at once to model an ornament for the table and to conceive in his mind mighty colossal forms! No such work could Telephus in the caves of Ida, or dull Brontes or the Lemnian who makes bright the armour of the gods have playfully fashioned from some small lump of metal. No wrathful likeness was it, unsuited to the gaiety of the feast, but in such mood as the home of thrifty Molochus marvelled to behold, or the Tegean priestess in Alea's groves; or as when, sent heavenward from Oeta's ashes, he joyfully drank the nectar, though Juno still frowned: with even so kindly a countenance, as if rejoicing from his heart, doth he cheer the banquet. One hand holds his brother's tipsy goblet, but the other forgets not his club; a rocky seat supports him, and the Nemean lionskin drapes the stone.

So divine a work had a worthy fate. It was a deity revered at the merry banquets of the Pellaean monarch, and alike in East and West it bore him company; gladly did he set it before him, with that same hand that had given crowns and taken them is expressed in lines 37 and 45, i.e. the artist's skill in making a small image convey the impression of giant form.

\(^a\) Vulcan.

\(^b\) The cottager who entertained Hercules when about to slay the lion of Nemea.

\(^c\) Auge, for whom see note on iii. 1. 40.

\(^d\) Alexander the Great.
abstulerat dederatque et magnas verterat urbes. 65
semper ab hoc animos in crastina bella petebat, huic acies semper victor narrabat opimas, sive catenatos Bromio detraxerat Indos seu elusam magna Babylona refregerat hasta seu Pelopis terras libertatemque Pelasgam obruerat bello; magnoque ex agmine laudum fertur Thebanos tantum excusasse triumphos.
ille etiam, magnos Fatis rumpentibus actus, cum traheret letale merum, iam mortis opaea nube gravis vultus alios in numine caro aeraque supremis timuit sudantia mensis.

Mox Nasamoniacoe deus admirabile regi possessum; fortique deo libavit honores semper atrox dextra periuroque ense superbus Hannibal. Italicae perfusum sanguine gentis diraque Romuleis portantem incendia tectis oderat, et cum epulas, et eum Lenaea dicaret dona, deus eastris maerens comes ire nefandis, praeipue cum saerilega face miscuit arees ipsius inmeritaeque domos ac templae Sagunti polluit et populis furias immisit honestas.

Nee post Sidonii letum deus aere potita egregio plebeia domus. convivia Syllae ornabat semper claros intrare penates adsuetum et felix dominorum stemmate signum.

Nunc quoque, si mores humanaque pectora curae nosse dei: non aula quidem, Tirynthie, nee te

1 Syllae Dom.: sibillae M.

\[a\] Bacchus also was supposed to have conducted successful campaigns in India, see note on iv. 2. 49.
\[b\] Alexander captured and destroyed Thebes, which away, and had ruined mighty cities. From it he sought courage for to-morrow's battle, to it he related, triumphant, the glorious fight, whether he had despoiled Bromius of fettered Indians, or with his strong spear had burst the enclosing walls of Babylon, or overwhelmed in war the lands of Pelops and Pelasgian freedom; and of all that tale of mighty deeds he is said to have asked pardon only for his Theban triumph. He too, when the Fates cut short his prowess, and he drank the deadly draught, in the very gloom and heaviness of death, was afraid at the altered face of his favourite deity, and at the bronzes that dripped sweat at that last banquet.

Next its marvellous beauty was possessed by the Nasamonian chief; and Hannibal, that ruthless warrior, haughty and treacherous in fight, paid honours to the valiant god. Yet the god hated him, drenched in Italian blood and threatening Roman homes with terrible flame, ay, even when he set feasting and gifts of wine before him; in sorrow did the god go forth with that cursed troop, especially when his own shrines were impiously fired, when the homes and temples of innocent Saguntum were outraged, and its people filled with righteous frenzy.

And after the death of the Sidonian leader 'twas no plebeian house obtained the peerless bronze. Ever wont to enter famous houses and blest in the lineage of its lords it adorned the feasts of Sulla.

Now too, if deities care to know the hearts and souls of men, no palace, no royal pomp surrounds thee, O Tirynthian, but thy master's soul is pure and revolted against him. Thebes was the birthplace of Hercules.

\[c = \text{African, i.e. Hannibal.}\] regius ambit honos, sed casta ignaraque culpae mens domini, cui prisca fides coeptaeque perenne foedus amicitiae. seít adhuc florente sub aevo par magnis Vestinus avis, quem nocte dieque spirat et in carae vivit complexibus umbrae. hic igitur tibi laeta quies, fortissime divum, Alcide, nec bella vides pugnasque feroques, sed ehelyn et vittas et amantes carmina laurus. hic tibi solemni memorabit carmine, quantus Iliacas Geticasque domos quantusque nivalem Stymphalon quantusque ingis Erymanthon aquosis terrueris, quam te pecoris possessor Hiberi, quem tulerit saevae Mareoticus arbiter araæ. hic penetrata tibi spoliataque limina mortis concinet et flentes Libyae Scythiaeque puellas. nec te regnator Macetum nec barbarus umquam Hannibal aut saevi posset vox horrida Syllae his celebrare modis. certe tu, muneris auctor, non alius malles oculis, Lysippe, probari.

VII. ODE LYRICA AD VIBIUM MAXIMUM

Iam diu lato satiata\(^1\) campo fortis heroos, Erato, labores differ atque ingens opus in minores contrahe gyros;

\(^1\) satiata \(\xi\): sociata \(M\): spatiata \(\xi\), Phillimore, cf. Theb. ix. 213.

\(^a\) The exploits of Hercules referred to are Trojan war, horses of Diomede, Stymphalian birds, Erymanthian boar, Geryon, Busiris, Alcestis and Cerberus, Hesperides, Amazons.

\(^b\) i.e., Macedonians.

250
innocent of error; old-world loyalty is his, and the unfailing bond of a friendship once begun. Vestinus knows it, who even in youth equalled his mighty sires, and whose spirit Vindex breathes by night and day, and lives in the embrace of that beloved shade. Here then hast thou a welcome resting-place, Alcides, most valiant of gods, nor beholdest battles or savage fights, but the lyre and chaplets and music-loving bays. Here in solemn chant will he recount to thee in what might thou didst terrify Getic and Ilian homes and snowy Stymphalus and Erymanthus with its streaming ridges; how the owner of the Iberian herd, how the Mareotie guardian of the cruel shrine endured thy power; he will sing of the gates of Death penetrated and spoiled by thee, of the weeping maids of Libya and of Seythia. Neither the ruler of the Maeetac nor barbarous Hannibal nor the uncouth accents of fierce Sulla could e'er have celebrated thee in such strains. And of a surety thou, Lysippus, the author of the gift, wouldst not have chosen to be approved by other eyes than these.

VII. A LYRIC ODE TO VIBIUS MAXIMUS

A Sapphic ode in which the poet expresses his desire to see his friend again, and congratulates him on the birth of a son. Vibius Maximus was serving in Dalmatia; at a later time he was prefect of Egypt, as we learn from an inscription (C.I.L. iii. 38). One may also gather that he had literary tastes.

Long time, bold Erato, hast thou had thy fill of the spreading field, but now put off thy heroic labours and contract thy mighty task to narrower circles;
tuque, regnator lyricae eohortis, da novi paulum mihi iura plectri, si tuas cantu Latio sacravi, Pindare, Thebas:

Maximo earnen tenuare tempto;
nune ab intonsa capienda myrto serta, nune maior sitis et bibendus estior annis.

quando te dulei Latio remittent Dalmatae montes, ubi Dite viso pallidus fessor redit erutoque concolor auro?

eece me natum propioe terra non tamen portu retinent amoeno desides Baiae litecense notus Hectoris armis.¹

torpor est nostris sine te Camenis, tardius sueto venit ipse Thymbrae rector et primis meus ece metis haeret Achilles.

quippe te fido monitore nostra Thebais multa cruciata lima temptat audaci fide Mantuanae gaudia famae.

sed damus lento veniam, quod alma prole fundasti vacuos penates.
ob diem laetum! venit eeee nobis Maximus alter!
and thou, Pindar, ruler of the lyric choir, grant me awhile the privilege of unwonted song; if I have hallowed thy own Thebes in Latin strains: 'tis for Maximus that I attempt to refine my verse; now must I take my garlands from unplucked myrtle, now a nobler thirst is mine, a purer stream must be quaffed. When wilt thou return again to pleasant Latium from the Dalmatian mountains, where the miner returns all pale at the sight of Dis and yellow as the gold he has unearthed? Lo! I, though born in nearer lands, am not held fast by lazy Baiae’s lovely haven, or by the trumpeter known to Hector’s battles. Without thee my Muse is sluggish, even Thymbra’s lord is slower than of wont in his coming, and lo! my Achilles halts at the first turning-point of his course: while it is with thee for trusty counsellor that my Thebaid, tortured by endless polishing, attempts with audacious string the joys of Mantuan renown. But we pardon thy delaying, because thou hast established thy empty home with flourishing offspring. O happy day! lo! a second Statius here is clearly imitating Silius Italicus, Pun. i. i. 231.

Astur avarus
visceribus lacerae telluris mergitur imis et redit infelix effosso concolor auro.

For other mentions of Dalmatian mines cf. i. 2. 153 and iii. 3. 90. “Dis”: i.e. he has descended so far into the earth (Dis = Pluto).

Misenus.

Apollo, god of inspiration.

liticeve ... armis ed. Parmensis: laticemve motus Hectoris amnis M. orbitas omni fugienda nisu, quam premit votis inimicus heres, optimo poscens—pudet heu!—propinquum funus amico.

orbitas nullo tumulata fletu:
stat domo capta cupidus superstes imminens leti spoliis et ipsum computat ignem.

duret in longum generosus infans, perque non multis iter expeditum crescat in mores patrios avumque provoct actis!

tu tuos parvo memorabris enses, quos ad Eoum tuleris Orontem signa frenatae moderatus alae Castore dextro;

ille ut invicti rapidum secutus Caesaris fulmen refugis amaram Sarmatis legem dederit, sub uno vivere caelo.

sed tuas artes puer ante discat, omne quis mundi senium remensus orsa Sallusti brevis et Timavi reddis alunnum.

1 propinquum funus amico = and edd.; propinquo . . . amici M: propinquo . . . amice Krohn, Klotz.
2 tuleris Avantius: tuleras M.
Maximus comes to us! Childlessness a must be shunned by every effort; the heir with hostile vows presses hard upon it, asking—ah! for shame!—that his best friend soon may die. Childlessness wins no tears at the grave; in the captured house stands the greedy survivor, eager for the spoils of death, and counts the cost of the very pyre. Long live the high-born babe, and, by a path that few may tread, may he grow into his father's virtues, and rival his grandsire by his deeds! Thou shalt tell thy child how thou didst lead thy swordsmen to Eastern Orontes, commanding 'neath Castor's favour b the banners of thy well-curbed squadrons. He shall relate how he followed the swift-flashing brand of invincible Caesar, and imposed a hard law on the fugitive Sarmatians, c to live under one sky. d But first let the lad learn thy skill, whereby retracing all the old age of the world thou dost render again the work of brief Sallust e and the foster-son of Timavus.

a The poet himself was childless, but adopted a slave boy; the death of this boy was deeply felt by him (see v. 3).
b As a cavalry leader he would be under the protection of Castor and Pollux, patrons of the Roman knights.
c Domitian's campaign against the Sarmatians, 92-93.
d i.e., to cease to be nomads.
e Apparently a sort of handbook of world-history, with an epitome of Sallust and Livy.
VIII. GRATULATIO AD IULIUM MENEKRATEN

Pande fores superum vittataque templo Sabaeis nubibus et pecudum fibris spirantibus imple, Parthenope; clari genus ecce Menecratis auget tertia iam soboles. proeerum tibi nobile vulgus crescit et insani solatur danma Vesaevi. nec solum festas secreta Neapolis aras ambiat: et socii portus dilectaque initi terra Dicarehceo nec non plaga cara madenti Surrentina deo sertis altaria eingat, materni qua litus avi, quem turba nepotum circuit et similes contendit reddere vultus. gaudeat et Libyca praesignis avunculus hasta, quaeque sibi genitos putat attollitque benigno Polla sinu. macte, o iuvenis, qui tanta merenti lumina das patriae. dulei tremit ecce tumultu tot dominis clamata domus. procul atra recedat Invidia atque alio liventia pectora flectat: his senium longaeque decus virtutis et alba Atropos et patrius laurus promissit Apollo. ergo quod Ausoniae pater augustissimus urbis ius tibi tergeminae dedera laetabile prolis, omen erat. venit totiens Lucina piumque

---

a The eruption of Vesuvius took place in 79 A.D.

b i.e., probably in some campaign against African tribes.

c The "ius trium liberorum," on this occasion as on others (see Mart. iii. 95; Plin. Ep. x. 2) awarded purely as a compliment.
This, like the last piece, is a Genethliacon, or birthday poem; Statius congratulates his friend on the birth of his third child. Menecrates was the son-in-law of Pollius Felix.

Fling wide the thresholds of the gods, Parthenope, and fill the chaplet-hung shrines with clouds of Sheba’s incense and the breathing entrails of victims! lo! by yet a third offspring is the house of illustrious Menecrates increased. Thy noble host of princesses grows and atones the loss that mad Vesuvius<sup>a</sup> caused thee. Nor let Naples in lonely isolation throng her festal altars; let her fellow-haven and the land that gentle Dicarcheus loved and the Surrentine tract dear to the tipsy god enwreath their shrines with garlands,—that shore where dwells the babe’s maternal grandsire, with his crowd of grandchildren around him, rivalling each other in their likeness to him. Let the uncle too, famed for his Libyan spear<sup>b</sup>, rejoice, and Polla, who counts them her own sons as she raises them to her loving bosom. A blessing on thee, O youth, who givest in due reward to thy country such bright progeny. Lo! the house rocks with delightful tumult, ringing with the cries of so many masters. Avaunt, black Envy, turn elsewhere thy livid breasts! To these hath white-robed Atropos promised old age and the glory of enduring worth, and their native Apollo vouchsafed the bays of poesy. Therefore was it an omen that the most august sire of the Ausonian City had given thee the glad privilege of triple offspring. Thrice has Lucina come, and again and yet again visited thy dutiful... intravit repetita larem. sic fertilis, oro, stet domus et donis numquam mutata sacratis. nacte, quod et proles tibi saepius aueta virili robore. sed iuveni laetanda et\textsuperscript{1} virgo parenti —aptior his virtus, citius dubit illa nepotes—, qualis maternis Helene iam digna palaestris inter Amyclaeos reptabat candida fratres; vel qualis caeli facies, ubi nocte serena admovere iubari mediae duo sidera lunae.

Sed queror haud faciles, iuvenum rarissime, questus irascorque etiam, quantum irascentur amantes. tantane me decuit vulgari gaudia fama noscere? cumque tibi vagiret tertius infans, protinus ingenti non venit nuntia cursu littera, quae festos cumulare altaribus ignes et redimire chelyn postesque ornare iuberet Albanoque cadum sordentem promere fumo et cantu signare diem, sed tardus inersque nunc demum mea vota cano? tua culpa tuusque hie pudor. uterius sed enim producere questus non licet; en hilaris circumstat turba tuorum defensatque patrem. quem non hoe agmine vincas?

Di patrii, quos auguriis super aequora magnis litus ad Ausonium devexit Abantia classis, tu, duetor populi longe migrantis, Apollo, enius adhuc voluerem laeva cervice sedentem respiciens blandae felix Eumelis adorat, \textsuperscript{1} laetanda et Vollmer: letam dat M, laetandast Baehrens.

\textsuperscript{a} i.e., for the wrestling-bouts in Sparta, the home of Leda, in which the Spartan girls took part. Statius probably has Propertius iii. 14 in mind.

\textsuperscript{b} According to Homer the Abantes inhabited Euboea.

\textsuperscript{c} i.e., Parthenope, daughter of Eumelus (who was perhaps the warrior at Troy so-called, the son of Admetus); she was...
home. Long live that house, I pray, in fruitfulness and never robbed of its hallowed gifts! A blessing on thee also, that thy issue was increased more often by the strength of males, yet the girl too must needs delight her youthful father—for them is prowess more fitting, while she will the sooner bear him grandsons;—so fair a child was Helen, as she walked between her Amyclaean brethren, yet ripe already for her mother's wrestling-bouts; so fair is the face of heaven, when on a tranquil night two radiant stars draw near to the moon that shines between them.

But I have a complaint, O rarest of youths, and no gentle one, ay, angry am I even, so far as love admits of anger. Was it right that common report should tell me of such joys? and when thy third infant was wailing, did no letter straightway haste full speed to bid me heap the altar with festal flames and entwine my lyre and wreathe my portals, and bring out a eask sooted with Alban smoke and mark the day with song, but only now, a tardy laggard, do I eelebrate my vows? Thine is the fault, thine is the shame of it! But I cannot further prolong my plaint; lo! in a merry crowd thy children surround thee, and defend their sire. Whom wouldst thou not conquer with such a troop?

Gods of our land, whom with mighty omens the Abantian fleet conveyed o'er the sea to the Ausonian shore, and thou, Apollo, guide of thy far-wandering folk, whose bird seated on thy left shoulder prosperous Eumelis lovingly beholds and worships, and thou, guided to Italy by a dove sent by Apollo, cf. iii. 5. 80. The reference is to the founding of Cumae by emigrants from Chalcis in Euboea, who probably brought with them the deities mentioned here, Apollo, Ceres, Castor and Pollux.
tuque, Actae{\textsuperscript{1}} Ceres, cursu cui semper anhelo votivam taciti quassamus lampada mystae, et vos, Tyndaridae, quos non horrenda Lyeurgi Taygeta umbrosaeque magis coluere Therapnae: hos cum plebe sua, patrii{\textsuperscript{2}} servate penates. sint, qui fessam aevo crebrisque laboribus urbem voce opibusque iuvent viridique in nomine servent. his placidos genitor mores largumque nitorem monstrat avus, pulchrae studium virtutis uterque. quippe et opes et origo sinunt hanc\textsuperscript{3} lampade prima patricias intrare fores, hos pube sub ipsa, 5 si modo prona bonis invicti Caesaris adsint numina, Romulei limen pulsare senatus.

IX. HENDECASYLLABI IOCOSI AD PLOTIUM GRYPUM

Est sane iocus iste, quod libellum misisti mihi, Grype, pro libello. urbanum tamen hoc potest videri, si post hoc aliquid mihi remittas; nam si ludere, Grype, perseveras, non ludis. licet, ecce, computemus! noster purpureus novusque charta et binis decoratus umbilicis,

\footnotesize
\begin{itemize}
  \item Actae\textsuperscript{1} Pol.: acea \textit{M}.
  \item patrii \textit{M}: patriae \textit{Gronovius}.
  \item hanc Gevart: hac \textit{M}.
\end{itemize}

\footnotesize
\textsuperscript{a} There was a worship of Demeter at Naples, and mysteries no doubt like those of Eleusis.
\textsuperscript{b} One at each end of the stick on which the paper was rolled.

260
Attic Ceres, for whom in breathless dance we thy mute votaries cease not to wave the mystic torch, and you, ye Tyndarids, to whom not grim Taygetus, Lycurgus' mount, nor shady Therapnae gives truer worship: gods of our country, preserve this home with all its souls! May there be those who by speech or wealth shall succour their city that age and many toils have wearied, and keep her as green and youthful as her name! From their father may they learn gentle ways, and from their grandsire splendour that yet is bountiful, and from both the desire of glorious virtue. Assuredly their riches and their birth suffer the maid to enter patrician doors with the first marriage-torches, and the sons, so soon as manhood comes—if only the godhead of invincible Caesar favour the deserving—to tread the threshold of the Senate-house of Romulus.

IX. LINES WRITTEN IN JEST TO PLOTIUS GRYPUS

The subject suggests Catullus, xiv. 12. Statius rebukes Plotius Grypus for giving him an unworthy present in return for a fine one. The hendecasyllable was a favourite metre for comic or gibing verse.

Yours was indeed a jest, Grypus, to send me a book in return for a book! And yet even that may seem graceful, if after it you send me something worth having; for if, Grypus, you keep on with such jests, they are jests no longer. Look, we can reckon the account. Mine, painted purple, its paper new, adorned with two knobs, cost me, besides my practet me mihi constitit decussis\(^1\):
tu rosum tineis situque putrem, \(^10\)
quales aut Libyeis madent olivis aut tus Niliacum piperve servant
aut Byzantiacos colunt\(^2\) lacertos, nec saltem tua dicta continentem,
quae trino iuvenis foro tonabas,
at centum prope iudices, priusquam te Germanicus arbitrum sequenti annonae dedit omniumque late praefecit stationibus viarum, sest Bruti senis oscitationes de capsam miserii libellionis emptum plus minus asse Gaiano, donas. usque adeone defuerunt ciae pillea suta de lacernis vel mantelica luridaeve mappaie, chartae, Thebaicaeve Caricaeae?
nusquam turbine conditus ruenti prunorum globus atque cottanorum?
non enlychnia sicca, non replictae bulborum tunicae? nec ova tantum \(^{25}\)

\(^{1}\) decussus \(M\): decussi \textit{Turnebus}.
\(^{2}\) colunt \(M\): olent \textit{Heinsius}.

\(^{a}\) Roman, Julian, and Augustan. Courts of law were often situated in the buildings of the "fora."

\(^{b}\) See iv. 4. 43 n. It usually sat in the Basilica Julia, in the Forum Romanum.

\(^{c}\) It is a question whether these are two posts or one: if the former, they would be the prefectship of the corn-supply, and supervision of the relay-stations on the great highways; if the latter, it has been suggested that the post was one of organizing supplies for Domitian’s last Dacian campaign, or, as Hirschfeld thinks, of commissariat officer

262
own trouble, well, certainly a ten-as piece! Yours, moth-eaten and mouldering, like those that are soaked by Libyan olives, or wrap up incense or pepper from the Nile, or cultivate the Byzantine tunny; not containing even your own youthful speeches that you thundered at the three Courts\(^a\) or the Hundred Judges,\(^b\) before Germanicus placed the obedient corn-supply under your control, or put you in charge of the posts on all the roads,\(^c\) but the mumblings of ancient Brutus\(^d\) out of a wretched book-peddler's case, that cost you, roughly shall we say, an as of Gaius\(^e\)—that was your present! Were there then no more felt caps stitched together from rags of tunics, no towels or faded napkins? no writing-paper, or Theban dates, or Carian figs? nowhere a bunch of plums or Syrian figs packed in a collapsible case\(^f\)? no dry wicks or cast-off jackets of onions?

for Domitian when on the march ("sequenti" might support this).

\(^a\) The friend of Cicero and murderer of Caesar. "senis," because he dates so long back.

\(^b\) The Emperor Gaius had debased the coinage.

\(^c\) Apparently a cone-shaped case ("turbo" is commonly used of objects so shaped, \(e.g.\) a top); "\(m\)ent\(i\)" suggests that the contents could easily be upset into the purchaser's bag; at any rate it would be a purely temporary receptacle, which is the point here; a paper bag, or paper screw would be the modern equivalent. Vollmer compares Mart. xiii. 25 (of a packet of pine-cones), "poma sumus Cybeles: proeul hinc discede viator, ne eadat in miserum nostra ruina caput." The "torta meta" in which "cottana" were packed, Mart. xiii. 28, may also be compared. "Cottana" were smaller than ordinary figs; as Mart. says, "si maiora forent cottana, fiens erat." The reader may also be referred to Martial's 13th book, in which a large number of Xenia, or presents for the Saturnalia, are described, each in a couplet; \(e.g.\) incense (4), figs (23), cheeses (30-33), sausage (35), etc.
nee lenes\(^1\) haliae nee asperum far\?
nusquam Cinyphiis vagata eampis curvarum domus uda coelarum\?
non lardum grave debilisve perna\?
non lucanica, non graves falisei, 35 non sal oxyporumve caseusve, aut panes viridantis aphronitri vel passum psithiis suis recoetum, dulci defruta vel lutosa caeno\?
quantum nee dare eereos olentes, cultellum\(^2\) tenuesve eodicillos\?
ollares, rogo, non licebat uvas, Cumano patinas in orbe tortas aut unam dare synthesin—quid horres\?— alborum calicum atque caccaborum\? 40 sed certa velut aequis in statera, il mutas, sed idem mihi reprendis.
quid si, cum bene mane semierudus inlatam\(^3\) tibi dixero salutem, et tu me vicibus domi salutes\?
aut, cum me dape iuveris opima, exspectes similes et ipse eenas\? 50
irascor tibi, Grype. sed valebis;
tantum ne mihi, quo soles lepore,
et nunc hendeeasyllabos remittas.

\(^1\) lenes \textit{Heinsius} : leves \textit{M}.
\(^2\) cultellum \textit{S} : cutellum \textit{M} : scutellum \textit{Slater}.
\(^3\) inlatam \textit{M} : inlotam \textit{Scriverius}.

264
no eggs even, or fine flour, or coarse spelt? not the slimy shell of a curving snail that had strayed far on the Cinyphian plains?\(^a\) no rancid fat or gristly ham? no sausage, no tough haggis? no salt, no pickle, no cheese? or cakes of green saltpetre? or raisin-wine boiled grapes and all? or must made muddy by sweet lees? How unkind, not to give me smelly candles, or a knife, or a tiny notebook!
Pray, could you not have sent some tinned grapes, or some plates turned on the wheel at Cumae?\(^b\) or even one set\(^c\)—why do you start?—of white cups and pots? No, like a fair dealer with a correct scale, you dock nothing, but give me exactly equal weight.
But look! I get up betimes, feeling rather queasy, and bring you my morning greeting: are you to return it at my house? you have regaled me with a luxurious feast: do you expect a similar repast yourself? I am angry with you, Grypus! However, farewell! only do not with your usual wit send me back gibing verses by return of post!

\(^a\) i.e., African snails, which were often shell-less.
\(^b\) The cheapest kind of pottery was that of Cumae.
\(^c\) The point of this is that “synthesis” can also mean a set of wearing-apparel, usually of a costly kind, as in Mart.
ii. 46. 4.
Omnibus affectibus prosequenda sunt bona exempla, cum publice prosint. Pietas, quam Priscillae tuae praestas, et morum tuorum pars et nulli non conciliare te, praecipue marito, potest. Uxorem enim vivam amare voluptas est, defunctam religio. Ego tamen huic operi non ut unus e turba nec tantum quasi officiosus adsilui. Amavit enim uxorem meam Priscilla et amando fecit mihi illam probatiorem; post hoc ingratus sum, si lacrimas tuas transeo. Praeterea latus omne divinae domus semper demereri pro mea mediocritate conitor. Nam qui bona fide deos colit, amat et sacerdotes. Sed quamvis propriem usum\(^1\) amicitiae tuae iampridem cuperem, mallem tamen nondum invenisse materiam.

\(^{1}\) usum Pol.; visum M.

\(^{a}\) "latus" here means those who are "a latere principis," see note on iii. 3. 65, and cf. v. 1. 187, and for different uses v. 1. 80, iii. 3. 120.

\(^{b}\) The reference is, of course, to the Imperial House.

\(^{c}\) He seems to mean that the death of Priscilla had drawn Abascantus and himself closer together. Vollmer, however,
BOOK V

Statius to his Friend Abascantus: Greeting!

Good examples should be whole-heartedly honoured, since they are publicly beneficial. The devotion which you show to your Priscilla is a true part of your character, and must needs win you the affection of all, especially of a husband. For to love a wife is a joy, while she is alive, and a religion, when she is departed. It was not, however, as a mere stranger that I undertook this task, nor only with the readiness of one bound by ties of duty. For Priscilla loved my wife, and by that love made her more worthy in my eyes; after that it were ingratitude in me to take no notice of your grief. Further, I always strive, insignificant as I am, to deserve well of all adherents of the Sacred Palace. For he who in good faith worships the gods, loves their priests also. But although I had long desired a more intimate experience of your friendship, yet I would rather the occasion had not come so soon.

understands by the phrase, “a more intimate use of your friendship,” an opportunity of dedicating a poem to one in so high a position.
STATIUS

I. EPICEDION IN PRISCILLAM

Si manus aut similis mihi fingere ceras aut ebur impressis aurumve animare figuris, hinc. Priscilla, tuo solacia grata marito conciperem. namque egregia pietate meretur, ut vel Apelleo vultus signata colore, Phidiaca vel nata manu reddare dolenti.
sic auferre regis umbram conatur et ingens certamen cum Morte gerit curaque fatigat artificem inque omni te quaerit amare metallo.
semd mortalis honos, agilis quem dextra laborat.
nos tibi. laudati iuvenis rarissima coniunx.
longa nec obscurum finem latura perenni temptamus dare iusta lyra, modo dexter Apollo quique venit iuncto mihi semper Apolline Caesar annuat : haud alio melius condere sepolcro.

Sera quidem tanto struitur medicina dolori, altera cum voluceris Phoebi rota torqueat annum ;
semd cum plaga recens et adhuc in vulnere primo nigra\(^1\) domus, miseram quis tunc\(^2\) accessus ad aurem coniugis orbati ? tunc flere et scindere vestes et famulos lassare greges et vincere planetus Fataque et iniustos rabidis pulsare querelis caelicolas solamen erat. licet ipse levandos

\(^1\) nigra \(M:\) aegra Heinsius.
\(^2\) miseram quis tunc Phillimore : quae\(t\) miseramque
\(M:\) questu miseram qui Macnaghten : quis tum miserandam Adrian.

\(^a\) The allusion is to the struggle of Hercules with Death for Alcestis: here the husband strives to rescue his wife from death by making a living image of her. Priscilla’s body was not burnt, but embalmed, and placed in a shrine, such as Cicero wished to build for his daughter Tullia (Ad Att.
xii. 19). Poppaea, too, was embalmed (Tac. Ann. xvi. 6).

268
I. A POEM OF CONSOLATION ON THE DEATH OF PRISCILLA

Priscilla was the wife of Abascantus, who held the important post of Secretary of State to Domitian. This epicedion follows the usual lines of such poems, see Introd. to ii. 1.

Had I but skill of hand to mould likenesses in wax or to leave a living impress upon gold or ivory, thence would I imagine, Priscilla, a grateful solace for thy husband. For his conspicuous devotion merits that thou thyself, whether painted by Apelles' brush or given life by Phidian art, shouldst be brought back to calm his grief; so valiantly strives he to rescue thy ghost from the pyre, and wages a mighty struggle with Death, and exhausts the cunning of the craftsmen, and in every metal would fain show his love of thee. But mortal is the honour that toil of clever hands can pay: 'tis the poet's endeavour to bring thee, peerless consort of a youth renowned, a tribute that will endure nor suffer oblivion at the last, the due offering of eternal song, if only Apollo be propitious, and Caesar, who ever in Apollo's company aids me, gives assent; no other nobler sepulchre wilt thou find.

Late indeed is the balm composed for so great a sorrow, when yet once more the wheels of Phoebus are bringing round the year; but when the stroke is recent and the house still sable-clad in the first shock of woe, what access then to the poor husband in his loss? Then were it solace enough to weep and tear the raiment, to fatigue troops of slaves and outdo their lamentations, to assail the Fates and an unjust heaven with wild and frenzied cries. Though ad gemitus silvis comitatus et amnibus Orpheus adforet atque omnis pariter materterae vatem, 25 omnis Apollineus tegeret Bacchique sacerdos:
nonis cantus, nil fila dei pallentis Averni Eumenidumque audita comis mulcere valerent:
tantus in attonito regnabat pectore luctus!
nunc etiam ad planetus refugit iam plana cicatrix, 30 dum eanimus, gravibusque oculis uxorius instat
imber. habentne pios etiamnum haec lumina fletus?
mira fides! citius genetrix Sipyleia fertur1 exhausisse genas, citius Tithonida maesti deficient rores aut exsatiata fatisect mater Achilleis hiemes adfrangere bustis.
macte animi! notat ista deus, qui flectit habenas orbis et humanos proprio love digerit actus, maerentemque videt; lectique arcana ministri!
hinc etiam documenta capit, quod diligis umbram 40 et colis exsequias. hic est castissimus ardor, hic amor a domino meritus censore probari.

Nec mirum, si vos collato pectore mixtos iunxit inabrupta Concordia longa catena.
illa quidem nuptumque prior taedasque marito 45
passa alio, sed te eeu virginitate iugatum visceribus totis animaque amplexa fovebat;
qualiter aequaevco sociatam palmite vitem ulmus amat miscetque nemus ditemque precatur autumnnum et caris gaudet redimita racemis. 50

1 Sipyleia fertur s: si pelea fertur M: Sipylea feret Heinsius.

a Niobe, Aurora (for her son Memnon) and Thetis.
b The reference no doubt is to Domitian’s activities as Censor Morum.

270
Orpheus himself with woods and streams for company came to assuage thy groans, though all his mother's sisters and every priest of Baechus and Apollo sustained the minstrel, yet nought would avail to give relief, not music, not those strings whereto the gods of pale Avernus and the Furies' locks paid heed: such anguish held sway in his distracted heart. Even now does the scar though smooth yet wince at my lament, and the rain of a husband's love forces itself into those burdened eyes. E'en yet do those orbs hold pious drops? O marvellous truth! Sooner, as they say, does the Sipylean dame drain dry her tears, or the dews of sorrow fail Tithonia, or Achilles' mother grow weary and sated of breaking her wild waves against his tomb.\(^a\) Bless thy passionate soul! the god who holds the reins of earth, he who nearer than Jove directs the doings of mankind—he marks thee and beholds thy grief; and hence also doth he take secret knowledge of his chosen minister, because thou lovest her shade and honourest her in death. Here is a zeal that is pure indeed, a passion that merits the praise of thy keen-searching lord.\(^b\)

Yet 'tis no wonder, if long-enduring Harmony bound you by an unbroken chain in the close union of heart with heart. She indeed had known a former husband and the torches of earlier wedlock, yet did she embrace and cherish thee with all her soul and inmost being, as though she were a virgin bride; even so does the elm love the clinging tendrils of the coeval vine, and mingles with its foliage and prays that autumn may bring it richness and rejoices in its dear entwining clusters. Women who lack the laudantur proavis seu pulchrae munere formae, quae morum caruere bonis, falsoque potentes laudis egent verae: tibi quamquam et origo niteret et felix species multumque optanda maritis, ex te maior honos, unum novisse cubile, unum secretis agitare sub ossibus ignem. illum nec Phrygius vitiasset raptor amorem Dulichiive procì nec qui fraternus adulter casta Myeenaec conabia polluit auro. si Babylonos opes, Lydae si pondera gazaee Indorumque daces Serunque Arabumque potentes divitias, mallet eum paupertate pudiea intemerata mori vitamque reprendere famae, nee frons triste rigens nimiusque in moribus horror, sed simplex hilarisque fides et mixta pudori gratia. quod si aneeps metus ad maiora vocasset, illa vel armiferas pro coniuge laeta catervas fulmineosque ignes mediique pericula ponti exeperet. melius, quod non adversa probarunt, quae tibi aura tori. quantus pro coniuge pallor! sed meliore via dextros tua vota marito promenuere deos. dum nocte dieque fatigas numina, dum cunctis supplex adverteris aris et mitem genium domini praesentis adoras. audita es, venitque gradu Fortuna benigno. vidit quippe pii iuuenis navamque quietem intactamque fidem succinctaque pectora curis et vigiles sensus et digna evolvere tantas

1 proavis seu: proavi seu M (Imhof keeps this and reads munera); proavis aut Heinsius.
2 falsque M: falsaeque Heinsius.

---

* "potentes," occasionally used in Statius = "great," "important," cf. i. 61, "divitas p." = "lordly wealth," and v. 2. 29.
graces of the soul are praised for ancestry or gift of loveliness; and falsely great they lack a true renown; but though a brilliant lineage was thine, and the blessing of a beauty that husbands would prize, yet thy own boast is prouder, that thou knewest but one bed, didst feed but one passion in thy secret heart. That love no Phrygian ravisher would have outraged, no Dulichian suitors, nor that adulterer who polluted his brother’s innocent spouse with Mycenaean gold. Ay, did you offer the riches of Babylon or weight of Lydian treasure or the lordly wealth of Ind or Araby or China, she had preferred to die poor in untainted chastity, and given her life to save her honour. Yet was there no forbidding sternness in her look, nor o’ermuch austerity in her ways, but a gay and simple loyalty, and modesty blended with charm. Yet if some dread crisis had summoned her to harder tasks, gladly would she have borne on her lord’s behalf the assault of armed bands or the lightning’s stroke or the perils of mid-ocean. Happier was thy fate, that adversity ne’er proved how true thy devotion, how great thy anxiety for thy spouse. Ay, happier was thy path, and thy prayers merited heaven’s favour for thy husband, while day and night thou didst weary the gods, and lie prostrate at every altar and adore the present godhead of our gentle lord. Thy prayers were heard, and Fortune came with favouring step. For he beheld the quiet industry, the unsullied devotion of a loyal youth, whose mind was busy with schemes, whose alert intelligence and sober judgement were

\[b\] Paris, the wooers of Penelope, Thyestes who seduced Aërope the wife of Atreus.
sobria corda vices, vidit, qui cuncta suorum novit et inspektis ambit latus omne ministris. nee mirum: videt ille ortus obitusque, quid auster, quid boreas hibernus agat, ferrique togaeque eonsilia atque ipsam mentem probat. ille subactis molem immensam umeris et vix tractabile pondus imposuit—nee enim numerosior altera sacra eura domo—, magnum late dimittere in orbem Romulei mandata ducis viresque modosque imperii tractare manu: quae laurus ab arcto, quid vagus Euphrates, quid ripa binominis Histri, quid Rheni vexilla ferant, quantum ultimus orbis eesserit et refugo circumference gurgite Thyle—omnia nam lactas pila attollentia frondes, nullaque famosa signatur lancea penna—praeterea, fidos dominus si dividat enses, pandere quis eentum valeat frenare, maniplos inter missus eques quis praeeepisse cohorti, quem deceat elari praestantior ordo tribuni, quisnam frenigerae signum dare dignior alae; mille etiam praenosse vices, an merserit agros

1 auster: arctos M.
2 togaeque Dom.: rotagae M.
3 subactis Arantius: iubatis M: probatis Krohn.
4 pondus Arantius: tempus M. Phillimore suspects damage to archetype at the ends of these four lines.
5 maniplos intermissus eques M: maniplis intermixtus equos Salmasius: maniplo intermissus eques Madvig.

1a "A laurel fastened to the dispatch was the sign of news of victory, but a feather—the sign of haste—marked the bearer of disastrous news. . . . The greatness and sureness of the Imperial organization is exemplified in the fact that the news of defeat or danger was urgent and hurried, while that of victory was not." A. M. Ramsay, Journal of Roman Studies, xv. Pt. 1, p. 66. He also quotes Juv. iv. 147-9, where the point is the same.
fitted to unravel the skein of circumstance—he saw, who knows the hearts of all his subjects, and with well-tried servants guards safely every quarter. Nor is that wonderful: he scans the East and the West, he knows what the South and what the wintry North is doing, and puts sword and gown to the proof, ay, the very heart itself. He placed upon those bowed shoulders a mighty burden, a weight scarce tolerable—no duties more manifold does the Sacred Palace know—to send far and wide into the great world the commands of the Roman Prince, to handle all the powers and modes of empire; to learn what laurelled message comes from the North, what news from wandering Euphrates or from the bank of twy-named Ister or from the standards of the Rhine, how much we have won of the world’s end or of Thule round which the tidal waters roar—for every spear raises joyous leaves on high, and no lance is marked with the feather of ill-report; moreover, should the Master distribute loyal swords, to make known who suffices to control a century, a knight sent among the companies of foot, who to command a cohort, whom the more excellent rank of illustrious tribune befits, who is suited rather to give orders to a cavalry troop; again, to anticipate a thousand chances, whether Nile has drenched his fields, whether Libya has been

— These, according to Madvig, Opusc. i. 39, are the four military appointments open to knights in ascending order: i. Primipilus, or Senior Centurion ("maniplos inter missus eques," shows that something more than the ordinary centurionship is intended); ii. Praefectus cohortis; iii. Tribunus legionis; iv. Praefectus equitum. The higher appointments were made "per epistolam sacram Imperatoris," see Veget. ii. 7. Cf. v. 12. 65 n.
Nilus, an imbriferō Libye sudaverit austro; cunctaeque sī numerem, non plura interprete virga nuntiat ex celsis ales Tegeaticus astra quaeque cadit liquidas Iunonia virgo per auras et picturato pluvium ligat aera gyro quaeque tuas laurus volueri, Germanice, cursu Fama vehit praegressa diem tardumque sub astra Arcada et in medio linquit Thaumantida caelo.

Qualem te superi, Priscilla, hominesque benigno aspexere die, cum primum ingentibus actis admotus coniunx! vicisti gaudia paene ipsius, effuso dum pectore prona sacratos ante pedes avide domini tam magna merentis volveris. Aonio non sic in vertice gaudet, quam pater arcani præfecit hiatibus antri Delius, aut primi cui ius venerabile thyrsi Bacchus et attonitae tribuit vexilla catervae. nec tamen hine mutata quies probitasve secundis intumuit: tenor idem animo moresque modesti fortuna crescente manent. fovet anxia curas coniugis hortaturque simul flectitque labores.

ipsa dapes modicas et sobria poca tradit, exemplumque ad erile monet; velut Apula coniunx agricolae parci vel sole infecta Sabina, quae videt emeriti iam prospectantibus astra tempus adesse viri, propere mensasque torosque instruit exspectatque sonum redeuntis aratri. parva loquor. tecum gelidas comes illa per aretos Sarmaticasque hiemes Histrumque et pallida Rheni

1 paene Burmann: cene M, certe Markland.

a Mercury and Iris, as in ll. 102-3.
b The Pythian priestess and the leader of a Bacchic revel.
moistened by Southern rains; were I to count all his labours, no more numerous are the messages that the winged Tegean with revealing wand bears from the stars on high, or Juno’s maid, who glides down through the liquid air and binds her pictured arc about the rainy sky, or Fame, who brings thy laurels, O Germanicus, in her swift flight outstripping the day, and leaves the slow Arcadian beneath the stars and Thaumantia in mid-heaven.a

How joyful, Priscilla, wert thou seen of gods and men on that auspicious day when first thy spouse was promoted to his great career! Almost did thy happiness surpass his own, while thou didst eagerly fling thyself prostrate before the sacred feet of thy lord for his great favour, and pour out all thy heart. Not such joy doth she know upon the Aonian mount whom the Delian sire hath put in charge of the openings of the mystic cave, or she to whom Bacchus hath awarded the dread privilege of the foremost wand, and to bear the banner of the frenzied rout.b Yet was her tranquillity not changed, nor her goodness puffed up by prosperity; her mind keeps the same course, and her modesty abides, though her fortunes rise. Anxiously she tends her husband’s cares, and cheers and alleviates his toils. Herself she serves his modest board and sober cups, and admonishes him by the example of his chief; just as the Apulian wife of some thrifty husbandman, or sun-burnt Sabine dame, who sees by the peeping stars that her lord will soon be come, his labours o’er, briskly sets the tables and the couches, and listens for the returning plough. I speak of trivial things: nay, at thy side she had willingly braved the gelid North and Sarmatian snows and Ister and the pale frigora, tecum omnes animo durata per aestus et, si castra darent, vellet gestare pharetras, vellet Amazonia latus intercludere pelta;
dum te pulverea bellorum nube\(^1\) videret Caesarei prope fulmen equi divinaque tela vibrantem et magnae sparsum sudoribus hastae.

Hactenus alma chelys. tempus nunc ponere frondes,
Phoebe, tuas maestaque comam damnare cuppresso.
quisnam impacata consanguinitate ligavit Fortunam Invidiamque deus? quis iussit iniquas aeternum bellare deas? nullamne notabit illa domum, torvo quam non haec lumine figat protinus et saeva proturbet gaudia dextra?
florebant hilara inconcussique penates:
nil maestum. quid enim, quamvis infida levisque, Caesare tam dextro posset Fortuna timeri?
invenere viam liventia Fata, piumque intravit vis saeva larem. sic plena maligno adflantur vineta noto, sic alta senescit imbre seges nimio, rapidae sic obvia puppi invidet et velis adnubilat aura secundis.
carpitur eximum Fato Priscilla decorem;
qualiter alta comam silvarum gloria pinus seu Iovis igne malo seu iam radice soluta deficit et nulli spoliata remurmurat aurae.
quid probitas aut casta fides, quid numina prosunt culta deum? furvae miseram circum undique leti vallavere plagae, tenduntur dura sororum licia et exacti superest pars ultima fili.

\(^1\) pulverea b. nube \(M\) : pulverum \textit{Baehrens}: in nube \textit{edd}.
frosts of Rhine, at thy side steeled her courage throughout summer heats and gladly borne the quiver, did the camp permit, and gladly shielded her body with an Amazonian targe—so but she might see thee in the dust-clouds of battle hard by the Emperor’s thundering steed, brandishing godlike shafts and bedewed with the sweat of his great spear.

So far my lyre has been propitious; but now it is time to doff thy bays, O Phoebus, and doom my tresses to sad cypress-leaves. What god joined Fortune and Envy in truceless kinship? who bade the cruel goddesses engage in unending war? Will the one set her mark upon no house, but the other must straightway fix it with her grim glance, and with savage hand make havoc of its gladness? Happy and prosperous was this abode, no shock assailed it, no thought of sorrow; what cause was there to have fear of Fortune, treacherous and fickle though she be, while Caesar was favourable? yet the jealous Fates found a way, and barbarous violence entered that blameless home. So do the laden vineyards feel the deadly sirocco’s blast, so rots the high corn with too much rain, so does the air envy the rapid craft it meets, and gathers storm-clouds about its prosperous sails. Fate plucks away the peerless beauty of Priscilla: just as the lofty pine, the glory of the woodland, is wasted of its foliage, be it by fell fire of Jove or that its roots are loosened, and so despoiled answers no more the whispering breeze. What avails goodness, or chaste loyalty, or worship paid to heaven? The dark snares of death encompassed around the wretched woman, the Sisters’ ruthless threads are tightened, and there abides but the last portion of the exhausted nil famuli coetus, nil ars operosa medentum auxiliata malis; comites tamen undique ficio spem simulant vultu, flentem notat illa maritum. ille modo infernae nequiquam flumina Lethes incorrupta rogat, nunc anxius omnibus aris inlaerimat signatque fores et pectore terget limina; nunc magni vocat exorabile numen Caesaris. heu durus fati tenor! estne quod illi non liceat? quantae poterant mortalibus annis accessisse morae. si tu, pater, omne teneres arbitrium? caeco gemeret Mors clusa barathro longius et vacuae posuissent stamina Parcae.

Iamque cadunt vultus oculisque novissimus error obtusaeque aures, nisi cum vox sola mariti noscitur; illum unum media de morte reversa mens videt, illum aegris circumdat fortiter ulnis immotae obversa genas, nec sole supremo lumina, sed dulci mavult satiare marito. tum sic unanimum moriens solatur amantem:

"pars animae victura meae, cui linquere possim o utinam, quos dura mihi rapit Atropos, annos: parce, precor, laerimis, saevo ne concute planetu pectora. nec crueia fugientem coniugis umbras. linquo equidem thalamos, salvo tamen ordine mortis, quod prior: exegi longa potiora senecta tempora: vidi omni pridem te flore nitentem, vidi altae propius propiusque accedere dextrae. non in te fatis, non iam caelestibus ullis

1 mortis $\frac{5}{7}$: mostis $M$: mestos Pol. (marg. note in Ex. Cors.): noctis Ed. Prin.: maestos Phillimore.

$^a$ i.e., of the Emperor.
span. No succour could crowds of slaves bring her in her distress, nor the physicians' toilful art; yet while friends on every side feign looks of hopefulness, she marks her husband weeping. He now implores in vain Lethe's inexorable stream, now sheds anxious tears at every shrine and leaves his imprint at the gates and flings himself down upon the threshold, now calls upon Caesar's merciful deity. Alas! the cruel course of Fate! is there then aught that Caesar may not do? What tarrying could there have come to mortal lives, if thou, O Sire, hadst been all-powerful! far away would Death be groaning, imprisoned in the unseeing pit, and the idle Fates would have laid their spinning down.

And now her face falls, her eyes take their last wavering glances, and the hearing of the ears is dulled, save when only she recognizes her husband's voice; him only does her mind returning from the midst of death perceive. him with faint armis does she bravely grasp, turning to him her stiffened cheeks, nor wishes to sate her eyes with the last glimpse of light, but only with her dear spouse. Then dying she thus consoles the loving heart that was one with hers: "O thou, my soul's still-surviving half, to whom I would fain leave the years that cruel Atropos takes from me, spare thy tears, I pray, beat not thy breast with savage lament, nor vex thy consort's fleeing spirit. I leave, 'tis true, a marriage-bower, yet in the due order of dying, because I die the first; better the life I have lived than a long old age; I have seen thee in the full splendour of thy fame, I have seen thee draw nearer and more near to the right hand on high." No fate, no god has power over thee now; I take with me arbitrium: mecum ista fero. tu limite coepto tende libens sacrumque latus geniumque potentem inrequietus ama. nunc, quod cupis ipse iuberi, da Capitolinis aeternum sedibus aurum, quo niteat sacri centeno pondere vultus

Caesaris et propriae signet cultrices amorem sic ego nec Furias nec deteriora videbo Tartara et Elysias felix admittar in oras."' haece dicit labens sociosque amplectitur artus haerentemque animam non tristis in ora mariti transtulit et cara pressit sua lumina dextra.

At iuvenis magno flammatus pectora luctu nunc implet saevo viduos clamore penates, nunc ferrum laxare cupit, nunc ardua tendit in loca—vix retinent comites—, nunc ore ligato incubat amissae mersumque in corde dolorem saevus agit, qualis conspecta coninge segnis Odrysius vates positis ad Strymona plectris obstupuit tristemque rogum sine carmine flevit.
ille etiam erecte\(^2\) rupisset tempora vitae, ne tu Tartareum chaos incomitata subires, sed prohibet mens fida ducis mirandaque sacris imperiis et maior amor.

Quis carmine digno
exsequias et dona malae feralia pompae perlegat? omne illie stipatum examine longo ver Arabum Cilicumque fluit floresque Sabaei Indorumque arsura seges praereptaque templis

\(^1\) conspecta coninge segnis \(M:\) conspecto coniugis igni Barth.
\(^2\) erecte \(M:\) certe \(\varepsilon:\) fractae Imhof.

\(^a\) Orpheus.
\(^b\) i.e., of the Emperor himself.
their power to harm. Do thou go gladly on in the path thou hast entered, and love unfailingly the sacred presence, the spirit of our Prince. Now—a behest after thine own heart—give to the temple on the Capitol gold that endures for ever, that the countenance of sacred Caesar may gleam in a statue that weighs a hundred pounds, and prove his constant votary's love. So shall I behold neither Furies nor dire Tartarus, but be admitted, a blessed soul, to Elysian regions." Thus with failing strength she speaks, and clings to her consort's arms, and unrepining breathed out her lingering soul into her husband's lips, and closed her eyes with the hand she loved.

But the heart of her spouse was ablaze with passionate grief: now he fills the bereaved home with frenzied crying, now would fain set free the steel, now climbs to lofty heights—scarcely can his friends restrain him—now broods o'er his lost one with mouth joined fast to mouth, and savagely excites the grief that is hidden in his heart: even as the Odrysian bard seeing his wife's corpse fell dazed and horror-struck, and flinging down his quill on Strymon's bank in songless sorrow mourned the pyre. He too had courageously cut short the term of life, that thou shouldst not go uncompanioned to Tartarean gloom, but loyalty to his Prince forbids, loyalty that roused the wonder of the Sacred Monarch, and a yet greater love.

Who could recount in worthy song the obsequies and funeral gifts of that unhappy train? There heaped together in long array is all the liquid wealth of Arabian and Cilician springs, Sabaean blooms and Indian produce destined for the flames, and incense, tura Palaestinis, simul Hebraeique liquores Coryciaeque comae Cinyreaque germina; et altis ipsa toris Serum Tyrioque umbrata recumbit tegmine. sed toto spectatur in agmine coniunx solus; in hunc magnae flectuntur lumina Romae eeu iuvenes natos suprema ad busta ferentem: is dolor in vultu, tantum crinesque genaeque noctis habent. illam tranquillo fine solutam felicemque vocant, lacrimas fudere marito.

Est locus, ante urbm qua primum nascitur ingens Appia quaque Italo gemitus Almone Cybebe ponit et Idaeos iam non reminiscitur amnes. hic te Sidonio velatam molliter ostro eximius coniunx—nec enim fumantia busta clamoremque rogi potuit perferre—beato composuit. Priscilla. toro. nil longior aetas carpere, nil aevi poterunt vitiare labores siccatam\(^1\) membris: tantas venerabile marmor spirat opes. mox in varias mutata novaris effigies: hoc aere Ceres, hoc lucida Gnosis, illo Maia tholo,\(^2\) Venus hoc non improba saxo. accipiant vultus haud indignata decoros numina: circumstant famuli consuetaque turba obsequiis, tune rite tori mensaeque parantur

\(^1\) siccatam s:\ sic catum M: sic cautum Phillimore.
\(^2\) tholo M: polo, loco edd.: luto Bachrens.
spoil of Palestinian shrines, Hebrew essences withal and Corycian petals and Cinyrean buds; she herself reelines on a lofty couch of silk 'neath the shade of a Tyrian awning. But in all the concourse none looks but at the husband, on him is bent the gaze of mighty Rome, as though he were bearing youthful sons to burial: such grief in his looks, such darkness upon his hair and eyes. Her call they happy in her quiet and peaceful end, 'tis for the husband their tears are shed.

There is a spot before the city where the mighty Appian way has its first beginning, and Cybele lays aside her grief in Italian Almo, nor remembers the streams of Ida any more. Here thy peerless consort—for he could not bear the smoke of burning and the clamour of the pyre—laid thee, delicately arrayed in Sidonian purple, blissfully to rest. Length of years will have no power to harm thee, nor the labours of time to wither and mar thy limbs: such wealth of perfume does the venerable marble breathe. Soon art thou changed into manifold images and born anew: here art thou Ceres in bronze, here the bright Cretan maid, Maia beneath that dome, an innocent Venus in this marble. The deities scorn not to accept thy lovely features: attendants stand about thee, a multitude wont to obey; then couches and tables duly without ceasing.

goddesses with Priscilla's features were placed round about the sarcophagus ("marmor") containing her embalmed body.

Dictynna, i.e. Diana (cf. Theb. ix. 632); clearly not Ariadne.

Apparently to maintain the illusion of Priscilla being still alive, her embalmed body is surrounded by attendants, and couches and banquets are made ready for her.
assiduae. domus ista, domus! quis triste sepulcrum dixerit? hae merito visa pietate mariti protinus exclames: "est hic, agnoseo, minister illius, acternae modo qui saeraria genti condidit inque alio posuit sua sidera eaelo."
sie, ubi magna novum Phario de litore puppis solvit iter iamque innumerous utrimque rudentes lataque veliferi porrexit braehia mai invasitque vias, it\(^1\) codem angusta phaseos aequore et immensi partem sibi vindieat austral.

Quid nune immodicos, iuvenum lectissime, fletus corde foves longunque vetas exire dolorem?
nempe times, ne Cerbereos Priscilla tremescat latratus? tacet ille piis! ne tardior adsit navita proturbetque vadis? vehit ille merentes protinus et manes plaeidus locat hospite cumba.
paetera, si quando pio laudata marito umbra venit, iubet ire faees Proserpina laet egressasque saeris veteres heroidas antris lumine purpureo tristes laxare tenebras sertaque et Elysios animae praesternere flores, sie manes Priscilla subit; ibi supplice dextra pro te Fa\(\text{\`a}\) rogat, reges tibi tritis Averni plaeat, ut expletis humani finibus aevi paeantem terras dominum iuvenemque relinquas ipse senex! eertae iurant in vota sorores.

\(^1\) it Gevart: in \(\text{M.}\).

\(^a\) See note on iv. 3. 19. \(^b\) Egyptian.
A house hast thou there, a house! Who would call it a gloomy sepulchre? Justly would one exclaim, seeing the devotion of her spouse: "Truly is he the minister of him who lately for his everlasting race founded a sacred shrine," and set his kindred stars in another heaven." So when some great ship sets forth on a new voyage from the Pharian strand, and already has stretched out on either side a thousand ropes and the broad arms of her sail-bearing mast, and started on her way, some tiny pinnace sails on the same sea, and claims her share of the limitless South wind.

Why now, choicest of youths, dost thou cherish sorrow in thy heart beyond due measure, nor suffer thy long grief to have an end? Fearest thou lest Priscilla tremble at Cerberus’ howling? he is silent for the blessed. Lest the sailor be slow to draw nigh her, or disturb her on the waters? He conveys deserving souls forthwith, and quietly sets them in his welcoming craft. Moreover, whenever a shade approaches that has won the praise of a loving spouse, Proserpine bids summon joyful torches, and the heroines of old to come forth from hallowed bowers and scatter the shades of gloom in radiant light, and strew garlands and Elysian flowers before her. "Thus doth Priscilla enter the kingdom of the dead; there with suppliant hand she prays the Fates for thee, and placates the lords of grim Avernus, that having fulfilled the term of human life thou in old age mayst leave thy prince still giving peace to the world and still young! The unfailing Sisters take oath to grant her prayers."
II. LAUDES CRISPINI VETTI BOLANI FILII

Rura meus Tyrrhena petit saltusque Tagetis Crispinus; nec longa mora est aut avia tellus, sed mea secreto velluntur pectora morsu, uadaque turgentes impellunt lumina guttas, eeu super Aegaeas hiemes abeuntis amici vela sequar spectemque ratem iam fessus ab altisrupibus atque oculos longo querar aere vehic.

Quid? si militiae iam te, puer inelite, primae clara rudimenta et castrorum dulce vocaret auspicium, quanto manarent gaudia fletu quoque darem amplexus! etiamne optanda propinquis tristia? et octonos bis iam tibi circuit orbes vita, sed angustis animus robustior annis, succumbitque oneri et mentem sua non capi aetas. nec mirum: non te series inhonora parentum obscurem proavis et priscae lucis egentem plebeia de stirpe tuit: non sanguine eretus turmali trabeaque recens et paupere clavo

1 propinquis φ: propinqui M: et iamne . . . propinquasPhillimore.
2 et φ: ut M.
3 trabeaque recens Krohn: trabeque et remis M: trabeaque Remi nec Lipsius.

a An Etruscan, the founder of the art of the "haruspices" (see Ovid, Met. xv. 553).
b i.e., "must they be glad and proud at his going to war, while they grieve to lose him?"
c The "trabea" was a toga marked by purple horizontal stripes: originally royal, it was worn by knights on certain occasions, and so became regarded as a knightly badge.
II. THE PRAISES OF CRISPINUS, SON OF VETTIUS BOLANUS

A letter of congratulation and good wishes to Crispinus, a lad of sixteen, just appointed military tribune. The announcement of this appointment is kept back till the end of the poem, the opening lines referring to a holiday taken by the boy shortly before that event, but is anticipated throughout. His father was a celebrated officer named Bolanus, who had served with distinction in Asia Minor, Armenia, and Scotland.

My Crispinus is off to Etruscan fields and the glades of Tages; not for long is his sojournig, nor distant the land, but my heart is torn with secret pangs, and my brimming eyes set the large tears rolling, as though I watched o'er the stormy Aegean the sails of a departing friend, and from a cliff gazed wearily yet after the vessel, and complained that my sight was baffled by the long reach of air.

Ah! if it were the brilliant opening of a soldier's career that called thee, noble youth, or the glad auspices of the camp, what joyful tears would flow, in what warm embraces would I clasp thee! Must friends then even welcome sadness? And already thy life has accomplished twice eight courses, but thy spirit is more robust than thy tender age, and thy years quail before their task, and thy will brooks not their control. Nor is that wonderful: thine was no unrenowned lineage, nor wast thou born of plebeian stock, obscure of family and devoid of ancestral fame; no child of equestrian blood or but newly granted the robe of knighthood and the humble stripe didst thou as a newcomer knock at \[ a \] The angusticlave, for which see note on iii. 2. 124.

augustam sedem et Latii penetrale senatus advena pulsasti, sed praecedente tuorum agmine. Romulei qualis per iugera circi, cum pulcher visu, titulis generosus avitis exspectatur equus, cuius de stemmate longo felix demeritos habet admissura parentes, illum omnes acuunt plausus, illum ipse volantem pulvis et incurvae gaudent agnoscere metae: sie te, clare puer, genitum sibi curia sensit, primaque patricia elatus vestigia luna. mox Tyrios ex more sinus tunicamque potentem agnovere umeri. sed enim tibi magna parabat ad titulos exempla pater. quippe ille iuventam protinus ingrediens pharetratum invasit Araxen belliger indoeilemque fero servire Neroni Armeniam. rigidi summam Mavortis agebat Corbulo, sed comitem belli soeciumque laborum ille quoque egregiis multum miratus in armis Bolanum; atque illi curarum asperrima suetus eredere partirique metus, quod tempus amieum fraudibus, exsero quae fideas aut quae fugae vera ferox Armenii. Bolanus iter praenosse timendum, Bolanus tutis iuga quaerere commoda eastris, metiri Bolanus agros, aperire malignas torrentum nemorumque moras tantamque verendi mentem implere ducis iussisque ingentibus unus

1 exsero Livineius: exorto M.
2 metiri M: metari Avantius.

a The crescent-shaped buckle on the senatorial shoe.
b The "toga praetexta" and the laticlave (tunic with one broad purple stripe down the middle). See note to v. 1. 52.
c For the campaigns of Corbulo see Tac. Ann. xv. 1.
d "metiri" is usually changed to "metari," as being more the august abode and hallowed chamber of the Latian Senate, but preceded by a long array of thine own kinsmen. Just as when on the wide spaces of the Roman Circus a horse is awaited, comely to behold and generous with the blood of famous sires, in whose long pedigree a lucky mating has produced distinguished parentage; the applause of all excites him, the very dust and the round turning-points welcome with joy his flying hooves: so did the Senate-house know thee, illustrious boy, as born for itself, and set the patrician crescent on thy youthful feet. Soon did thy shoulders recognize as their own the wonted Tyrian folds and the proud tunic. And indeed thy sire was preparing for thee mighty patterns of thy fame to be. For on the threshold of manhood he straightway made warlike attack on quiver-bearing Araxes and Armenia that would not learn to serve fierce Nero. Corbulo held command in the stern warfare, but even he admired Bolanus, his comrade in battle and partner of his toils, in many a glorious fight; on him too was he wont to lay his keenest anxieties, and shared with him his fears, what occasion befriended ambush, what times were good for open fighting, when to suspect the word and when to trust the flight of proud Armenia. Bolanus it was who knew beforehand the perils of the route, Bolanus who sought the ridge that served the safety of the camp, Bolanus who measured out the fields and cleared the dangerous hindrances of torrent or forest, who fulfilled the mighty purposes of that revered chieftain, and alone of all availed to appropriate to camps: Statius, however, may not be thinking of castrametation at all, or may prefer the less technical word.
sufficere. ipsa virum norat iam barbaras tellus, ille secundus apex bellorum et proxima cassis, sie Phryges attoniti, quamquam Nemeaea viderent
arma Cleonaeusque acies impelleret arcus, pugnante Alcide tamen et Telamona timebant. 50
disce, puer,—nec enim externo monitore petendus virtutis tibi pulcher amor: cognata ministret laus animos. aliis Decii reduxerisque Camilli monstrentur—tu disce patrem, quantusque ne-gantem
fluctibus occiduis fesso usque¹ Hyperione Thylen 55 intrarit mandata gerens quantusque potentiis mille urbes Asiae sortito rexerit anno, imperium mulcente toga. bibi talia pronis auribus, haec certent tibi conciliare propinqui, haec iterent comites praecepta senesque paterni. 60 Iamque alio moliris iter nec deside passu ire paras; nondum validae tibi signa iuventae inrepsere genis, et adhuc tenor integer aevis nec genitor iuxta; fatis namque haustus iniquis occidit et geminam prolem sine praeside linquens. 65 nec saltem teneris ostrum puerile lacertis exuit albentique umeros induxit amictu.
quem non corrupit pubes efffrene novaeque

¹ fesso usque Vollmer: fessusque M: fessique Dom.: fessique Hyperioni Imhof.

¹ The Trojans feared Telamon, father of Ajax, as well as Hercules (slayer of the Nemean lion near Cleonae). The reference is to the previous sack of Troy, in which Hercules took part.

² Decius devoted himself to death for Rome; Camillus returned from exile to defeat the Gauls.

³ He was legatus in Britain 70–71.

⁴ lit. “that says no to,” “opposes,” cf. iii. 1. 124 “saxa carry out his great commands. Already the barbarian land itself knew the hero well; his was the second crest in battle, his helm stood nearest to his chief's. So were the Phrygians dismayed, and though it was the arms of Nemea they saw, and Cleonae's bow that drove their ranks in rout, ay, though Aleides fought, yet feared they Telamon also. Learn, boy—for no stranger needst thou seek to teach thee the fair love of valour; let kindred renown inflame thee: others may seek a pattern in Decius or the returning of Camillus—learn thou the lesson of thy sire, in what might he entered Thule that sets a barrier to western waves, where Hyperion is ever weary, and bore the commands of Caesar, how powerfully he governed the thousand cities of lordly Asia in the allotted year, yet with justice tempering authority. Drink in with ready ear these stories, for these let thy kinsmen strive to win thy love, these precepts let thy comrades and thy father's friends repeat.

And now thou art planning a journey to other lands, and art preparing to be gone with no sluggish stride; not yet have the signs of vigorous manhood crept about thy cheeks, blameless still is the tenour of thy life. Nor is thy father with thee: a cruel fate has taken him, he is dead, leaving two children without a guardian. He did not even take off the purple of boyhood from thy youthful arms, or put the white raiment about thy shoulders. Whom hath not unrestrained youth corrupted, and the too hasty freedom negantia ferro," also Theb. ii. 668. Thule was regarded rather as in the extreme W. than in the N.

e The change from the purple-bordered toga of childhood to the white toga of manhood is referred to.
STATIUS

libertas properata togae! ceu nescia falcis silva comas tollit fructumque exspirat in umbras. 70 at tibi Pieriae tenero sub pectore curae et pudor et docti legem sibi dicere mores;
tune hilairis probitas et frons tranquilla nitorque luxuriae confine tenens pietasque per omnes dispensata modos; aequaevo cedere fratri 75 mirarique patrem miseracque ignoscere matri, admonuit fortuna domus. tibine illa nefanda pocula letalesque manu componere sucos evaluit, qui voce potes praevertere morsus serpentum atque omnes vultu placare novercas? 80 infestare libet manes meritoque precatu pacem auferre rogis; sed te, puer optime, cerno flectentem visus1 et talia dicta parantem:
"parce, precor, cineri: fatum illud et ira nocentum Parcarum crimenque dei, mortalita quisquis 85 pectora sero videt nec primo in limine sistit conatus scelerum atque animos infanda parantes.
excidat illa dies aevo nec postera credant saecula! nos certe taceamus et obruta multa nocte tegi propriae patiamur crimina gentis. 90 exegit poenas, hominum cui cura suorum, quo Pietas auctore redit terraque revisit.
quem timet omne nefas. satis haec lacrimandaque nobis
ultio. quin saevas utinam exorare liceret

1 visus Postgate: iustis M.

---

a Acc. to Lemaire, "admonuit" implies "you have learnt from the story of your house to," etc.
b Crispinus is praised for his generosity towards his mother who tried to poison him perhaps out of favour of the gown! even as a tree, when it knows not the knife, luxuriates in growth and wastes its fruitfulness in leaf? But beneath thy youthful breast are modesty and study of the Muse and a nature self-controlled; mirth too thou hast and honesty and a tranquil brow, and an elegance that stops short of luxury, and loyal devotion lavished on every side; the fortune of thy house has taught thee to give place to thy brother of equal age, to reverence thy sire and to forgive thy hapless mother. Could she bring herself to mix for thee the accursed cup of deadly juices, who by thy voice canst avert the bite of serpents, and by thy look soften the heart of any stepmother? Fain would I vex her shade, and by merited curses banish peace from her pyre; but thou, O best of youths, dost turn thy face, I see, and ponderest such words as these: "Spare the dust, I pray; 'twas destiny and the wrath of guilty Fates; that god was to blame, who looks too late into human hearts, nor checks upon the threshold the motions of evil and the unhallowed plottings of the mind. May that day perish from Time's record, nor future generations believe it! Let us at least keep silence, and suffer the crimes of our own house to be buried deep in whelming darkness. He wreaked the penalty who hath care of those who are his, at whose word Loyalty hath returned and come on earth again, whom every sin doth fear. Sufficient for us and deserving of our tears is his vengeance. Nay, could we but implore the fierce Avengers, and keep Cer-Eumenidas timidaeque avertere Cerberon umbrae 95 immemoremque tuis citius dare manibus annem.

Maecte animo, iuvenis! sed crescunt crimina matris.
nec tantum pietas, sed protinus ardua virtus affectata tibi. nuper cun forte sodalis immeritiae falso palleret crinime famae erigeretque forum succinctaque iudice multo surgeret et castum vibraret Iulia fulmen:
tu, quamquam non ante forum legesque severas passus, sed tacita studiorum occultus in umbra, defensare metus adversaque tela subisti pellere, inermis adhuc et tiro. paventis amici.
haud umquam tales aspexit Romulus annos Dardaniuque senex medii bellare togata strage fori. stupuere patres temptamina tanta conatusque tuos, nec te reus ipse timebat.\(^1\) par vigor et membris, promptaeque ad fortia vires sufficiunt animo atque ingentia iussa sequuntur ipse ego te nuper Tiberino in litore vidi, qua Tyrrhena vadis Laurentibus aestuat unda, tendentem cursus vexantemque ilia nuda calee ferocis equi, vultu dextraque minacem:
—si qua fides dictis, stupui armatumque\(^2\) putavi—:
Gaetulo sic pulcher equo Troianaque quassans tela novercales ibat venator in agros

\(^1\) nec te reus ipse timebat \(M\): some edd. mark a lacuna after reus: de te, pro te edd., nec tune Leo: se . . . tenebat conj. Phillimore.
\(^2\) armatumque \(M\): Martemque Markland.

\(a\) The charge was probably one of adultery, which would be dealt with under the Lex Iulia de maritandis ordinis.
\(b\) Romulus and Aeneas, \(i.e.\) their statues in the Forum.
\(c\) I adopt this interpretation with a good deal of hesitation (" nec reus ipse = et ipse is qui non erat reus "). I do not, berus from that timid shade, ay, more swiftly grant thy ghost the waters of forgetfulness!"

A blessing on thy heart, O youth! yet the greater grows thy mother's crime. Not devotion only, but high courage also has been thy aim. Lately when thy friend grew pale at a false charge and unmerited ill-fame, and the Julian law awoke the Courts, and girt with her train of justices arose and shook her lightning-brand of chastity: thou, although without experience of trials or stern laws, but ever hidden in the silence of thy studious shade, yet didst take upon thee to avert his fears, and, thyself an unarmed recruit, to repel the bolts that threatened thy terror-stricken friend. Never before did Romulus and our Dardanian ancestor behold so young a combatant wage gowned warfare in mid-forum. The fathers were amazed at so brave a venture and at thy daring and even the innocent feared thee. In thy limbs too is the same vigour, and thy strength ever ready for valiant deeds is sufficient for thy courage and obedient to high behests. Myself I saw thee of late on Tiber's bank, where the Tyrrhenian wave foams against Latian shallows, speeding on thy course, and with naked heel goading the flank of thy mettled steed, with threatening hand and visage:—as I speak truth, I stood aghast, and thought thee armed for battle; so fair to see rode Ascanius on a Gaetulian horse a-hunting into his stepmother's fields, brandishing Trojan shafts, and made hapless however, think there is a lacuna here. Prof. Hardie adopts Prof. Slater's suggestion that nec te is a corruption of vecti, i.e. Crispinus himself, and reads after 109—

ipse etiam stupuit tanti modo criminis auctor conatusque tuos, Vecti,—reus ipse—timebat.

297
Ascanius miseramque patri flagrabat Elissam; Troilus haud aliter gyro leviore minantes eludebat equos aut quem de turribus altis Arcadas Ogygio versantem in pulvere metas spectabat Tyriae non torvo lumine matres.

Ergo age iam magno — ducis indulgentia pulsat certaque dat votis hilaris vestigia frater— surge animo et fortes castrorum concipe curas. monstrabunt acies Mavors Actaeaque virgo, fluetere Castor equos, umeris quatere arma Quirinus, qui tibi tam tenero permisit plaudere collo nubigenas elipeos intaetaque caedibus arma.

Quasnam igitur terras, quem Caesaris ibis in orbem? Arctoosne amnes et Rheni fracta natabis flumina an aestiferis Libyae sudabis in arvis? an iuga Pannoniae mutatoresque domorum Sauromatasquaties? an te septenus habebit Hister et umbroso circumflua coniuge Peuce? an Solymum eimerem palmetaque capta subibus non sibi felices silvas ponentis Idymes? quod si te magno tellus frenata parenti accipiat, quantum ferus exsultabit Araxes! quanta Caledonios attollet gloria campos! cum tibi longaevus referet trucis incola terrae:

"hic suetus dare iura parens, hoc caespite turmas

1 iam Phillimore: nam M; punctuation Vollmer's.

---

a i.e., wheeled as though he were racing in Arcadia. "versantem metas" is grammatically a sort of hypallage, for "versantem currum circa metas." Cf. Theb. ix. 683.
b i.e., Parthenopaeus.
c Pallas Athene.
d He was one of the youthful Salii Quirinales, the priests of Mars, who carried the sacred shields ("ancilia") in his worship.
Elissa burn with passion for his sire; not otherwise did Troilus circling more nimbly elude the menacing steeds, or he whom as he wheeled round the turning-posts of Arcady in the dust of Thebes the Tyrian matrons beheld from their high towers with no unkindly eyes.

Come then—for thy Prince’s favour urges thee on, and thy brother leaves sure footprints for thy vows,—arise with valiant heart, and bethink thee of the camp and its manly cares. Mars and the Attic maid shall show thee the battle line, Castor shall teach thee to wheel thy horsemen, Quirinus to clash thy arms upon thy shoulders, Quirinus who suffered thee to make ring upon thy youthful neck the cloud-born shields and armour unstained with blood.

To what lands then, to which of Caesar’s worlds wilt thou go? Wilt thou swim Northern rivers and the broken waters of Rhine, or sweat in the hot fields of Libya? Wilt thou make Pannonian mountains tremble, and the Sauromatae that shift their dwelling? Shall sevenfold Danube hold thee, and Peuce that lies amid her lover’s shady streams? Or wilt thou tread the dust of Solyma, and the captive palm-groves of Idume, who not for herself did plant her fruitful orchards? But if the land that thy mighty parent curbed receive thee, how will savage Araxes thrill with joy! What glory will exalt the Caledonian plains! When some aged dweller in that bloodthirsty land tells thee: “Here was thy father wont to give

---

1 i.e., Jerusalem.
2 Vollmer quotes Tac. Agr. v. and the references to Vettius Bolanus in Agr. viii.
adfari; late\(^1\) speculas\(^2\) castellaque longe —aspicis?—ille dedit cinxitque haec moenia fossa; belligeris haec dona deis, haec tela dicavit —cernis adhuc titulos—; hune ipse vocantibus armis induit, hune regi rapuit thoraca Britanno."

qualiter in Teucros victricia bella paranti ignotum Pyrrho Phoenix narrabat Achilles.

Felix, qui viridi fidens, Optate, iuventa durabis quascunque vias vallumque subabis, forsan et ipse latus—sic numina principis adsint—cinctus et unanimi comes indefessus amici, quo Pylades ex more pius, quo Dardana gessit bella Menoetiades. quippe haec concordia vobis, hic amor est duretque precor! nos fortior aetas iam fugit; hinc votis animum precibusque iuvabo, et mihi! sed questus solitos si forte ciebo et mea Romulei venient ad carmina patres, tu deeris, Crispine, mihi, cuneosque per omnes te meus absentem circum spectabit Achilles. sed venies melior—vatum non irrita currunt omina—quique aquilas tibi nunc et castra recludit, idem omnes perferre gradus cingique\(^3\) superbis fascibus et patrias dabit insedisse curules.

Sed quis ab excelsis Troianae collibus Albae,

\(^1\) late Waller: vitae M, vieis, vigiles, Vetti, viden has etc. edd.
\(^2\) speculas \(\varepsilon\): specula M.
\(^3\) cingique Pol.: cingitque M.

\(\text{a}\) i.e., as I recite it (my Achilleid).
\(\text{b}\) i.e., the rank of military tribune; such tribunes were called "tribuni laticlavii," as compared with "tr. angusticlavii," who were knights (Suet. Otho, 10). This rank and that of "praefectus alae (equitum)" were often given to sons of senators (Suet. Oct. 38). Hence "elari" in v. 1. 97. This would be the first step (i. 173) in the senatorial career.

300
justice, from this mound would he harangue his horsemen; watch-towers and strongholds in wide circuit did he set—dost thou see?—and drew a trench around these walls; these gifts, these weapons did he dedicate to the god of war—thou seest still their titles; this cuirass he himself put on at the battle's summons, this one did he take from off the British king." Such tales would Phoenix tell to Pyrrhus, as he planned victorious war against the Trojans, of Achilles whom he had never known.

Happy thou, Optatus, who trusting in thy supple youth shalt endure whatever road or rampart thou shalt approach, girt thyself also with the sword, perehanee—so be the godhead of the Prince propitious—and the untiring comrade of thy bosom friend, even as was devoted Pylades, or Patroclus in the Dardan war. A union of hearts is yours; true affection is this, and I pray that it abide. For me, the years of vigour speed fast away; therefore with vows and prayers will I echeer thy spirit, and mine as well! But if I utter my wonted lament and the Roman fathers come to hear my song, I shall then feel thy loss, Crispinus, and my Achilles a will look on every bench for thee in vain. But thou shalt return yet more renowned—not idly run the prophecies of the seers—and he who now admits thee to the eagles b and the camp shall grant thee to accomplish all the degrees of rank, and to be surrounded by the rods of power, and to take thy seat on thy father's curule chair.

But who is this that from Trojan Alba's c lofty hills,

---

a Achilles
b Eagles

301
unde suae iuxta prospectat moenia Romae proximus ille deus, Fama velocior intrat nuntius atque tuos implet, Crispine, penates?
dieebam certe: vatum non irrita currunt auguria. en! ingens reserat tibi limen honorum Caesar et Ausonii committit munia ferri.
vade,1 puer, tantisque enixus suffice donis, felix, qui magno iam nunc sub praeside inras eique saer primum tradit Germanieus ense non minushoc, fortis quam si tibi panderet ipse Bellipotens aquilas torvaque induceret ora casside. vade alacer maioraque disce mereri!

IIII. EPICEDION IN PATREM SUUM

Ipse malas vires et lamentabile carmen Elysio de fonte mihi pulsumque sinistrae da, genitor praedocte, lyrae. neque enim antra moveri
Delia nec solitam fas est impellere Cirrham tesine. Corycia quicquid modo Phoebus in umbra, quicquid ab Ismariis monstrabat collibus Euhan, dedidici. fugere meos Parnasia crines vellera, funestamque hederis inrepere taxum vade Pol.: unde M.

a On Parnassus (cf. Théb. vii. 348).
b In Thrace, with which Bacchus was connected in legend.
302
whence that present deity looks forth upon the walls of his own Rome hard by, enters outstripping Rumour, and with his news fills all thy house, Crispinus? Surely was I saying: "Not idly run the prophecies of the seers." Lo! Caesar unbars for thee the mighty threshold of renown, and entrusts the sword of Ausonia to thy keeping. Forward, lad! having striven so far have strength for this great privilege, happy, who even now dost swear homage to thy mighty Chief, and to whom divine Germanicus doth give thy first sword! This is no lesser gift, than if the God of war himself bestowed on thee his strong eagles, and set his grim casque upon thy head. Go in good heart, and learn to merit yet higher honours!

III. THE POET'S LAMENT FOR HIS FATHER

The longest and most elaborate of the epicedia, and marked by much deeper and more genuine feeling than the others (except perhaps v. 5); it is to be noticed that it only appears in the fifth book of the Silvae, though his father had died about fifteen years previously. Possibly the last book was posthumous; it has no preface to it, as the others have, only a letter to Abascantus, and its last poem is an unfinished one.

Do thou thyself, most learned sire, vouchsafe me from Elysian springs a bitter potency in the music of grief, and the touch of an ill-omened lyre. For without thee I may not move the Delian grottoes, or awake Cirrha to wonted strains. All that Phoebus of late revealed in his Corycian bower, and Euhan upon the hills of Ismara, I have unlearnt. The fillets of Parnassus have dropped from my brow, and I have beheld in fear the deadly yew creep in among extimui trepidamque—nefas!—arescere laurum. certe ego, magnanimum qui facta attollere regum 10 ibam altum spirans Martemque aequare canendo. quis sterili mea corda situ, quis Apolline mero frigida damnatae praeduxit nubila menti? stant circum attonitae vatem et nil dulce sonantes nee digitis nec voce deae. dux ipsa silenti 15 fulta caput cithara, qualis post Orphea raptum astitit. Hebre, tibi, cernens iam surda ferarum agmina et immotos sublato carmine lucos.

At tu seu membris emissus in ardua tendens fulgentesque plagas rerumque elementa recenses, 20 quis deus, unde ignes, quae ducat semita solem, quae minuat Phoeben quaeque integrare latentem causa queat, notique modos extendis Arati, seu tu Lethaei secreto in gramine campi concilia heroum iuxta manesque beatos. 25 Maeonium Ascræumque senem, non segnior umbra accolis alternumque sonas et carmina misceas: da vocem magno, pater ingeniumque dolori. nam me ter relegens caelo 1 terque ora retexens Luna videt residem nullaque Heliconide tristes solantem curas; tuus ut mihi vultibus ignis inrubuit cineremque oculis uementibus hausi, vilis honos studiiis. vix haece in munera solvo primum animum, tacitisque situm depellere curis 2

1 caelo M: caelum Heinsius.
2 tacitis . . . curis M: tactis . . . chordis Polster.

a Author of an astronomical treatise called Phaenomena.
b Homer and Hesiod.
c This perhaps is not to be literally taken, i.e. that the poem was written three months after his father's death; still in any case he must have kept it by him for a long while before publishing it—if indeed the publication was not posthumous.
the ivy-leaves, and the trembling bay—ah! horror!—wither and die. Yet surely I am he who, loftily inspired, essayed to extol the deeds of great-hearted kings, and to raise my song to the height of Mars himself. Who has doomed my spirit to decay? Who has drawn a cold shroud of mist about my blighted heart, and drowned my inspiration? The goddesses stand dismayed around the bard, and with neither voice nor finger make sweet melody. Their queen herself sinks her head upon her silent lyre, as when after Orpheus' loss she halted by thy stream, O Hebrus, and gazed at the troops of beasts that listened no more, and the woods that moved not since the strains were gone.

But thou, whether freed from the body thou soarest to the heights and reviewest the glittering realms and the elements of things, learning what is God, whence cometh fire, what orbit guides the sun, what cause makes Phoebe wane and has power to restore her hidden light, and dost continue the music of renowned Aratus; or whether in the secluded grassy meads of Lethe, among gatherings of heroes and spirits of the blest, thou dost attend the Maeonian and Aseraean sages, thyself no feeblter shade, and makest music in thy turn and minglest thy song with theirs: O grant a voice and inspiration, father, to my great grief. For thrice has the moon journeyed o'er the heaven, and thrice displayed her countenance, and still beholds me sluggish, and my sadness unconsolled by any draught of Helicon; ever since thy pyre shed its red light upon my face, and with streaming eyes I gazed upon thy ashes, I have held cheap my poet's art. Searee do I for the first time free my mind for tasks like this, and (e'en now nunc etiam labente manu nec lumine sicco ordior adelinis tumulo, quo molle quiescis iugera nostra tenens, ubi post Aeneia fata stellatus Latiiis ingessit montibus Albam Ascanius, Phrygio dum pingues sanguine campos odit et infaustae regnum dotale novercae.
hic ego te—nam Sicanii non mitius halat aura croci, dites nec si tibi rara Sabaei cinnama, odoratas nec Arabs decerpsit aristas—inferiis cumulande sacris, te\textsuperscript{1} carmine plango Pierio; sume o gemitus et vulnera nati et laerimas, rari quas umquam habuere parentes.
atque utinam fortuna mihi, dare manibus aras,
par templis opus, aeriamque educere molem, Cyclopum scopulos ultra atque audacia saxa Pyramidum, et magno tumulum praetexere luce! illic et Siculi superassem dona sepulcri et Nemees lucum et Pelopis solemnia trunci.
illic Oebalio non finderet aera disco Graiorum vis nuda\textsuperscript{2} virum, non arva rigaret sudor equum aut putri sonitum darem ungula fossa;
sed Phoebi simplex chorus, et frondentia vatum praemia laudato, genitor, tibi rite ligarem.\textsuperscript{3} ipse madens oculis, umbrarum animaeque saecerdos,

\textsuperscript{1} inferiiis cumulande sacris te \textit{Phillimore}: inferni cum laude laei \textit{M}: inferiiis cum laude datis et \textit{Krohn}: inserui cum laude loci \textit{Dom.}, te \textit{conj. Markland}.

\textsuperscript{2} nuda \textit{S}: unda \textit{M}: uneta \textit{Polster}.

\textsuperscript{3} ligarem \textit{M}: dicarem \textit{S}, litarent \textit{Ellis}.

\textit{a} Probably refers to the incident related \textit{Aen.} ii. 682:
ecce levis summo de vertice visus Iuli fundere lumen apex, etc.

\textit{b} Lavinia.

306
with failing hand and no tearless eye) essay to shake my silent sorrow from its torpor, leaning against the tomb in which thou dost rest at peace in our own fields,—those fields where after Aeneas' death star-bright Ascanius set Alba upon Latian hills,\(^a\) in hatred of the plains that Phrygian blood had drenched, the royal dower of his ill-omened stepdame.\(^b\) Here in thy honour—nor softer is the fragrant breath of Sicanian crocus, nor the rare cinnamon that rich Sabaeans pluck thee, nor perfumed blossoms of Arabia—O thou who deservest full meed of holy offerings, do I make musical lament; ah! receive the groans and the anguish of thy son, and tears such as have been shed for but few fathers. Would it were my fortune, to build an altar to thy shade, a work that would match temples, to raise high the soaring fabric, higher than Cyclopean rock or the Pyramids' bold masonry, and plant a mighty grove about thy tomb. There had I surpassed the tribute of the Sicilian sepulchre, and Nemea's precinct and the rites of maimed Pelops.\(^c\) There no naked band of Grecian athletes would cleave the air with the Oebalian disk,\(^d\) no sweat of steeds would water the ground or hoof-beat ring upon the crumbling track; there would be but the choir of Phoebus, and I would duly sing thy praise, O father, and bind on thee the minstrel's prize of leaves. I myself, as priest of the dead and of thy soul, would with moist eyes lead a mournful dirge, from which

\(^c\) The references are to the tomb raised by Aeneas for Anchises, that of Opheltes (see Theb. vi. 242), and the Olympian games founded in honour of Pelops.

\(^d\) It was with the quoit that Apollo slew Narcissus, son of Oebalus, king of Sparta.
praecinerem gemitum, cui te nec Cerberus omni ore nec Orpheae quirent avertere leges.

atque ibi me\(^1\) moresque tuos et facta canentem fors et magniloquo non posthabuisset Homero, tenderet et torvo pietas aequare Maroni.

Cur magis incessat superos et aena sororum stamina, quae tepido genetrix super aggere nati orba sedet vel quae primaevi coniugis ignem aspicit obstantesque manus turbamque tenentem vincit in ardentem, liceat, moritura\(^2\) maritum? maior et his forsan superos et Tartara pulsem\(^3\) invidia: externis etiam miserabile visu funus eat.\(^4\) sed nec modo se Natura dolenti nec\(^5\) Pietas in iusta\(^6\) dedit; mihi limine primo fatorum et viridi, genitor, ceu raptus ab aevo Tartara dura subis. nec enim Marathonia virgo parcius extinctum saevorum crimine agrestum fleverit Icarium, Phrygia quam turre cadentem Astyanacta parens. laqueo quin illa supremo

\(^1\) ibi me Heinsius: tibi \(M\).
\(^2\) moritura \(M\): modo itura Schrader, moritura Heinsius.
\(^3\) maior et his . . . pulsem Krohn: aliis \(M\): at his Bachrens: ais Vollmer: ab his Phillimore, who reads pulset.
\(^5\) nec \(M\): sed Phillimore, bracketing nec modo to dedit.
\(^6\) in iusta Boxhorn: iniusta \(edd\).

\(^a\) The idea running through this passage is that to him his father is as one untimely dead, and that therefore this bitterness is added to the grief felt by natural affection; Erigone is an example of the same thing. She bewailed her neither Cerberus with all his mouths nor Orpheus' cruel bond could keep thee. There as I sang of thy goodness and thy deeds perchance thy love had deemed me not second to Homer's mighty utterance, ay, would even fain hold me equal to Maro's solemn chant.

a Why does the mother who sits bereaved by her son's still-glowing pile assail the gods and the Sisters' brazen threads more bitterly than I? Why she who looks upon the flames that consume her youthful spouse, and breaks through the hands that stay her and the resisting crowd, to die, do they but suffer her, upon her husband's blazing corpse? More fiercely even than theirs, perchance, does my reproach strike Tartarus and the gods; b perchance even alien eyes find sorrow in the funeral train. Ay, not Nature only nor Affection have lent themselves to my grief for these sad rites: for to me, O father, thou wert cut off on manhood's earliest threshold, and in the prime of life didst enter cruel Tartarus. For neither did the Marathonian maid lament Icarius' death, that savage countrymen wrought, more sparingly than his mother mourned Astyanax hurled down from the Phrygian tower. Nay, Erigone stifled her sobs in the noose that took her life; but father Icarius no less bitterly than Andromache mourned Astyanax her son: Erigone slew herself, while Andromache became the slave of Pyrrhus.

b The construction seems to be "perhaps fiercer than these in my reproach I strike," etc.; "invidia" is strictly the feeling of bitterness against a person, often of the bereaved towards the gods, cf. Theb. ix. 723; Silv. v. 5. 78. The sympathy of onlookers is often referred to as being aroused especially by cases of untimely death, cf. ii. 1. 175, v. 1. 217.
inclusit gemitus: at te post funera magni Hectoris Haemonio pudor est servisse marito.

Non ego, quas fati certus sibi morte canora inferias praemittit olor nee rupe quod atra Tyrhhenaevolucrese nautis praedulce minantur, in patrios adhibebo rogos: non murmure truncio quod gemit et durae queritur Philomela sorori:
nota nimis vati. quis non in funere enmetos Heliadum ramos lacrimosaque germina dixit et Phrygium silicem atque ausum contraria Phoebo ēarmina nee fida1 gavisam Pallada buxo?
te Pietas oblita virum revocataque caelo Iustitia et gemina plangat Faecundia lingua et Pallas doctique cohors Heliconia Phoebi, quis labor Aonios seno pede ducere cantus2 et quibus Arcadia carmen testudine mensis cura lyrae3 nomenque fuit quosque orbe sub omni ardua septena numerat Sapientia fama, qui furias regumque domos aversaque caelo sidera terrifico super intonuere cothurno, et quis lasciva vires tenuare Thalia

1 fida M: foeda Heinsius: bifida Phillimore.
2 cantus Barth: campos M: currere campos Heinsius.
3 cura lyrae Gronovius: cydalibem M.

a i.e., Andromache, mother of Astyanax: she became the slave of Neoptolemus, son of Achilles after the death of her husband, Hector.
b See on ii. 2. 1.
c Pallas had her own reasons for disliking the flute, and was therefore glad when it betrayed Marsyas. The other thou, when mighty Hector was dead, didst stoop to serve a Haemonian lord.

I shall not bring to my father’s pyre that tribute of death-music which the swan when he knows his doom sends to the world beneath, nor the warning strains surpassing sweet that the Tyrrhenian winged maids chant to mariners from the fatal cliff: no sorrowful tongueless plaint of Philomela to her cruel sister: the minstrel knows them all too well. Who by the grave’s side has not recounted all the branches and all the amber tears of the Sun’s daughters, and Phrygia’s flinty rock, and him who dared make music against Phoebus, while Pallas rejoiced that the boxwood-pipe deceived him? Nay, let Pity that has forgotten men, and Justice recalled to heaven, and Eloquence in either tongue bewail thee, and Pallas and the Heliconian train of minstrel Phoebus; those also whose toil it is to guide Aonian song in six-foot measures, and they who fit their strains to the Arcadian tortoise-shell, and find in the lyre their labour and renown, those whom ’neath every sky sublimest Wisdom counts in the sevenfold roll of Fame; they who in the dread buskin have thund-ered out the fury and the wickedness of kings, and told of the sun’s light hidden from the earth, and they whose joy it is to relax their powers in Thalia’s references are to the daughter of the Sun who wept for Phaëthon, and to Niobe (from Mt. Sipylus in Phrygia, where the figure of Niobe was, according to legend).

a See iii. 3. 1 n.

c i.e., the epic hexameter. Aonian = of the Muses, lit. = Boeotian.

f i.e., lyric, suggested by “carmen” and “mensis.”

g The Seven Wise Men; probably prose composition generally.
dulce vel heroos gressu truncare tenores.
omnia namque animo complexus et omnibus auctor qua fandi vis lata patet, sive orsa libebat Aoniis vineire modis seu voce soluta spargere et effreno nimbos aequare profatu.
Exsere semirutos subito de pulvere vultus, Parthenope, erinemque adflato monte sepultum pone super tumulos et magni funus alumni, quo non Munichiae quiequam praestantius arces doctaque Cyrene Sparteve animosa ereavit.
si tu stirpe vacans famaeque obscura iaceres nil gentile tenens, illo te eive probabas Graiam atque Euboico maiorum sanguine duci.
ille tuis totiens praestabat tempora sertis, cum stata laudato caneret quinquennia versus ora supergressus Pylii senis oraque regis Dulichii specieque eomam subnexus utraque.
non tibi deformes obscuri sanguinis ortus nec sine luce genus (quamquam fortuna parentum artior expensis); etenim te divite ritu

---

1 tenores Dom.: leones M, Vollmer: labores, lepores, etc. edd.
2 auctor Dom.: utor M.
3 Munichiae Pol.: moniciae M; Monichiae Heinsius: Monychiae Postgate.
5 ille M: illa Postgate.
6 praestabat Elter: prestat sed M: praestant se Vollmer.
8 specieque ... utraque Dom.: speciemque ... utroque M, Vollmer, Klotz.
9 expensis Avantius: extensis M.
wantoning, or to maim of one foot the heroic tenor of their lay. For all measures in the broad path of eloquence did thy mind embrace, in all wert thou a master, whether it pleased thee to bind thy utterance in poesy, or to fling it wide in unfettered speech and rival the rainstorms by the unbridled torrent of thy words.

Lift up, Parthenope, lift up thy head half-buried from the dust that suddenly whelmed thee, lay thy tresses merged beneath the mountain's exhalations upon the tomb of thy great departed son: than whom neither the Minnychian towers nor learned Cyrene nor Sparta's valiant spirit gave birth to aught more excellent. Wert thou lacking in lineage, humble and unrenowned, with nought of thine own race to show, his citizenship would prove thee Grecian and sprung from Euboea by ancestral blood. He, whene'er he celebrated the solemn quinquennial feast in famous verse, as often offered his temples to receive thy laurel-prize, surpassing the utterance of Pylian sage and Dulichian prince alike, and binding the likeness of either on his brow. No mean birth of blood obscure was thine, nor was thy family without distinction (though expenses straitened thy parents' means); for it was in rich pomp that Infancy

---

On the ms. reading Vollmer remarks: "kühn nennt der Dichter die Verse, welche die wie Löwen kämpfenden Helden darstellen, selbst 'leones.'" Tragedy, comedy, and elegy are denoted in ll. 96-99.

* Athens.

* Callimachus from Cyrene, Alcman from Sparta.

* The Augustalia at Naples.

* Nestor and Ulysses are referred to, both of whom were eloquent speakers.
ponere purpureos Infantia legit\(^1\) amictus stirpis honore datos et nobile pectoris aurum. 120 protinus exorto dextrum risere sorores Aonides, puerique chelyn summisit et ora imbuit amne sacro iam tum mihi blandus Apollo.
neec simplex patriae deus, et natalis origo pendet ab\(^2\) ambiguo geminae certamine terrae. 125 te de gente suum Latiiis asciita colonis Graia refert Hyele,\(^3\) gravidus\(^4\) qua puppe magister exedit et mediis miser evigilavit in undis;
maior at inde suum longo probat ordine vitae Parthenope . . . . . . . \(^5\)
Maeniden aliaeque aliis natalibus urbes 130 diripiunt eunctacae probant; non omnibus ille verus, alit victos immanis gloria falsi.
atque ibi dum profers annos vitamque salutas, protinus ad patrii raperis certamina lustri vix implenda viris, laudum festinus et audax\(^6\) 135 ingenii. stupuit primaeva ad carmina plebes Euboea et natis te monstravere parentes.
inde frequens pugnae nulloque ingloria sacro vox tua: non totiens victorem Castora gyro nec fratrem caestu virides plausere\(^7\) Therapnae. 140

---

\(^1\) legit M; adegit Dom.
\(^2\) ab Barth: et M.
\(^3\) Hyele Heinsius: sele M; Velie \(^5\).
\(^4\) gravidus Ellis: gravis M; Graius \(^5\).
\(^5\) Lacuna recognized here by Markland, as there is no mention of Parthenope; no lacuna in mss.
\(^6\) festinus et audax Lipsius: festina sed ut dux M.
\(^7\) plausere Dom.: clausero M.

---

\(\text{\textsuperscript{a}}\) There is no justification for changing “ponere” to “sumere”: the ceremony clearly is the laying aside of the “toga praetexta” and the golden “bulla,” emblems of childhood: the fact that this ceremony was performed with great pomp is given as a proof of the statement “non tibi 314
chose thee to lay by the purple garb given in honour of thy birth and the proud gold from off thy breast. Straightway at thy appearing the Aonian sisters favourably smiled, and Apollo even then my friend dipped thy boyish lyre and steeped thy lips in the saered stream. Nor is thy country’s glory single, and the undeided contest of two lands leaves the place of thy origin in doubt. Grecian Hyele, where the drowsy steersman fell from the poop and passed a distressful vigil in the waves,—Hyele, made their own by Latian settlers, claims thee on the score of birth; but then mightier Parthenope proves thee hers by thy life’s long course—even so different cities with as many birth-places divide Maeonides among themselves, and prove their case every one; yet is he not the true scion of all, but the vast pride of a false claim puffs up the vanquished. There, while thou didst begin thy lays and offer thy greeting to life, straightway wert thou hurried into the contests of thy native festival that men can scarce sustain, so eager wert thou for praise and bold of wit. The Euboean folk stood amazed at thy youthful verse, and parents showed thee to their sons. Thereafter was thy voice frequent in combat, and at no solemn feast inglorious: not so often did green Therapnae applaud Castor’s victory upon the round course, or Pollux triumphant in the boxing-match. But if to deformes,” etc. Possibly “ex tantis” (out of so many, “tanti” often = “tot,” iv. 1. 33, iv. 8. 14) should be read for “expensis.” “stirpis honore datos” does not refer to the grant of the laticlave, for this took place only with the assumption of the “toga virilis,” but simply to the fact that he was a freeborn citizen.

b Velia, on the Lucanian coast; the reference is to Palinurus (Virg. Aen. vi. 366).

c Homer.
STATIUS

sin¹ pronom vicisse domi: quid Achaea mereri praemia nune ramis Phoebi nune gramine Lernae nune Athamantea protectum tempora pinu, eum totiens lassata tamen nusquam avia frondes abstulit aut alium tetigit Victoria erinem?¹

Hinc tibi vota patrum eredi generosaque pubes te monitore regi, mores et faeta priorum discere, quis easus Troiae, quam tardus Ulixes, quantus equos pugnasque virum decurrere versu Maenonides quantumque pios ditarit agrestes 150

Aseraeus Sieulusque senex, qua lege recurrat Pindaricae vox flexa lyrae volucrumque preector Ibyeus² et tetricis Aleman cantatus Amyclis Stesichorusque ferox saltusque ingressa viriles non formidata temeraria Leucaed³ Sappho, 155 quosque alios dignata elylys. tu pandere doctus earmina Battidae latebrasque Lyeophronis arti⁴ Sophronaque implicitum tenuisque arcana Corinnae. sed quid parva loquor? tu par adsuetus Homero ferre iugum senosque pedes aequare solutis 160 versibus et numquam passu breviore relinqui. quid mirum, patria si te petiere relieta, quos Lucanus ager, rigidi quos iugera Dauni, quos Veneri plorata domus neglectaque tellus a The laurel of Apollo in the Pythian games, the wild parsley at Nemea, the pine-branch at Isthmus (Athamas was the father of Palaemon, who with his mother Ino was worshipped there; Lerna is in the neighbourhood of Nemea). b Hesiod and Epicharmus (cf. Columella, i. 1. 8). c Ibycus called on a flock of cranes to avenge him on some robbers who had ill-treated him. d The only support for the ms. Calchide is a statement win at home was easy, what a feat to gain Achaean prizes, shading thy temples now with the spray of Phoebus, now with Lerna's grasses, now with the Athamantian pine, when Victory so often quailed for weariness, yet never missed thee or robbed thee of thy leaves, or touched another's hair!

Hence came it that thou wert trusted with the fond hopes of parents, and under thy guidance noble youths were ruled, and learnt the ways and the prowess of men of old—the fate of Troy, Ulysses' tardy return, what power has Maenides to describe in song the battles and steeds of heroes, how the bards of Ascrea and of Sicily enriched the faithful husbandmen, the law that sways the recurrent, winding rhythms of Pindar's lyre, Ibycus who besought the birds, Aleman whose strains warlike Amyclae sang, proud Stesichorus, and bold Sappho who feared not Leucas, but took the heroic leap, and all others whom the harp has deemed worthy. Skilled wert thou to expound the songs of Battus' son, and the dark ways and straitened speech of Lyeophron, and Sophron's tangled mazes and the hidden thought of subtle Corinna. But why speak I of lesser names?
Thou wert wont to bear an equal yoke with Homer, and match his hexameters in prose, nor ever be outdistanced and fail to keep his pace. What wonder if they left their own land and sought thee, all whom Lucania sent and the acres of stern Daunus, and the home that Venus bewailed and the land that Alcides of Stephanus of Byzantium that there was a Chalcis on or near the island of Lesbos.

Callimachus (Battus, founder of Cyrene).
He had written a prose paraphrase of Homer.

i.e., Apulia; a legendary king. "stern": cf. Hor. C.
i. 22. 14 "militaris Daunias."
Alcidae vel quos e vertice Surrentino mittit Tyrrheni speculatrix virgo profundi, quos propiore sinu lituo remoque notatus collis et Ausonii pridem laris hospita Cyme quosque Dicarchei portus Baianaque mittunt litora, qua mediis alte permixtus\(^1\) anhelat ignis aquis et operta domos incendia servant? sic ad Avernales scopus et opaca Sibyllae antra rogatae veniebant undique gentes; illa minas divum Parcarumque acta canebat quamvis decepto vates non irrita Phoebο.

mox et Romuleam stirpem proceresque futuros instruis inque patrum vestigia ducere perstas. sub te Dardanius facis explorator opertae, qui Diomedei celat penetralia furti, crevit et inde sacrum didicit puer; arma probator\(^2\) monstrasti Saliis\(^3\) praesagumque aethera certi\(^4\) auguribus; cui Chalcidicum fas volvere carmen, cur Phrygii lateat coma flaminis, et tua multum verbera succincti formidavere Luperci.

\(^1\) permixtus \(\varepsilon\): permissus \(M\).
\(^2\) probator Ellis: probatur \(M\): probatus Vollmer: probatis Baehrens.
\(^3\) monstrasti Saliis Lipsius: monstrastis aliis \(M\).
\(^4\) certi Vollmer: certis \(M\).

---

\(a\) Pompeii, of which Venus was patron goddess, Herculaneum, Surrentum with the promontory of Minerva, Cape Misenum.
\(b\) Of Misenus.
\(c\) Slater: “that welcomed long ago the Ausonian Lar,” i.e. Aeneas.
\(d\) By refusing his love after he had granted whatever she chose to ask (i.e., as many years as there were grains in a handful of dust).
\(e\) The reference is to the “pontifices,” under whose super-slighted, and the maiden who from Sorrento's height watches the Tyrrhenian deep, and the hill above the nearer bay, a marked by the trumpet and the oar, b those too whom Cyme sent, once a stranger to her Ausonian home, c and the haven of Dicarchus and Baiae's shore, where pants the fire deep-mingled with the midmost waves and the smothered conflagrations keep their dwellings? So from every side came the folk to Avernus' rocks and the dark grotto of the Sibyl, to ask their questions, while she sang of the wrath of heaven and the doings of the Fates, no vain prophet even though she foiled Apollo. d Soon dost thou educate the Roman youth and the chieftains that shall be, and firmly leadest them in the footsteps of their sires. Under thy care grew the Dardanian overseer of the hidden fire, e who conceals the mysterious theft of Diomede, and from thee while a boy did he learn the rite: thou didst approve the Salii, and teach them their weapons' use and show to the augurs the sure foreknowledge of the air; thou didst tell to whom belongs the privilege of unfolding the Chalcidic oracle, and why the hair of the Phrygian flamen is concealed; and the girt-up Luperci sorely feared thy blows. f vision was the sacred fire in the temple of Vesta, and the Palladium that Diomede stole from Troy.

f The "pontifices" had charge of the sacred fire in the temple of Vesta, and the Palladium taken from Troy by Diomede and Ulysses; the Salii were priests of Mars, the augurs had supervision of the auspices, and the XVViri of the Sibylline books; the priests of the Phrygian Cybele (like other flamen, who are therefore included) had to wear the "apex," a small sacrificial cap. The Luperci ran through the city half-naked, striking women with goatskin thongs to cause fertility; here they are girt up to receive, not to inflict stripes!
Et nune ex illo forsan grege gentibus alter iura dat Eois, alter compeseit Hiberas, alter Achaemenium secludit Zeugmate Persen, hi dites Asiae populos, hi Pontica frenant, hi fora pacificis emendant faseibus, illi castra pia statione tenent: tu laudis origo. non tibi certassent iuvenilia fingere corda Nestor et indomiti Phoenix moderator alumni quique tubas acres lituosque audire volentem Aeciden alio frangebat carmine Chiron.

Talia dum celebras, subitam civilis Erinys Tarpeio de monte facem Phlegraeaque movit proelia. sacrilegis lucent Capitolia taedis, et Senonum furias Latiae sumpsere cohortes. vix requies flammae needum rogus ille deorum siderat, excisis cum tu solacia templis impiger et multum fæcibus velocior ipsis concinis ore pio captivaque fulmina defles. mirantur Latii proceres utorque deorum Caesar, et e medio divum pater annuit igni. iamque et flere pio Vesuvina incendia cantu mens erat et gemitum patriis impendere damnis, eum pater exemptum terris ad sidera montem sustulit et late miseras deiecit in urbes.

Me quoque vocales lucos Boeotaque tempe

1 taedis ሩ: rhedis M.
2 Boeotaque Baehrens: biota- or luotaque M: Inoaque etc. edd.

---

a See note on iii. 2, 137.
b Both Phoenix and Chiron acted as tutor to Achilles.
c The fighting in Rome between the Vitellian and Flavian troops, A.D. 69.
d Such as when the gods fought against the giants in the plains of Phlegra, cf. i. 1. 79 "bella lovis." The Senones were a Gallic tribe.
And now of that company one perchance gives laws to Eastern races, another quells Iberian tribes, another at Zeugma sets bounds to the Achaemenian Persian; these curb the rich peoples of Asia, those the lands of Pontus, these by peaceable authority declare pure justice in the courts, those hold loyal watch and ward in camps; thou art the source of their renown. In moulding youthful minds neither Nestor nor Phoenix, guide of his untamed foster-child, had striven with thee, nor Chiron, who with far different strains subdued the heart of Aeacides, fain to hear the bugles and the blast of horns.\(^b\)

Whilst thus thou wert busy, of a sudden civil Strife\(^c\) raised her torch on the Tarpeian mount, and stirred Phlegraean combats.\(^d\) The Capitol glows with impious fire, and Latian cohorts showed the fury of the Gauls. Scaree had the flame abated, still burnt that funeral pyre of gods, when thou undismayed, eagerly forestalling the brands themselves, didst chant with pious voice a solace for the shrines destroyed and lament the captured thunderbolts. The Roman chieftains and Caesar, heaven's avenger, marvel, and from the midst of the blaze the Sire of the gods gives sign of favour. And already was it thy purpose to bewail in pious chant the conflagration of Vesuvius, and expend thy tears on the ruin of thy native land, when the Father caught up the mountain from the earth and lifted it to the skies, then hurled it far and wide upon the hapless cities.\(^e\)

I too, when I knocked at the groves of song and \(^{c}\) Statius's father had written a poem on the fighting on the Capitol in 69, and was planning one on the eruption of Vesuvius in 79.

pulsantem, cum stirpe tua descendere dixi, admisse deae; nec enim mihi sidera tantum aequoraque et terras, quae mos debere parenti, sec decus hoc quodcumque lyrae primusque dedisti on vulgare loqui et famam sperare sepulcro.
qualis eras, Latios quotiens ego carmine patres mulcerem felixque tui spectator adesses muneris! heu quali confusus gaudia fletu vota piosque metus inter lactumque pudorem!
quam tuus ille dies, quam non mihi gloria maior!
talis Olympiaca iuvenem cum spectat harena qui genuit, plus ipse ferit, plus corde sub alto caeditur: attendunt cunei, spectatm Achaeis ille magis, crebro dum lumina pulveris haustu obruit et prensa volet exspirare corona.
ei mihi quod tantum patrias ego vertice frondes solaque Chalcidicae Cerealia dona coronae te sub teste tuli! qualem te Dardanus Albae vix cepisset ager, si per me serta tulisses Caesarea donata manu! quod subdere robur illa dies, quantum potuit dempsisse senectae!
nam quod me mixta quercus non pressit oliva, et fugit speratus honos: quam dulce parentis invia Tarpei caperes! te nostra magistro Thebais urgearat priscorum exordia vatum;
tu cantus stimulare meos, tu pandere facta

1 Achaeis Imhof: achates M: Acestes Dom.
2 quam Baehrens: qua M.
3 invia Ellis: invida M.

a Cf. iii. 5. 28 n.
b The wreath of ears of corn won at the Augustalia at Naples; for “patrias” cf. note on iv. 8. 45.
c The oak-wreath of the Capitoline (Tarpeian) contest was not joined to the olive-wreath of the Alban contest, see note 322
the glens of Boeotia, and claimed myself thy offspring, was given entrance by the goddesses; for it was not only sky and sea and land that thou didst give me, the due and wonted gift of parents, but this glory of the lyre, such as it is, and thou first taughtest me no common utterance, and to hope for fame even in the tomb. What was thy pride, so oft as I charmed the Latian fathers with my song, while thou wert present, a happy witness of thy own bounty! What confusion of delight and tears was thine, of hope and loving fear and modest joy! That was indeed thy day, the glory as much thine as mine! Such is the father that beholds his son upon Olympian sand, he strikes each blow himself more mightily, deeper in his heart's depth does he receive the stroke; 'tis he whom the crowded tiers are watching, he on whom the Achaean gaze, while his eyes grow dim with the whirling dust, and he prays to die so but the prize be grasped. Alas! that in thy sight I bore only native chaplets on my brow, and only Ceres' gift of the Chalcidie wreath. How proud hadst thou been, scarce had thy Dardan estate of Alba held thee, if through me thou hadst won a garland given by Caesar's hand! What strength had that day ministered to thee, what relief to thy old age! For in that the oak and olive together did not press my brow, and the hoped-for prize eluded me—ah! how gladly hadst thou received the Tarpeian Father's unattainable reward! Under thy guidance my Thebaid followed the footsteps of ancient bards; thou didst teach me to give vigour on iii. 5. 28. If the reading of M "invida" be retained, the passage might be rendered "how gently did you receive the grudging decision," etc.

heroum bellique modos positusque locorum monstrabas. labat incerto mihi limite cursus te sine et orbatae caligant vela carinae. nec solum larga memet pietate fovebas:
talis et in thalamos. una tibi cognita taeda conubia, unus amor. certe seiungere matrem iam gelidis nequeo bustis: te sentit habetque, te videt et tumulos ortuque obituque salutat, ut Pharios aliae ficta pietate dolores Mygdoniosque colunt et non sua funera plorant.

Quid referam expositos servato pondere mores?
quae pietas, quam vile lucrum, quae cura pudoris, quantus amor recti? rursusque, ubi dulce remitti, graatia quae dictis? animo quam nulla senectus?
his tibi pro meritis famam laudesque benignas iudex\(^1\) cura deum nulloque e vulnere tristem concessit. raperis, genitor, non indigus aevi, non nimius, trinisque decem quinquennia lustris iuncta ferens. sed me pietas numerare dolorque non sinit, o Pylias aevi transcenderete metas et Teucros aequare senes, o digne videre me similem! sed nec leti tibi ianua tristis:
quique leves causae, nec segnis labe senili exitus instanti praemisit membra sepulcro, sed te torpor iners et mors imitata quietem explicuit falsoque tulit sub Tartara somno.
quos ego tunc gemitus,—comitum manus anxia vidit, vidit et exemplum genetrix gavisaque novit—

\(^1\) iudex M: vindex Aldine.

---

\(^a\) The reference is to the lamentation that formed part of the cults of Isis and Cybele, when Osiris and Attis were bewailed; cf. "the women weeping for Thammuz," i.e.
Adonis. Pharian and Mygdonian= Egyptian and Phrygian.

\(^b\) i.e., of Nestor, who lived through three generations.
to my song, to describe heroic deeds and modes of war and the setting of the scene. Without thee my course wavers and runs uncertainly, and mist shrouds the sails of my lonely craft. Nor was it I alone thy bountiful love did cherish: such wert thou too toward thy spouse. Thou knewest the torches of but one wedlock: one passion alone inspired thee. Assuredly I cannot separate my mother from thy cold tomb: there doth she feel and know thy presence, she sees thee, and morn and eve salutes thy grave, as other women in feigned loyalty attend on Pharian or Mygdonian grief, and bewail an alien death.

Why should I tell of thy frank, yet earnest nature? thy loving heart, thy contempt of gain, thy care for honour, thy passion for the right? and yet again, when it pleased thee to relax, of the charm of thy converse? of thy mind that knew no age? For these deserts of thine the ruling providence of the gods has granted thee renown and kindly fame, and saved thee from the sadness of any blow. Thou art taken, father, not lacking years, nor overburdened; ten spaces of five years hast thou added to three lustres. But grief and affection suffer me not to count thy days, O thou who wert worthy to surpass the Pylian bounds of life and equal a Priam's age, worthy to see me too as old! But the gate of death was not dark for thee: gentle was thy passing, nor did a tardy end fore-ordain thy frame in senile dissolution to the ever-threatening grave, but a tranquil unconsciousness and death that counterfeited slumber set free thy soul, and bore thee to Tartarus under the false semblance of repose. Ah! what groans I uttered then! my friends saw me with anxiety, my mother saw me and rejoiced to recognize her son. What quae lamenta tuli! veniam concedite, manes, fas dixisse, pater: non tu mihi plura dedisses. felix ille patrem vacuis circumdedit ulnis: vellet et Elysia quamvis in sede locatum abripere et Danaas iterum portare per umbras; temptantem et vivos molitum in Tartara gressus detulit infernae vates longaeva Dianae: sic chelyn Odrysiam pigro transmisit Averno causa minor, sic Thessalicis Admetus in oris; si lux\(^1\) una retro Phylaceida rettulit umbram, cur nihil exoret, genitor, chelys aut tua manes aut mea? fas mihi sic patrios contingere vultus, fas iunxisse manus, et lex quaccumque sequatur.

At vos, umbrarum reges Ennaeaque\(^2\) Iuno, si laudanda precor, taedas auferte comasque Eumenidum; nullo sonet asper ianitor ore, Centauros Hydraeque greges Seyllaeaque monstra aversae celent valles, umbramque senilem invitet ripis, discussa plebe, supremus vector et in media componat molliter alga. ite, pii manes Graiumque examina vatum, inlustremque animam Lethaeis spargite sertis et monstrate nemus, quo nulla inrupit Erinys. in quo falsa dies caeloque simillimus aer. inde tamen venias, melior qua porta malignum cornea vincit ebur, somnique in imagine monstra,

\(^1\) si lux Heinsius: silua M: sic lux Vollmer. Lacuna before this line acc. to Postgate.
\(^2\) Ennaeaque Gronovius: aeneaeque M: Aetnaeaque Pol.

\(\text{a}\) The allusion is to Aeneas, who carried his father through the darkness of the night when the Greeks took Troy; he embraced his phantom in the underworld.
\(\text{b}\) Orpheus sought Eurydice, Hercules sought Alcestis.
\(\text{c}\) See note on ii. 7. 122.
lamentation did I make! Pardon me, O shades: father, I may say it with truth: thou wouldst not have wept more for me! Happy was he who grasped his sire with ineffectual arms; ay, he would fain have snatched him away, though set in Elysium, and carried him once more through Danaan darkness: and when he made essay and strove to walk with living steps to the underworld, the aged priestess of Diana, goddess of the dead, conducted him. Even so a lesser cause brought the Odrysian lyre to sluggish Avernus: so was it with Admetus in the land of Thessaly. If one day brought back the shade of Protesilaus, why should thy harp or mine, O father, win no request of the underworld? Might I but touch the face of my sire, might I but grasp his hand with mine, let any law that will o’ertake me!

But do ye, O monarchs of the dead and thou, Ennean Juno, if ye approve my prayer, send far away the Furies’ brands and snaky locks! Let the warder of the gate make no fierce barking, let distant vales conceal the Centaurs and Hydra’s multitude and Seylla’s monstrous horde, and, scattering the throng,—let the ferryman of the dead invite to the bank the aged shade, and lay him gently to rest amid the grasses. Go, spirits of the blest and troops of Grecian bards, shower Lethaean garlands on the illustrious soul, and point him to the grove where no Fury disturbs, where there is day like ours and air most like to the air of heaven. Thence mayst thou pass to where the better gate of horn o’ercomes the envious ivory, and in the semblance of a dream teach me what thou wert ever wont to teach. Even so

d Proserpine, carried off from the fields of Enna.

e See Virg. Aen. vi. 894.
quae solitus. sic sacra Numae ritusque colendos mitis Aricino dietabat nympha sub antro, Scipio sic plenos Latio labore ducere somnos ereditur Ausoniis, sic non sine Apolline Sylla

IV. SOMNUS

Crimine quo merui, iuvenis placidissime divum, quove errore miser, donis ut solus egerem, Somne, tuis? tacet omne pecus voluerisque feraeque et simulans sessos curvata cacumina somnos, nec trucidus fluviis idem sonus; occidit horror aequoritis, et terris maria adclinata quiescunt.

septima iam rediens Phoebe mihi respiciat aegras stare genas; totidem Oetaeae Paphiaeque revisunt lampades et totiens nostros Tithonia questus praeterit et gelido spargit miserata flagello. unde ego sufficiam? non si mihi lumina mille, quae sacer alterna tantum statione tenebat Argus et haud umquam vigilabat corpore toto. at nunc heu! si aliquid longa sub nocte puellae brachia nixa tenens ultro te, Somne, repellit, inde veni nec te totas infundere pennas luminibus compello meis—hoc turba precetur laetior—: extremo me tange cacumine virgae, sufficit, aut leviter suspenso poplite transi.

1 sic Sudhaus: nec M.
2 revisunt Dom.: revisent M: renident Baehrens.

a For Numa and Egeria see Livy, i. 19. 5.
b Scipio was accustomed to visit the temple of Jupiter on the Capitol, where he was said to have communion with the god. Sulla always wore a small image of Apollo, under whose protection he held himself to be.
c i.e., the evening and the morning stars, often spoken of by the ancients as shining on the same day. "Paphiae," the gentle Nymph ordained for Numa \( ^a \) in the Arician grot the sacred rites for his observing, so—as the Ausonians believe—had Scipio nightly visions full of Latian Jove, so too was Sulla not without Apollo.\( ^b \)

IV. TO SLEEP

O youthful Sleep, gentlest of the gods, by what crime or error of mine have I deserved that I alone should lack thy bounty? Silent are all the cattle, and the wild beasts and the birds, and the curved mountain summits have the semblance of weary slumber, nor do the raging torrents roar as they were wont; the ruffled waves have sunk to rest, and the sea leans against earth's bosom and is still. Seven times now hath the returning moon beheld my fixed and ailing eyes; so often have the lights of Oeta and Paphos \( ^c \) revisited me, so oft hath Tithonia passed by my groans, and pitying sprinkled me with her cool whip.\( ^d \) Ah! how may I endure? Not if I had the thousand eyes of sacred \( ^e \) Argus, which he kept but in alternate watchfulness, nor ever waked in all his frame at once. But now—ah, me!—if some lover through the long hours of night is clasping a girl's entwining arms, and of his own will drives thee from him, come thence, O Sleep! nor do I bid thee shower all the influence of thy wings upon my eyes—that be the prayer of happier folk!—touch me but with thy wand's extremest tip—'tis enough—or pass over me with lightly hovering step.

\( ^i.e. \) the planet of Paphian Venus; “Oetaeae,” from Virg. Ecl. viii. 30.

\( ^d \) The whip is that with which she chases the stars, cf. Theb. viii. 274; from it fall drops of dew upon the wakeful poet.

\( ^e \) “sacer,” as being sent by Juno.
Me miserum! neque enim verbis solemnibus ulla incipiam nunc\(^1\) Castaliae vocalibus undis invisus Phoeboque gravis. quae vestra, sorores, orgia, Pieriae, quas incestavimus aras? dicite, post poenam liceat commissa fateri. \(^5\) numquid inaccesso posui vestigia luco? num vetito de fonte bibi? quae culpa, quis error quem luimus tantus\(^2\)? morientibus ecce lacertis viscera nostra tenens animamque avellitur infans, non de stirpe quidem nec qui mea nomina ferret oraque; non fueram genitor, sed cernite fletus liventesque genas et credite planetibus orbi: orbis ego. huc patres et aperto peetore matres conveniant; cineremque oculis et crimina ferto, si qua sub uberibus plenis ad funera natos \(^15\) ipsa gradu labente tulit madidumque ceeidit pectus et ardentes restinxit lacte favillas.\(^3\) quisquis adhuc tenerae signatum flore iuventae immersit cineri iuvenem primaque iacentis serpere crudeles vidit lanugine flammas, \(^20\) adsit et alterno mecum clamore fatiscat: vincetur lacrimis, et te, Natura, pudebit. tanta mihi feritas, tanta est insania luctus. hoc quoque cum nitor ter\(^4\) dena luce peracta adelinis tumulo et planetus\(^5\) in carmina verto

\(^1\) nunc Scriverius: nec M.
\(^2\) tantus Pol.: tantis M.
\(^3\) favillas Dom.: papillas M.
\(^4\) nitor ter Gronovius: ni . . . ter M.
\(^5\) tumulo et planetus Krohn: tumul . . . nctus M.
V. A LAMENT FOR HIS ADOPTED SON

That this epicedion would have rivalled in length ii. i and v. 3 may be gathered from the prelude, ll. 1-65. The poet appears to have keenly felt the loss of his adopted son, if we may judge from the last lines of this fragment.

Woe is me! for with no hallowed words can I begin, hateful now as I am to Castalia's vocal streams and detested of Phoebus. What rites of yours, Pierian sisters, what altars have I violated? Speak; after the punishment let the crime be known. Have I set foot in some untrodden grove? or drunk from a forbidden spring? what fault, what error so great that I am atoning? Lo! as with dying arms he clings to my heart, ay, to my very soul, my child is torn away: no child of my own blood, or bearing my name or features; his sire I was not, but look upon my woe and my livid cheeks, and give credence, O ye bereaved, to my lament: for verily bereaved am I. Let fathers come hither, and mothers with open bosom; and let her endure to behold these ashes and this crime, whoever with tottering step has borne her sons to the grave in her own arms beneath full breasts, and beaten a teeming bosom, and quenched with her milk the glowing embers; whoever has plunged into the fire a lad still marked with the bloom of tender youth, and seen the cruel flames creep over the fresh down of the dead boy—let him come and grow weary with me in alternate wailing; his tears will be outdone, and thou wilt feel shame, O Nature. So fierce am I, so senseless in my grief. And while I thus strive, now when thirty days are past, leaning against the tomb I turn my mourning discordesque modos et^ singultantia verba^ molior: orsa lyrae vis^ est atque ira tacendi impatiens. sed nec solitae mihi vertice laurus nec fronti vittatus honos. en taxea marce tilla comis, hilaresque hederas plorata cupressus 30 excludit ramis; nec eburno pollice chordas pulso, sed incertam digitis errantibus amens scindo chelyn. iuvat iat, iuvat inaudabile carmen fundere et incompte miserum nudare^ dolorem.
sie merui? sie me cantuque habituque nefastum 35
aspicient superi? pudeat Thebasque novumque Aeaciden? nil iam placidum manabit ab ore?
ille ego qui—quotiens!—blande matrumque patrumque
vulnera, qui viduus potui nuleere dolores, ille ego lugentum mitis solator, acerbis auditus tumulis et descendentibus umbris, deficio medicasque manus fomentaque quaero vulneribus, sed summa, meus. nunc tempus, amici, quorum ego manantes oculos et saucia tersi pectora: reddite opem, saevas exsolvite grates. 45 nimirum cum vestra modis ego funera maestis^

increpitans: “qui damna doles aliena, repone infelix lacrimas et tristia carmina serva.” verum erat: absumptae vires et copia fandi nulla mihi, dignumque nihil mens fulmine tanto 50 repperit: inferior vox omnis et omnia sordent

^ modos et\(\text{\textsuperscript{5}}\) m. . . . M.
^ verba M: acerba Phillimore.
^ lyrae vis Krohn: ly . . M: lyra vox Davies. Most
edd. punctuate after molior: Phillimore lyra: satis est.
^ nudare Markland: laudare M.
into verse, and contrive discordant strains, and words that are but sobs; the power of my lyre is awake, its spirit brooks not silence. But no wonted bays are on my head, no chaplet's glory on my brow. Behold, the yew-sprays wither on my hair, and the lamentable cypress-leaves exclude the cheerful ivy, nor do I strike the chords with quill of ivory, but with errant fingers tear distractedly my uncertain harp. I delight, ay, alas! delight to pour forth hateful strains, and to lay bare my wretched grief in random utterance. Is such my desert? Must the gods behold me thus with the garb and music of woe? Must Thebes and young Achilles a be put to shame? Will calm utterance flow nevermore from my lips? Yet I am he who was able—how many a time!—to soothe by appeasing words the pain of mother and of sire, and the sorrow of bereavement; I, the gentle consoled of the afflicted, whose voice was heard in the hour of untimely death by spirits departing, I now am at a loss, and seek healing hands and remedies, ay, the most powerful, for my wounds. Now is the time, my friends, whose streaming eyes and pierced breasts I stanchéd; bring me succour, pay your debt of frenzied gratitude. Doubtless when I in sad strains <bewailed> your losses <one among you spake> rebuking: "Thou who dost grieve for others' loss, preserve thy ill-omened tears, and keep thy melancholy song." 'Twas true: exhausted are my powers, I have no store of speech, my mind can find nought to match so great a blow; too feeble is all my music, a His Thebaid and recently begun Achilleid.

5 vestra modis . . . maestis Klotz (but in his edition he follows M): vestra domus . . . maestus M. Baehrens recognized lacuna after 46, so all edd.
ignosce, puer: tu me caligine maesta obruis. a! durus, viso si vulnera carae coniugis invenit caneret quod Thracius Orpheus dulce sibi, si busta Lini complexus Apollo 55 non tacuit. nimium fortasse avidusque doloris dicor et in lacrimis iustissimum excessisse pudorem?
quisnam autem gemitus lamentaque nostra reprendis?
o nimium felix, nimium erudelis et expers imperii, Fortuna, tui, qui diecre legem 5fletibus aut fines audet eensere dolendi!
incitat heu! planetus: potius fugientia ripas flumina detineas rapidis aut ignibus obstes, quam miseris lugere vetes. tamen ille severus, quisquis is est, nostrae cognoscat vulnera causae. 60 Non ego mercatus Pharia de puppe loquaces delicias3 doctumque sui convicia Nili infantem, lingua nimium4 salibusque protervum, dilexi: meus ille, meus. tellure cadentem aspezi atque unetum genitali earmine fovi poseentemque novas tremulis ululatibus auras inserui vitae. quid plus tribuere parentes?
quin alios ortus libertatemque sub ipsis uberibus tibi, parve, dedi, cum5 munera nostra rideres ingratus adhuc. properaverit ille, 7sed merito properabat, amor, ne perderet ullum libertas tam parva diem. nonne horridus inde6 invidia superos innocuo quae Tartara pulsem?

1 durus Pol.: duro M.
2 reprendis Pol.: reprendis M, Pol. (from P).
3 delicias Avantius: aceditus M.
4 nimium Markland: sumum M: eximium Waller.
5 cum Pol.: heu M.
6 ullum, inde Baehrens: om. M.

a A favourite of Apollo who died young.
b Probably a reference to the solemn purification of the no word but is unworthy. Forgive me, lad: 'tis thou dost cloud my mind with sorrow. Ah! verily hard of heart was Thracian Orpheus, if he found a song that pleased him when he saw the wound of his dear spouse, and Apollo, if holding the corpse of Linus in his arms he was not mute! Too violent am I called perenience and greedy of woe, and extravagant beyond due measure in my weeping? Who art thou that blamest my groans and tears? Ah! too happy he, and heartless, and ignorant, Fortune, of thy law, who dares to set conditions to lamentation, or adjudge the bounds of grief! Alas! mourning incites to mourn: sooner wilt thou check the rivers that hurry past their banks or stay devouring fire than forbid the sorrowful to lament. Yet let him learn, that severe judge, whoe'er he be, my wound and my complaint.

No chattering favourite was it, bought from a Pharian vessel, no infant skilled in the repartee of his native Nile, with over-ready tongue and impudent wit, that won my heart; mine was he, mine indeed. When he lay on the ground, a new-born babe, I saw him, and with a natal ode I welcomed his anointing, and as with tremulous wailing he claimed his new heritage of air, I set him among living souls. What more did his own parents give? Nay, another birth I gave thee, little one, and thy liberty while yet at the breast, though yet thou didst laugh ungrateful at my gift. Hasty my love may have been, yet with good reason so, lest even a day be lost to so tiny a freedom. And shall I not then all unkempt hurl my reproaches at the gods and at unjust Tartarus? Shall child on the ninth day after birth: "inserui" perhaps of formal registration.

335
STATIUS

nonne gemam te, eare puer? quo sospite natos non eupii, primo genitum quem protinus ortu implicui fixique1 mihi, eui verba sonosque monstravi questusque et vulnera caeca resolvi,2 reptantemque solo demissus ad oscula nostra erexi, blandoque sinu iam iamque cadentes3 exsopire4 genas dulcesque accersere somnos. cui nomen vox prima meum ludusque tenello risus, et a nostro veniebant gaudia vultu.

STATII DE BELLO GERMANICO FRAGMENTUM

lumina: Nestorei mitis prudentia Crispi et Fabius Veiento — potentem signat utrumque purpura, ter memores implerunt nomine fastos — et prope Caesareae confinis Acilius aulae.

1 quem... implicui fixique Pol.: qui... implicuit fixitque M.
2 resolvi 𒊲: ne solvam M: resolvens Markland.
4 exsopire Vollmer: excepare M: exceptare, excipere ipse, etc. edd.

a It is not clear what should be read for "excepere"; for historic infinitives to avoid succession of past tenses cf. ii. 1. 122.

b These lines are quoted by Valla, commenting on Juvenal, Sat. iv. 94, and are the only evidence we have for this work of Statius.

c Crispus is probably Vibius Crispus, whom Quintilian mentions as "vir ingenii iucundi et elegantis" (v. 13. 48).

336
I not mourn for thee, dear lad? Whilst thou didst live, I desired no sons, thou wast my first-born and from thy very birth I bound thee to myself and made thee truly mine; I taught thee sounds and words, and soothed thy complainings and thy hidden hurts, and as thou didst crawl on the ground, I stooped and lifted thee to my kisses, and lovingly in my bosom lulled to sleep thy drooping eyes, and bade sweet slumber take thee. My name was thy first speech, my play thy infant happiness, and my countenance was the source of all thy joy.

FRAGMENT OF A POEM ON THE WAR IN GERMANY

... lights: the gentle wisdom of Nestor-like Crispus, and Fabius Veiento—the purple marks each as eminent, thrice have they filled the recording annals with their names—and Acilius, near neighbour of Caesar's palace.

Juvenal also describes him (iv. 81) "venit et Crispi incunda senectus cuius erant mores qualis facundia, mite ingenium"; cf. Tac. Hist. ii. 10.

If Fabius Veiento is the same as Fabricius Veiento, he was notorious as an informer under Domitian; he too is mentioned by Juvenal (iv. 113, iii. 185, vi. 113).

Acilius Glabrio and his father were present, with the two preceding, at the famous council of the Turbot (Juv. iv.); the former was a contemporary of Crispus, the latter (mentioned here) was consul with Trajan in 91, and subsequently put to death by Domitian.
THEBAIDOS

LIBER I

Frater nas acies alternaque regna profanis decertata odiis sontesque evolvere Thebas, Pierius menti calor incidit. unde iubetis ire, deae? gentisne canam primordia dirae, Sidonios raptus et inexorabile pactum legis Agenoreae scrutantemque aequora Cadnum?
longa retro series, trepidum si Martis operti agricolam infandi condentem proelia suleis expediam penitusque sequar, quo earme muris inserit Amphion Tyrios accedere montes, unde graves irae cognata in moenia Baecho, quod saevae Iunonis opus, cui sumpserit arcus infelix Athamas, cur non expaverit ingens Ionium socio casura Palaemone mater.
atque adeo iam nune gemitus et prospera Cadmi praeteriisse sinam: limes mihi carminis esto Oedipodae confusa domus, quando Itala nondum

\(^a\) For the situation at the opening of the Epic and its plot see Introduction.
\(^b\) Cadmus, son of Agenor, king of Phoenicia, was sent by his father in search of Europa when carried off by Zeus in the form of a bull; he subsequently founded Thebes, and sowed the dragon's teeth there; hence "anxious husbandman," etc.
\(^c\) Juno's jealousy caused the death of Semele, mother of My spirit is touched by Pierian fire to recount the strife of brethren, and the battle of the alternate reign fought out with impious hatred, and all the guilty tale of Thebes. Whence, O goddesses, do ye bid me begin?—Shall I sing the origins of the dreadful race, the Sidonian rape and the inexorable terms of Agenor’s law, and Cadmus searching o’er the main? Far backward runs the story, should I tell of the anxious husbandman of hidden war, sowing battles in the unhallowed soil, and, searching to the uttermost, relate with what song Amphion bade the Tyrian mountains move to form a city’s walls, whence came Bacchus’ grievous wrath against his kindred towers; what deed fierce Juno wrought; against whom unhappy Athamas caught up his bow, and why with Palaemon in her arms his mother quailed not to leap into the vast Ionian sea. Nay rather here and now I will suffer the sorrows and the joys of Cadmus to have gone by: let the troubled house of Oedipus set a limit to my song, since not yet may I venture to Bacchus; Athamas went mad and slew his son Learchus, Ino leapt with Palaemon into the sea. Ino and Semele were daughters of Cadmus.

Or, “be the track, the course of.”
signa nec Arcuoos ausim spirare\textsuperscript{1} triumphos bisque ingo Rhenum, bis adactum legibus Histrum et coniurato deiectos vertice Dacos aut defensa prius vix pubescentibus annis bella Iovis teque, o\textsuperscript{2} Latiae decus addite famae, quem nova mature\textsuperscript{3} subeuntem exorsa parentis aeternum sibi Roma cupid. licet artior omnis limes agat stellas et te plaga lucida caeli, Pleiadum Boreaeque et hiulei fulminis expers, sollicitet, licet ignipedum frenator equorum ipse tuis alte radiantem erinibus arcum imprimat aut magni cedat tibi Iuppiter aequa parte poli, maneas hominum contentus habenis, undarum terraeque potens, et sidera dones.
tempus erit, cum Pierio\textsuperscript{4} tua fortior oestro facta canam: nunc tendo ehelyn satis arma referre Aonia et geminis sceptrum exitiale tyrannis nec furiiis post fata modum flammisque rebelles seditione rogi tumulisque carentia regum funera et egestas alternis mortibus urbes, caerula cum rubuit Lernaeco sanguine Dirce et Thetis arentes adsuetum stringere ripas horruit ingenti venientem Ismenon acervo.
quem prius heroum, Clio, dabis? immodicum irae

\textsuperscript{1} spirare, P\text{\textit{i}}, Heinsius, Bentley: sperare Pr\text{\textit{o}}.
\textsuperscript{2} teque o P (with u written over the first e): tuque o\text{\textit{w}}, tuque ut Lachmann.
\textsuperscript{3} mature Lachmann: maturi P\text{\textit{w}}.
\textsuperscript{4} Pierio P (laurigero written over by a later hand):
laurigero \text{\textit{w}}.

\textsuperscript{a} The reference is to Domitian’s campaigns against Germans and Dacians, and to the part he took in the fighting on the Capitol between Flavians and Vitellians in a.d. 69.
342
utter the theme of the standards of Italy and the triumphs of the North, or Rhine twice brought beneath our yoke and Ister twice subject to our law and the Dacians hurled down from their conspiring mount, or how in those days of scarce-approaching manhood Jove was forfended from attack, and of thee, O glory added to the Latian name, whom succeeding early to thy sire's latest exploits Rome longs to be her own for ever. Yea, though a closer bound confine the stars, and the shining quarter of the sky that knows nought of Pleiads or Boreas or rending thunderbolt tempt thee, though he who curbs the fiery-footed steeds set with his own hand upon thy locks the exalted radiance of his diadem, or Jupiter yield thee an equal portion of the great heaven, abide contented with the governance of men, thou lord of earth and sea, and give constellations to the sky. A time will come when emboldened by Pierian frenzy I shall recount thy deeds: now do I pitch my harp but to the singing of Aonian arms and the sceptre fatal to both tyrants; of their madness unchecked by death and the strife of flames in the dissension of the funeral pyre; of kings' bodies lacking burial and cities drained by mutual slaughter, when the dark-blue waters of Dirce blushed red with Lernaean gore, and Thetis stood aghast at Ismenes, once wont to graze arid banks, flowing down with mighty heaps of slain. Which hero first dost thou make my theme, O Clio? Tydeus, uncontrolled in \[ b \] The south.

\[ c \] By deifying members of the Imperial house; the idea of stars being divine spirits is an old one in mythology, e.g. Castor and Pollux; it is also found in Plato and his successors.

\[ d \] Boeotian, i.e. Theban.

\[ e \] See xii. 429.
Tydea? laurigeri subitos an vatis hiatus?
urget et hostilem propellens caedibus amnem
turbidus Hippomedon, plorandaque bella protervi Arcados atque alio Capaneus horrore canendus. 45

Impia iam merita scrutatus lumina dextra merserat aeterna damnatum nocte pudorem Oedipodes longaque animam sub morte tenebat.
illum indulgentem tenebris imaeque recessu sedis inaspectos caelo radiisque penates servantem tamen adsiduis circumvolat alis saeva dies animi, secerumque in pectore Dirae.
tunc vacuos orbes, crudum ac miserabile vitae supplicium, ostentat caelo manibusque cruentis pulsat inane solum saevaque ita voce precatur:
"di, santes animas angustaque Tartara poenis qui regitis, tuque umbrifer Styx livida fundo, quam video, multumque mihi consueta vocari adnue. Tisiphone, perversaque vota secunda:
si bene quid merui, si me de matre cadentem fovisti gremio et trajectum vulner plantas firmasti, si stagna peti Cirrhaea bicorni interfusa iugo, possem cum degere falso contentus Polybo, trifidaque in Phocidos arto longaeum implicui regem secuque trementis 65

1 morte P: nocte ω.

---

a Oedipus had torn out his own eyes when he realized that he was guilty of parricide and incest. Statius has in mind the Virgilian "nox atra caput circumvolat" Aen.
vi. 866 (cf. also Hor. S. ii. 1. 58), but here it is the "saeva dies" that hovers round.

b Or, as some take it, "beats upon the empty sockets";
but to beat on the earth was a recognized way of summoning infernal deities.
wrath? the sudden chasm that gaped for the laurel-crowned prophet? Distraught Hippomedon, too, repelling his river-foe with corpses demands my song, and I must lament the gallant Arcadian and his wars, and sing with a yet fiercer thrill the fate of Capaneus. Already had Oedipus with avenging hand probed deep his sinning eyes and sunk his guilty shame in eternal night, abiding in a long and living death. But while he hugs his darkness and the uttermost seclusion of his dwelling, and keeps his secret chamber which the sun's rays and heaven behold not, yet with unwearied wings the fierce daylight of the mind hovers around him, and the Avenging Furies of his crimes assail his heart. Then he displays to heaven those empty orbs, the cruel, pitiful punishment of his life, and with blood-stained hands beats upon the hollow earth, and in dire accents utters this prayer: "Gods who hold sway over guilty souls and over Tartarus crowded with the damned, and thou O Styx, whom I behold, ghastly in thy shadowy depths, and thou Tisiphone, so oft the object of my prayer, be favourable now, and further my unnatural wish: if in aught I have found favour; if thou didst cherish me in thy bosom when I fell from my mother's womb, and didst heal the wounds of my pierced feet; if I sought the lake of Cirrha where it winds between the two summits of the range, when I could have lived contented with the false Polybus, and in the Phocian strait where three ways meet grappled with the aged king and cleft the visage of the trembling dotard,

345
ora senis, dum quaero patrem, si Sphinxos iniquae callidus ambages te praemonstrante resolvi, si dulees furias et lamentabile matris conubium gavisus ini noetemque nefandam saepe tuli natosque tibi, seis ipsa, paravi, 70
mox avidus poenae digitis caedentibus ultro ineubui miseraque oculos in matre reliqui:
exaudi, si digna preecor quaque ipsa furenti subieeres. orbum visu regnisque carentem non regere aut dictis maerentem fleeter adorti, 75
quos genui quoeumque toro : quin eec superbi
—pro dolor !—et nostro iamrudum in funere reges insultant tenebris gemitusque odere paternos.
bisne etiam funestus ego ? et videt ista deorum ignavus genitor ? tu saltel debita vindex 80
hue ades et toto in poenam ordire nepotes.
indue quod madidum tabo diadema eruentis unguibus abripui, votisque instincta paternis
i media in fratres, generis consortia ferro dissiliant. da, Tartarei regina barathri, 85
quod cupiam vidisse nefas, nec tarda sequetur mens iuvenum; modo digna veni,3 mea pignora nosces.”

Talia dicenti crudelis diva severos advertit vultus. inamoenum forte sedebat Cocyton iuxta, resolutaque vertice crines 90
lambere sulpureas perimiserat anguibus undas.
ilicet igne Lovi lapsisque citator astris tristibus exsiluit ripis : discedit inane

1 carentem PL : parentem ɔ.
2 toto in poenam, nepotes ɔ : poenam in toto Baehrens, penates Ed. Parmensis.
3 modo digna veni ɔ : modo dira Lachmann : modo diva Mueller : mens iuvenum, me digna : veni Garrod conj.
346 searching for my true sire; if by wit of thy fore-showing I solved the riddles of the cruel Sphinx; if I knew exulting the sweet ecstasy and fatal union of my mother's bed, and passed many an unhallowed night, and begot sons for thee, as well thou knowest, yet soon, greedy for punishment, did violence to myself with tearing fingers and left my eyes upon my wretched mother—hear me to the end, if my prayer be worthy and such as thou wouldest inspire my raging heart withal. Sightless though I was and driven from my throne, my sons, on whatever eouch begotten, attempted not to give me guidance or consolation in my grief; nay, haughtily (ah! the maddening sting!) and raised to royalty with me long dead, they mock my blindness and abhor their father's groans. Do these too hold me accursed?
and the father of gods beholds it, and does naught?
Do thou at least, my due defender, come hither, and begin a work of vengeance that will blast their seed for ever! Set on thy head the gore-drenched circlet that my bloody nails tore off, and inspired by their father's curses go thou between the brethren, and with the sword sunder the binding ties of kinship.
Grant me, thou queen of Tartarus' abyss, grant me to see the evil that my soul desires, nor will the spirit of the youths be slow to follow; come thou but worthy of thyself, thou shalt know them to be true sons of mine.".

So prayed he, and the cruel goddess turned her grim visage to hearken. By chance she sat beside dismal Coeytus, and had loosed the snakes from her head and suffered them to lap the sulphurous waters.
Straightway, faster than fire of Jove or falling stars she leapt up from the gloomy bank: the crowd of vulgus et occursus dominae pavet; illa per umbras et caligantes animarum examine campos Taenariae limen petit inremeabile portae, sensit adesse Dies, piceo Nox obvia nimbo lucentes turbarit equos; procul arduus Atlas horruit et dubia caelum cervice remisit.
arripit extemplo Maleae de valle resurgens notum iter ad Thebas: neque enim velocior ullas itque reeditque vias cognatave Tartara mavult.
centum illi stantes umbrabant ora cerastae, turba minax\(^1\) diri capitis; sedet intus abactis ferrea lux oculis, qualis per nubila Phoebes Atracia rubet arte labor; suffusa veneno tenditur ac sanie glisit cutis; igneus atro ore vapor, quo longa sitis morbique famesque et populis mors una venit; riget horrida tergo palla, et caerulei redeunt in pectora nodi:
Atropos hos atque ipsa novat Proserpina cultus.
tune geminas quatit ira manus: haec igne rogali fulgurat, haec vivo manus aera verberat hydro.
Ut stetit, abrupta qua plurimus arce Cithaeron occurrit caelo, fera sibila crine virenti congeminat, signum terris, unde omnis Achaei ora maris late Pelopeaque regna resultant.
audiit et medius eaei Parnassos et asper Eurotas, dubiamque iugo fragor impulit Oeten

\(^1\) minax Lachmann: minor \textit{Pw.}\n
\^a\ A promontory in Laconia, which had a cave supposed to be an entrance to the underworld.
\^b\ Edd. who keep “minor” explain either as the lesser half of the crowd of snakes, or as the small fry, compared with the big snake in the Fury’s hand (113).
\^c\ \textit{i.e.}, Thessalian. Thessaly was famous for magic spells and witches, \textit{cf.} iii. 140.

348
phantoms gives way before her, fearing to meet their queen; then, journeying through the shadows and the fields dark with trooping ghosts, she hastens to the gate of Taenarus, whose threshold none may cross and again return. Day felt her presence, Night interposed her pitchy cloud and startled his shining steeds; far off towering Atlas shuddered and shifted the weight of heaven upon his trembling shoulders. Forthwith rising aloft from Malea’s vale she hies her on the well-known way to Thebes; for on no errand is she swifter to go and to return, not kindred Tartarus itself pleases her so well. A hundred horned snakes erect shaded her face, the thronging terror of her awful head; deep within her sunken eyes there glows a light of iron hue, as when Atracian spells make travailing Phoebe redden through the clouds; suffused with venom, her skin distends and swells with corruption; a fiery vapour issues from her evil mouth, bringing upon mankind thirst unquenchable and sickness and famine and universal death. From her shoulders falls a stark and grisly robe, whose dark fastenings meet upon her breast: Atropos and Proserpine herself fashion her this garb anew. Then both her hands are shaken in wrath, the one gleaming with a funeral torch, the other lashing the air with a live water-snake.

She halted, where the sheer heights of vast Cithaeron rise to meet the sky, and sent forth from her green locks fierce repeated hisses, a signal to the land, whereupon the whole shore of the Achaean gulf and the realm of Pelops echoed far and wide. Parnassus also in mid-heaven heard it, and turbulent Eurotas; with the din Oete rocked and staggered, in latus, et geminis vix fluctibus obstitit Isthmos. ipsa suum genetrix curvo delphine vagantem abripuit frenis gremioque Palacmona pressit.

Atque ea Cadmeo praeceps ubi culmine primum constitit adsuetaque infecit nube penates, protinus adtoniti fratrum sub pectore motus, gentilesque animos subiit furor aegraque lactis invidia atque parens odii metus, inde regendi saevus amor, ruptaeque vices iurisque secundi ambitus impatiens, et summo dulcius unum\(^1\) stare loco, sociisque comes discordia regnis. sic ubi delectos per torva armenta iuvencos agricola imposito sociare adfectat aratro, illi indignantes, quis nondum vomere multo ardua nodosos cervix descendit in armos, in diversa trahunt atque aequis vincula laxant viribus et vario confundunt limite sulcos: hand secus indomitos praeceps discordia fratres asperat. alterni placuit sub legibus anni exsilio mutare ducem. sic iure maligno fortunam transire iubent, ut sceptrà tenentem foedere praecipiti semper novus angeret heres. haec inter fratres pietas erat, haec mora pugnae sola nec in regem perduratura secundum. et nondum crasso laquearia fulva\(^2\) metallo, montibus aut alte Grais effulta nitebant atria. congestos satis explicitura clientes: non impacatis regum advigilantia somnis pila, nee alterna ferri statione gementes excubiae nec cura mero committere gemmas atque aurum violare cibis: sed nuda potestas

\(^1\) unum \(P_w\): uno \(D\): uni \(Heinsius.\)
\(^2\) fulva \(P_w\): fulta \(Mueller.\)

\(a\) See note on i. 14.
and Isthmos scarce withstood the waves on either side. With her own hand his mother snatched Palaemon from the curved back of his straying dolphin steed and pressed him to her bosom.

Then the Fury, swooping headlong upon the Cadmean towers, straightway cast upon the house its wonted gloom: troubled dismay seized the brothers’ hearts and the madness of their race inspired them, and envy that repines at others’ happiness, and hate-engendering fear; and then fierce love of power, and breach of mutual covenant, and ambition that brooks not second place, the dearer joy of sole supremacy, and discord that attends on partnered rule. Even so would a farmer fain unite under the plough-yoke two picked bullocks of the savage herd, but they indignant—for not yet has the frequent coulter bowed those arching necks to the sinewy shoulders—pull contrariwise and with strength well-matched break harness and confound the furrows with divers tracks: not otherwise does furious discord enrage the proud brothers. ’Twas agreed to change rule for exile by the ordinance of the alternate year. By a grudging law they bade their fortunes change, so that a new claimant should ever embitter the monarch’s fast-expiring term. No other bond united the brethren, this was their sole stay from arms, nor destined to endure to a second reign. Yet then no ceilings glittered with thick plates of yellow gold, nor did quarried Grecian pillars bear aloft vast halls that could freely spread the serried mass of clients; no spears kept guard o’er a monarch’s troubled slumbers, no sentinels groaned at the recurring duty of the watch; they thought not to entrust precious stones to the wine-cup, nor to soil gold with food; ’twas for armavit fratres, pugna est de paupere regno.
dumque uter angustae squalentia ingera Dirces verteret aut Tyrii solio non altus ovaret exasulis ambigitur, periiit ius fasque bonumque et vitae mortisque pudor. quo tenditis iras,
a. miseri? quid si peteretur crimine tanto limes utere poli, quem Sol emissus Eooc cardine, quem portu vergens prospectat Hibero, quasque procul terras obliquo sidere tangit avius aut borea gelidas madidive tepentes ique noti? non si Phrygiae Tyriaeque sub unum convectentur opes. loca dira areesque nefandae suffecere odio, furiisque immanibus emptum Oedipodae sedisse loco.

Iam sorte earebat2
dilatus Polvnicis honos. quis tunc tibi, saeve, quis fuit ille dies, vaeua cum solus in aula repiceres ius omne tuum cunctosque minores, et nusquam par stare caput? iam murmura serpunt plebis Echioniae, tacitumque a princepe vulgus dissidet, et, qui mos populis, venturus amatur.
atque aliquis, cui mens humili laesisse veneno summa nec impositos umquam cervice volenti ferre duces, "hancne Ogygiis," ait, "aspera rebus fata tulere vicem, totiens mutare timendos alternoque iugo dubitantia subdere colla?
partiti versant populorum fata manuque

1 avius \(\omega\):
2 earebat \(\omega\): cadebat Bernartius.

\(\text{a} \ i.e., \ of \ course, \ Eteocles.\)
\(\text{b} \ \text{Theban, from Echion, king of Thebes.}\)
\(\text{c} \ \text{Theban, from Ogyges, founder of Thebes according to \ one \ legend.}\)
naked power the brethren armed, a starveling realm was their cause of battle. And while they dispute which of the twain shall plough seant Dirce’s squalid fields, or boast himself on the Tyrian exile’s lowly throne, the laws of God and man are broken, righteousness perisheth, and honour both in life and death. Alas! unhappy ones! what limits set ye to your wrath? what if it were the sky’s farthest bounds ye dared so impiously, whereon the sun looks when he issues from the eastern gate and when he sinks into his Iberian haven, or the lands he touches afar with slanting devious ray, lands that the North wind freezes or the moist South warms with fiery breath? nay, even though the wealth of Phrygia and of Tyre were gathered as the prize! A land of horror and a city God-accursed sufficed to rouse your hatred, and hell’s madness was the price of sitting in the seat of Oedipus!

And now by the losing of the hazard Polynices saw his reign deferred. How proud a day for thee, fierce tyrant,a when alone and unchallenged in thy palace thou didst look and behold all power thine, all other men thy subjects, and never a head but bowed beneath thy sway! Yet already murmurs are creeping among the Echionian b folk, the people is at silent variance with its prince, and, as is the wont of a crowd, ’tis the claimant that they love. And one among them, whose chief thought it was to hurt by mean and venomous speech and never to bear the yoke of rulers with submissive neck, said: “Is this the lot that the hard fates have appointed for our Ogygian c land, so often to change those whom we must fear, and to give uncertain allegiance to an alternate sway? From hand to hand they toss the fortunam fecere levem. semperne vicissim exsulibus servire dabor? tibi. summe deorum terrarumque sator, sociis hanc addere mentem sedit?: an inde vetus Thebis extenditur omen, ex quo Sidonii nequiquam blanda iuvenci pondera Carpathio iussus sale quaeerere Cadmus exsul Hyanteos invenit regna per agros, fraternaque acies fetae telluris hiatu augurium seros dimisit ad usque nepotes?: cernis, ut erectum torva sub fronte¹ minetur saevior adsurgens demptō consorte potestas. quas gerit ore minas, quanto premit omnia fastu! hiene umquam privatus erit?: tamen ille precanti mitis et adfatu bonus et patientior aequi. quid mirum?: non solus erat. nos vilis in omnis prompta manus casus, domino cuicumque parati. qualiter hinc gelidus Boreas, hinc nubifer Eurus vela trahunt, nutat mediae fortuna carinae, —heu dubio suspensa metu tolerandaque nullis aspera sors populis!—hic imperat, ille minatur."

At Iovis imperio rapidi super atria caeli lectus concilio divum convenerat ordo interiore polo. spatiis hine omnia iuxta, primaque occiduaeque domus et fusa sub omni terra atque unda die. mediis sese arduus infert ipse deis, placido quatiens tamen omnia vultu, stellantique locat solio: nec protinus ausi caelicolae, veniam donec pater ipse sedendi

¹ sub fronte P.² cervice D.

² Boeotian. See n. on l. 6.
destinies of peoples and of their own accord make Fortune fickle. Am I always to serve princes that take their turn of exile? Is this thy will and purpose for thy kindred realm, great Lord of heaven and earth? Does the ancient augury still have power for Thebes, since Cadmus, bidden search in vain the Carpathian sea for the winsome burden of the Sidonian bull, found an exile’s kingdom in the Hyantean fields, and in the gaping of the pregnant earth bequeathed the warfare of brethren as an omen to his posterity for ever? See how the tyrant, rid of his colleague, rises erect more fiercely threatening under cruel brows! what terror in his look, how overbearing his pride! will this man ever stoop to subject rank? But the other was gentle to our prayers, affable of speech, and more patient of the right. What wonder? he was not alone. A worthless crowd indeed are we, ready for every chance, at the bidding of every lord, whosoever he be! As the sails yield to the cold north wind on this side and to the cloudy east wind on that, and the vessel’s fate hangs wavering—alas! for the cruel, intolerable lot of peoples, racked by doubt and fear!—so now one commands and the other threatens.”

But now by Jove’s command the High Court and chosen council of the gods had assembled in the spacious halls of the revolving sphere, in heaven’s innermost depths. Equally removed from hence is the whole world’s extent, the abodes of east and west, and earth and sea outspread beneath the infinite sky. Loftily through their midst moves the King himself making all tremble, yet with countenance serene, and takes his seat on the starry throne: nor dare they sit, the heavenly ones, until the sire transquillica iubet esse manu. mox turba vagorum semideum et summis cognati nubibus Amnes et compressa metu servantes murmuram Venti aurea tecta replent. mixta convexa deorum maiestate tremunt, radiant maiore sereno culmina et arcano florentes lumine postes. postquam iussa quies siluitque exterritus orbis, incipit ex alto—grave et immutabile sanctis pondus adest verbis, et vocem fata sequuntur—:

" terrarum delicta nec exsaturabile\(^1\) Diris ingenium mortale queror. quonam usque nocentum exigas in poenass? taedet saevire corusco fulmine, iam pridem Cyclopi operosa fatiscunt brachia et Aeolii desunt incudibus ignes. atque adeo tuleram falsa rectore solutos Solis equos, caelumque rotis errantibus ura. et Phaethontea mundum squalere favilla. nil actum, neque tu valida quod cuspide late ire per illicitum pelago, germane. dedisti. nunc geminas punire domos, quis sanguinis auctor ipsa ego, descendendo. Perseos alter in Argos scinditur, Aonias fluit hic ab origine Thebas. mens cunctis imposta manet\(^2\): quis funera Cadmi nesciat et totiens excitam a sedibus imis Eumenidum bellasse aciem, mala gaudia matrum erroresque feros nemorum et reticenda deorum crimina? vix lucis spatio, vix noctis abactae

---

\(^1\) exsaturabile \(P: \) also \(D, \) with exsatiabile written over: exsuperabile \(\omega.\)

\(^2\) imposta manet \(P\omega: \) infausta, infesta, \(\text{etc.}, \) \(\text{edd.}: \) movet \(B\) \(\text{Guyet}: \) manet \(D \) with movet written over.

\(a\) The slaughter of the armed warriors who sprang from the dragon's teeth.

\(b\) The old commentators took this as purposely ambiguous, crimes committed by or against the gods. The latter mean-himself with tranquil hand permit them. Next a crowd of wandering demigods and Rivers, of one kin with the high clouds, and Winds, their clamours hushed by fear, throng the golden halls. The arching vaults of heaven are all agleam with majesty, the heights glow with a fuller radianee, and a light that is not of earth blooms upon the portals. When quiet was commanded and heaven’s orb fell silent, he began from his lofty throne—the sacred words have authority and power immutable, and Destiny waits upon his voice: “Of Earth’s transgressions I complain, and of Man’s mind that no Avenging Powers can satiate. Am I ever to be spent in punishing the wicked? I am weary of venting my anger with the flashing brand, long since are the busy arms of the Cyclopes failing, and the fires droop that serve Aeolian anvils. Yea, I had suffered the Sun’s steeds to run free of their false driver, and heaven to be burned with their straying wheels and earth to be foul with the ashes that once were Phaethon. Yet naught availed it, nor that thou, brother, didst with thy strong spear send the sea flooding wide over the forbidden land. Now am I descending in punishment on two houses, whereof I am myself progenitor. The one branches from the stem to Persean Argos, the other flows from its source to Aonian Thebes. In all the implanted character abides: who knows not Cadmus’ bloodshed and the array of warring Furies so oft summoned from the depths of hell, the mothers’ unhallowed joys and frenzied ranging of the forests, and the reproaches of gods that must be veiled in silence? Scarce would the ing is the easier one, e.g. Niobe, Pentheus, Semele, and it is difficult to see what the other could refer to.

enumerare queam mores gentemque profanam. scandere quin etiam thalamos hic impius heres patris et immeritae gremium incestare parentis appetit, proprios—monstrum¹!—revolutus in ortus. ille tamen superis aeterna piacula solvit proiecitque diem, nec iam amplius aethere nostro vescitur; at nati—facinus sine more!—cadentes calcavere oculos. iam, iam rata vota tulisti, dire senex! meruere tuae, meruere tenebrae ultorem sperare Iovem. nova sontibus arma iniciam regnis, totumque a stirpe revellam exitiale genus. bellii mihi semina sunt Adrastus socer et superis adiuncta sinistris conubia. hanc etiam poenis inessere gentem decretum; neque enim arcano de pectore fallax Tantalus et saevae periti iniuriae mensae.”

Sie pater omnipotens. ast illi saucia dictis flammato versans inopinum corde dolorem talia Iuno refert: “mene, o iustissime divum, me bello certare iubes? scis, semper ut arces Cyclopum magnique Phoroneos inclyta fama sceptra viris opibusque iuven, licet improbus illic custodem Phariae sommo letoque iuvenae exstinguas, saeptis et turribus aureus intres. mentitis ignosco toris: illam odimus urbem, ¹ monstrum D Scaliger; monstro Pw.

---

¹ Lit. “Adrastus as a father-in-law,” i.e., “giving his daughter in marriage.”

² When Tantalus, according to one legend, cut up his son Pelops and boiled him as a feast for the gods. Tantalus was king of Argos, though in some legends king of Lydia or Phrygia. “hanc” therefore means “Argive.”

³ Phoroneus, son of Inachus, was commonly considered period of day or passing night avail me to recount the impious doings of the race. Nay, this unnatural heir has even ventured to climb his father's couch and defile the womb of his innocent mother, returning (oh! horror!) to his own life's origin. Yet he has made atonement everlasting to the gods above, casting forth from himself the light of day, nor any more feeds upon the air of heaven; but his sons (a deed unspeakable) trampled on his eyes as they fell. Now, now are thy prayers fulfilled, terrible old man! deserving art thou, yea, deserving in thy blindness to hope for Jove as thy avenger. New strife will I send upon the guilty realm, and uproot the whole stock of the deadly race. Let the gift of Adrastus' daughter a and her ill-omened nuptials furnish me the seeds of war. This race too I am resolved to scourge with punishment: for never hath the deceit of Tantalus, nor the crime of the pitiless banquet b been forgotten in the secret counsels of my heart.

So spake the Almighty Sire. But wounded by his words and nursing sudden wrath in a heart aflame Juno thus makes answer: "'Tis I, then, justest of gods, I whom thou biddest to engage in war? for thou knowest how I ever give aid of men and might to the Cyclopean towers and the far-famed sceptre of great Phoroneus, although there thou didst ruthlessly east on sleep and slay the guardian of the Pharian heifer, ay, and dost enter barred turrets in a shower of gold. c Concealed amours I pardon thee:

as the founder of Argos, whose walls, like those of other ancient cities, were thought to have been built by the Cyclopes. Argus, the watcher of Io, daughter of Inachus, was slain there, and there Danaë, daughter of king Acrisius, was visited by Jupiter.

359
quam vultu confessus adis, ubi conscia magni signa tori tonitrus agis et mea fulmina torques.
facta luant Thebæ: cur hostes eligis Argos?
quin age, si tanta est thalami discordia sancti, et Samon et veteres armis exscede Mycenas.
verte solo Spartan. cur usquam sanguine festo coniugis ara tuae, cumulo cur turis Eoi laeta calet? melius votis Mareotica fumant Coptos et aerisoni lugentia flumina Nili.
quod si prisca luunt auctorum criminà gentes subvenitque tuis sera sententia curis, percensere aevi senium, quo tempore tandem terrarum furias abolere et saecula retro emendare sat est? iamdudum ab sedibus illis incipe, fluctivaga qua praeterlabitur unda Sicanios longe relegens Alpheos amores.
Arcades hie tua—neec pudor est—delubra nefastis imposuere locis, illie Mavortius axis Oenomai Geticoque pecus stabulare sub Haemo dignius, abruptis etiamnum inhumata procorum relliquiis trunca ora rigent. tamen hie tibi templi gratus honos, placet Ida nocens mentitaeque manes Creta tuos. me Tantaleis consistere terris.\textsuperscript{1}

\textsuperscript{1} terris \textit{Q}; tectis \textit{P}; regnis \textit{D}; considere regnis \textit{Heinsius}.

\textsuperscript{a} Thebes: the reference is to his union with Semele, when he revealed himself in all his majesty with thunder and lightning.

\textsuperscript{b} \textit{i.e.}, why should I be worshipped as a goddess at all, when I am so dishonoured by you? \textit{l. 265} again alludes to Io, with whom Isis, worshipped by the Egyptians, was commonly identified.

\textsuperscript{c} Where were the man-eating horses of king Diomede of Thrace. Those of Oenomans, king of Pisa, used to devour that city. I hate where thou goest undisguised, where thou soundest the thunders that proclaim our high union, and wieldest the lightnings that are mine. Let Thebes atone her crimes; why dost thou choose Argos as her foe? Nay, if such discord hath seized our holy marriage-chamber, go, raze Sparta to the ground, bring war's destruction upon Samos and old Mycenae. Why anywhere is the altar of thy spouse made warm by sacrificial blood or fragrant with heaps of eastern incense? Sweeter is the smoke that rises from the votive shrines of Mareotic Coptos or from the wailing crowds and brazen gongs of river Nile. But if 'tis the evil deeds of former men that mankind now doth expiate, and this resolve hath come so tardily to minister to thy wrath, to cast back thy gaze through days of old, at what far stage of time doth it suffice to drive away earth's madness and purge the backward-reaching ages? Choose straightway that spot for thy beginning where Alpheus following afar the track of his Sicanian love glides by with sea-wandering wave. Here on accursed ground the Arcadians set thee a shrine—yet it shames thee not—here is Oenomaus' chariot of war and the steeds more fitly stalled beneath Getic Haemus, nay even yet the severed heads and mangled corpses of the suitors lie stark and unburied. Yet hast thou here the welcome honours of a temple, yea, and guilty Ida pleases thee, and Crete that tells falsely of thy death. Why dost thou the suitors to the hand of his daughter Hippodamia whom he defeated in a chariot-race.

In Crete; for the charge cf. Callimachus, Hymn to Zeus, l. 8, where he accuses the Cretans of speaking of the death of Zeus, whereas Zeus is alive and immortal.

361
quae tandem invidia est? belli deflecte tumultus et generis miseresce tui. sunt impia late regna tibi, melius generos passura nocentes."

Finierat precibus miscens convicia Iuno.
at non ille gravis dictis, quamquam aspera motu, reddidit haec: "equidem haud rebar te mente secunda laturam, quodcumque tuos, licet aequus, in Argos consulerem, neque me, si detur copia, fallit multa super Thebis Bacchum ausuramque Dionen dicere, sed nostris reverentia ponderis obstat.
horrendos etenim latices, Stygia aequora fratris obtestor, mansurum atque inrevocabile verbum, nil fore, quod dictis flectar! quare impiger alis portantes praecede notos. Cyllenia proles, aera per liquidum regnisque inlapsus opacis die patruo: superas senior se adtollat ad auras Laius, extinctum nati quem vulnere nondum ulterior Lethes accepit ripa profundi lege Erebi; ferat hic diro mea iussa nepoti: germanum exsilio fretum Argolicisque tumentem hospitiis, quod sponte cupit, procul impius aula areeat, alternum regni initiatius honorem.
hinc causae irarum, certo reliqua ordine ducam."

Paret Atlantiades dictis genitoris et inde summa pedum propere plantaribus inligat alis, obnubitque comas et temperat astra galero.

---

1 verbum Scriverius: verum Pw.
2 alis Gruter: ales Pw.

---

a "aspera," because his words were intended to embroil the brothers yet more.
b Mercury, son of Jupiter, born on Mt. Cyllene in Arcadia. His mother Maia was the daughter of Atlas (303).
grudge me then to abide in my Tantalean land? Turn hence the tumults of war, and have compassion on thine own blood. Many a wide and wicked realm hast thou, that can better suffer the erimes of offending sons."

Juno had finished her mingled entreaty and reproach. But he made reply, not in hard words, though cruel was its purport: "In truth I deemed not that thou wouldest bear with favouring mind all that I might devise, albeit justly, against thy Argos, nor does it escape me that, did occasion grant, Bacchus and Dione would dare to make long pleading on Thebes' behalf, but reverence for my authority forbids. For by those awful waters, my brother's Stygian stream, I swear—an oath abiding and irrevocable,—that naught will make me waver from my word! Wherefore, my Cyllenian, in winged speed outstrip the winds that bear thee, and gliding through the limpid air down to the dusky realms tell this message to thy uncle: Let old Laius betake himself to the world above, Laius, whom his son's blow bereft of life and whom by the law of Erebus profound the further bank of Lethe hath not yet received; let him bear my commands to his hateful grandson: His brother, to whom exile has brought confidence and his Argive friendship boastful pride, let him in despite of kin keep far from his halls—as already he doth well desire—and deny him the alternate honour of the crown. So will angry deeds be begotten, and the rest will I lead on in order due."

Obedient to his father's word the grandson of Atlas straightway fastens on his ankles the winged sandals, and with wide hat veils his locks and tempers the brilliance of the stars. Then he took in his right tum dextrae virgam inseruit, qua pellere dulces aut suadere iterum somnos, qua nigra subire Tartara et exsanguis animare adsueverat umbras. desiluit, tenuique exceptus inhorruit\(^1\) aura. nec mora, sublimis raptim per inane volatus earpit et ingenti designat nubila gyro.

Interea patriis olim vagus exsul ab oris Oedipodionides furto deserta pererrat Aoniae. iamiamque animi\(^2\) male debita regna concipit, et longum signis cunctantibus annum stare gemit. tenet una dies noctesque reeursans cura virum, si quando humilem decrederit regno germanum et semet Thebis opibusque potitum cerneret: hac aevum cupiat pro luce\(^3\) paeisei. nune queritur eeu tarda fugae dispendia, sed mox attollit flatus ducis et sedisse superbus deiecto iam fratre putat: spes anxia mentem extrahit et longo consumit gaudia voto.
tune sedet Inachias urbes Danaeiaque arva et caligantes abrupto sole Mycenas ferre iter impavidum, seu praevia ducit Erinys, seu fors illa viae, sive hac immota voeabat Atropos. Ogygiis ululata furoribus antra deserit et pingues Baccheo sanguine colles, inde plagam, qua molle sedens in plana Cithaeron porrigitur lassumque inclinat ad aequora montem,

\(^1\) inhorruit in \(D\) has “perstrept” written above it.
\(^2\) animi \(\text{Mueller: animis } P_\omega\text{: animus } Q\text{ Baehrens.}\)
\(^3\) luce \(P_\omega\text{: laude } Q\text{ (luce above).}\)

\(a\) Or “hurtled”; see critical note.
\(b\) Inachus and Danaus were former kings of Argos. Mycenae was shrouded in darkness as a sign of divine anger.
hand the wand wherewith he was wont to dispel or call again sweet slumber, wherewith to enter the gates of gloomy Tartarus or summon back dead souls to life. Then down he leapt, and shuddered\(^a\) as the frail air received him; delaying not, he wings his speedy flight through the void on high, and draws a mighty curve upon the clouds.

Meanwhile the son of Oedipus, long time a wandering outlaw from his father’s lands, traverses by stealth the waste places of Aonia. Already he broods on the lost realm that was his due, and cries that the long year stands motionless in its tardy constellations. One thought recurring night and day holds him, could he ever but behold his kinsman degraded from the throne, and himself master of Thebes and all its power; a lifetime would he bargain for that day. Now he complains that his exile is but time consumed in idleness, but soon the gust of princely pride swells high, and he fancies his brother already cast down and himself seated proudly in his place; fretful hope keeps his mind busy, and in far-reaching prayers he tastes all his heart’s desire. Then he resolves to journey undismayed to the Inachian cities and Danaan lands and to Mycenae dark with the sun’s withdrawal,\(^b\) whether it were the Fury piloting his steps, or the chance direction of the road, or the summoning of resistless Fate. He leaves the Ogygian glades that resound with frenzied howlings, and the hills that drink deep of Bacchic gore,\(^c\) then passes the region where long Cithaeron settles gently to the plain and stoops his weary height to the sea.

when Atreus served up the sons of Thyestes as a meal for their father.

\(^a\) Blood shed in worship of Bacchus.
praeterit. hinc arte scopuloso in limite pendens infames Scirone petras Seyllaeaque rura purpureo regnata seni mitemque Corinthion linquit et in mediis audit duo litora campis

Iamque per emeriti surgens confinia Phoebi Titanis late, mundo subiecta silenti, rorifera gelidum tenuaverat aera biga: iam pecudes volucresque tacent, iam Somnus avaris inrepsit curis pronusque ex aethere mutat, grata laboratae referens oblivia vitae. sed nec puniceo rediturum nubila caelo promisere iubar, nec rarescentibus umbris longa repercusso nituere crepuscula Phoebo: densior a terris et nulli pervia flammae subtextit noxa atra polos. iam claustra rigentis Aeoliae percussa sonant, venturaque raucore minatur hiemps, venti transversa frementes confligunt axemque emoto cardine vellunt, dum caelum sibi quisque rapit; sed plurimus Auster inglomerat noctem, tenebrosa volumina torquens, defunditque imbres, sicco quos asper hiatu praesolidat Boreas; nec non abrupta tremiscunt fulgura, et attritus subita face rumpitur aether. iam Nemea,1 iam Taenariis contermina lucis Arcadiae capita alta madent; ruit agmine magno Inachus et gelidas surgens Erasimus in undas.2

1 Nemea ω: Nemeae P.

a Seylla was the daughter of Nisus, king of Megara, who had the purple lock.
b i.e., there was no morning twilight giving promise of Thereafter with dizzy climb along a rocky path he puts behind him Sciron’s infamous cliffs and Scylla’s country where the purple monarch ruled, and kindly Corinth, and in the midmost plain hears two shores resound.

But now through the wide domains which Phoebus, his day’s work ended, had left bare, rose the Titanian queen, borne upward through a silent world, and with her dewy chariot cooled and rarefied the air; now birds and beasts are hushed, and Sleep steals o’er the greedy cares of men, and stoops and beckons from the sky, shrouding a toilsome life once more in sweet oblivion. Yet no reddening clouds gave promise of the light’s return, nor as the shadows lessened did the twilight gleam with long shafts of sun-reflecting radiance; black night, blacker to earthward and shot by never a ray, veiled all the pole. And now the rocky prisons of Aeolia are smitten and groan, and the coming storm threatens with hoarse bellowing: the winds loud clamouring meet in conflicting currents, and fling loose heaven’s vault from its fastened hinges, while each strives for mastery of the sky; but Auster most violent thickens gloom on gloom with whirling eddies of darkness, and pours down rain which keen Boreas with his freezing breath hardens into hail; quivering lightnings gleam, and from the colliding air bursts sudden fire. Already Nemea and the high peaks of Arcadia that border the forests of Taenarum are drenched; Inachus flows in mighty spate, and Erasinus swelling the coming day. “longa” might be taken as long-abiding, not far-streaming.

The domain of Aeolus, lord of the winds, as in Virg. Aen. i. 52.
pulverulenta prius calcataque flumina nullae aggeribus tenuere morae, stagoque refusa est funditus et veteri spumavit Lerna veneno.
frangitur omne nemus, rapiunt antiqua procellae bracchia silvarum, nullisque aspecta per aevum solibus umbrosi patuere aestiva Lycaei. ille tamen, modo saxa iugis fugientia ruptis miratus, modo nubigenas e montibus amnes aure¹ pavens passimque insano turbine raptas pastorum pecorumque domos, non segnius amens incertusque viae per nigra silentia vastum haurit iter; pulsat metus undique et undique frater.
ae velut hiberno deprensus navita ponto,
cui neque Temo piger neque amico sidere monstrat Luna vias, medio caeli pelagique tumultu stat rationis inops, iamiamque aut saxa malignis exspectat submersa vadis aut vertice acuto spumantes scopulos erectae incurrere prorae:
talis opaca legens nemorum Cadmeius heros adcelerat, vasto metuenda umbone ferarum exeutiens stabula, et prono virgulta refringit pectore; dat stimulos animo vis maesta timoris, donec ab Inachiis victa caligine tectis eniet lucem devesa in moenia fundens Larisaeus apex. illo spe concitus omni evolat, hinc celsae Lunonia templae Prosymnae laevus habens, hinc Hercules signata vapore Lernaei stagna atra vadi, tandemque reclusis

¹ aure Po: ire Lachmann.

---

a Nothing else is known of this place.
b Hercules used fire to burn away the hydra’s heads.
high into icy billows. Streams that before were dusty road-tracks now defy all stay of confining bank, Lerna surges up from her deepest depths and foams with her ancient poison. Shattered are all the forests, aged boughs are swept out upon the storm, and the shady summer-haunts of Lycaeus, unbeheld before by any suns, are now stripped bare to view. Yet he, now marvelling at the rocks down-hurled from the cloven mountains, now listening in terror to the cloud-born torrents dashing from the hills, and the raging flood whirling away home of shepherd and stall of beast, slackens not his pace, though distraught and uncertain of his way, but through the dark silences devours the lonely stretches of his road; on every side fear and the thought of his brother assail his heart. And just as a sailor, caught in a tempest on the deep, to whom neither lazy Wain nor Moon with friendly beam show bearings, stands beggared of resource in mid-tumult of sky and sea, and even now expects the treacherous reef submerged beneath the wave, or waits to see foaming jagged rocks fling themselves at his prow and heave it high in air: so the Cadmean hero threads the darkness of the forests with hastening step, while with huge shield he braves the lairs of fearsome beasts and forward-stooping thrusts through the brushwood thickets; terror's sombre influence adds spurs to his resolve, till from above the town of Inachus, conquering the gloom with beam of light downpoured upon the shelving walls, shone forth the Larissaeian height. Thither sped by every hope he hies him fast, with Juno's temple of Prosymna a high on his left hand, and yonder the black marsh of Lerna's water branded by Herculean fire, b and at infertur portis. actutum regia cernit vestibula; hic artus imbru ventoque rigentes proicit ignotaeque adelinis postibus aulae invitat tennes ad duras cubilia somnos.

Rex ibi tranquille, medio de limite vitae in senium vergens, populos Adrastus habebat, dives aves et utroque Iovem de sanguine dueens. hic sexus melioris inops, sed prole virebat feminea, gemino natarum pignore fultus, cui Phoebus generos—monstrum exitiabile dictu! 395 mox adaperta fides—fato ducente canebat saetigerumque suem et fulvum adventare leonem. id volvens non ipse pater, non docte futuri Amphiarae vides, etenim vetat auctor Apollo, tantum in corde sedens aegrescit cura parenti.

Ecce autem antiquam fato Calydonia relinquens Olenius Tydeus—fratrem sanguinis illum conscius horror agit—eadem sub nocte sopora lustra terit, similisque notos dequestus et imbres, infusam tergo glaciem et liquentia nimbis ora comasque gerens subit uno tegmine, euis fusus humo gelida partem prior hospes habebat. hic vero ambobus rabiem fortuna cruentam adtulit: haud passi sociis defendere noctem culminibus, paulum alternis in verba minasque cunctantur; mox ut iactis sermonibus irae intumuere satis, tum vero erectus uterque exsertare umeros nudamque lacesse pugnam. celsior ille gradu proeera in membra simulque

1 fato P: aevo ω.
2 Olenius P:\: Oenius D: Oeneus Heinsius.

* i.e., Aetolian, from a town called Olenos.
length the gates are opened and he enters. Straightway he spies the royal portals; there he flings down his limbs stiffened with rain and wind, and leaning against the unknown palace doors woos gentle slumber to his hard couch.

There king Adrastus, verging now toward old age from life's mid-course, ruled his folk in tranquil governance, rich in the wealth of ancestry, and on either side tracing his line to Jove. Issue lacked he of the stronger sex, but was prosperous in female offspring: two daughters gave him pledge of love and service. To him had Phoebus at fate's bidding told that sons-in-law drew nigh—a deadly horror to tell! yet soon was the truth made manifest—in the shapes of bristly swine and tawny lion. Naught comprehends the sire therein for all his ponderings, nor thou, wise Amphiaraus, for thy master Apollo forbids. Only the father's heart sickens ever in deep-felt anxiety.

But lo! Olenian Tydeus leaving ancient Calydon by fate's decree—the guilty terror of a brother's blood drives him forth—treads beneath night's slumbrous veil the same wild ways, bewailing likewise wind and rain, and with ice-sheeted back, and face and hair streaming with the storm, comes to the self-same shelter, whereof the former stranger, stretched on the cold earth, had part. Thereat so chanced it that both were seized with bloody rage, and suffered not a shared roof to ward off the night; for a while they tarry with exchange of threatening words, then when flung taunts had swelled their anger to the pitch, each uprose, set free his shoulders, and challenged to naked combat. Taller the Theban, with long stride and towering limbs and in life's integer annorum, sed non et viribus infra Tydea fert animus, totosque infusa per artus maior in exiguo regnabat corpore virtus.
iam erebros ictus ora et cava tempora circum
obnixi ingeminant, telorum aut grandinis instar Riphaeae, flexoque genu vacua ilia tundunt.
non aliter quam Pisaeo sua lustra Tonanti cum redeunt crudisque virum sudoribus ardet pulvis; at hinc teneros caveae dissensus ephebos concitat, exclusaeque exspectant praemia matres:
sie alacres odio nullaque cupidine laudis accensi incurrunt, serutatur et intima vultus uncia manus penitusque oculis cedentibus intrat.² forsan et accinctos lateri—sie ira ferebat—nudassent enses, meliusque hostilibus armis lugendus fratri, iuvenis Thebane, iaceres, ni rex, insolitum clamorem et pectore ab alto stridentes gemitus noctis miratus in umbris, movisset gressus, magnis cui sobria curis pendebat somno iam deterioro senectus.
isque ubi progresdiens numerosa luce per alta atria dimotis adverso limine claustris terribilem dictu faciem, lacera ora putresque sanguineo videt imbre genas: "quae causa furoris, externi iuvenes—neque enim meus audeat istas civis in usque manus—, quisnam implacabilis ardor exturbare odiis tranquilla silentia noctis?
usque adeone angusta dies et triste, parumper pacem animo somnunque pati? sed prodite tandem, unde orti, quo fertis iter, quae iurgia? nam vos

¹ sed Pω: nec Priscian. ² intrat P: instat ω.

a Statius here has Homer in mind: μικρὸς μὲν ἐν δέμας, ἀλλὰ μαχητῆς (of Tydeus, II. v. 801).
b i.e., Olympian Zeus.

372
prime, yet was Tydeus in strength and spirit no whit the less, and though his frame was smaller greater valour in every part held sway. Then closing fiercely they deal many a blow on face and temple, like showers of darts or Rhipaeian hail, and with bent knee belabour hollow loins. Even as when the fifth year brings back his festival to the Pisaean Thunderer, and all is dust and heat and the crude sweat of men, while yonder the rival favours of the crowd urge on the youthful striplings, and the mothers, excluded from the scene, await the prizes of their sons: so these with but hate to spur them, and inflamed by no lust of praise, fall on, and the sharp nails probe far into their faces and force their way into the yielding eyes. Perchance—so hot their anger—they had bared the swords girt to their sides, and thou hadst lain, O Theban youth, the victim of a foeman's arms—far better so—and earned a brother's meed of tears, had not the king, marvelling at the night's unwonted clamour and the fierce panting groans deep-heaved, bent his steps thither: age and the burden of grave cares held him now in broken fitful slumber. And when proceeding through the high halls with attendant train of torches he beheld, the bars undone, upon the fronting threshold a sight terrible to tell, faces torn and cheeks disfigured with streaming blood: "Whence this fury, stranger youths?" he cried, "for no citizen of mine would dare such violence as this; whence this implacable desire to let your hate disturb the tranquil silence of the night? Has then day so little room, or is it grievous to suffer, even for a while, sleep and peace of mind? But now come tell me, whence are ye sprung, whither do ye fare, and what may be haud humiles tanta ira docet, generisque superbi magna per effusum clarescunt signa eruorem.”

Vix ea, cum mixto clamore obliqua tuentes incipiant una: “rex o mitissime Achivum, quid verbis opus? ipse undantis sanguine vultus aspicis. haec passim turbatis vocis amarae confudere sonis; inde orsus in ordine Tydeus continuat: “maestī cupiēs solacia casus monstrīrae Calydoniae opes Acheloiaque arva deserui; vestris hæc me ece in finibus ingens nox operit. tecto caelum prohibere quis iste arcuit? an quoniam prior haec ad limina forte molitus gressus? pariter stabulare bimembres Centauros unaque ferunt Cyclopas in Aetna compositos. sunt et rabidis iura insita monstrī fasque suum: nobis sociare1 cubilia terrae— sed quid ego? aut hodie spoliis gavisus abibis, quisquis es. his, aut me, si non effetus oborto sanguis hebet luctu, magni de stirpe creatum Oeneos et Marti non degenerare paterno accipies.” “nee nos animi nee stirpis egentes—” ille refert contra, sed mens sibi conscia fati cunctatur proferre patrem. tunc mitis Adrastus: “immo agite, et positis, quas nox inopinaque suasit aut virtus aut ira, minis succedite tecto. iam pariter coeant animorum in pignora dextrae. non haec ineassum divisque absentibus acta; forsan et has venturus amor praemiserit iras,

1 suum nobis Pω: suum ut nobis Garrod: nobis sociare Pω: sociae novisse Postgate: binos sociare Housman: norunt sociare Baehrens. Housman brackets as parenthesis sunt... suum, Garrod sunt... nobis.
your quarrel? Mean of soul ye cannot be—such anger proves it—even through bloodshed the noble signs of a proud race show clear."

Scarce had he spoken, when with mingled clamour and sidelong glance together they begin: "Achaean prince! most gracious monarch! what need of words? thou seest thyself this face all bloody"—their words are lost in the confused sound of bitter accents. Then Tydeus taking first place of speech thus recounts his tale: "Desiring solace for my unhappy lot I left the wealth of Calydon, nurse of monsters, and the Acheloian fields: and lo! in your boundaries deepest night o'ertakes me. Who was he to forbid me shelter from the sky? or was it because he won his way first to this threshold? But twyform Centaurs stall with each other, so 'tis said, and Cyclopes have peace together beneath Aetna; nay even to wild monsters nature has given laws and their own rule of right; and for us to share a lodging on the ground—? but why waste words? either thou, whoe'er thou art, shalt to-day depart rejoicing in my spoils, or, if rising pain dulls not my blood, thou shalt know me to be of mighty Oeneus' stock and no degenerate scion of my forefather Mars!"

"Nor lack I spirit or race" returns the other, but conscious in his heart of ruthless fate he hesitates to name his sire. Then kindly Adrastus: "Nay come now, cease the threatening words which night or sudden wrath or valour prompted, and pass beneath my palace-roof. Now let your right hands be joined to pledge your hearts. These doings have not been vain nor without the sanction of the powers above: perchance even these angry quarrels do but foreshadow a friendship to come, so that ye may have ut meminisse iuvet.” nce vana voce locutus fata senex, siquidem hanc perhibent per vulnera iunctis isse^2 fide^3, quanta partitum extrem*a protervo Thesea Pirithoo, vel inanem mentis Oresten opposito rabidam Pylade vitasse Megaeram.
tunc quoque mulcentem dictis corda aspera regem iam faciles, ventis ut decertata residunt aequora, laxatisque diu tamen aura superstes immoritur velis, passi subiere penates.

Hie primum lustrare oculis cultusque virorum telaque magna vacat: tergo videt huius inanem impexis utrimque iubis horrere leonem, illius in speciem, quem per Teumernia tempe amicis vestitus proelia monstri. terribiles contra saetis ac dente recurvo Tydea per latos uernos ambire laborant exuviae, Calydonis honos. stupet omne tanto defixus senior, divina oracula Phoebi agnoscess monitusque datos vocalibus antris. obtutu gelida ara premit, laetisque per artus horror iit; sensit manifesto numine ductos adfore, quos nexit ambagibus augur Apollo portendi generos, vultu fallente ferarum, ediderat. tunc sic tendens ad sidera palmas: “nox, quae terrarum caelique amplexa labores ignea multivago transmittis sidera lapsu,

1 per P: post ω. 2 isse Gruter: esse Pω. 3 annis Pb: armis ω: annis D (with armis above).

a Because he tried to carry off Proserpine.
b One of the Furies who pursued Orestes when he had slain his mother.
c Teumesus is a mountain near Thebes.
376
pleasure in remembrance." Nor were the old man's words an empty presage, for they say that from their comradeship in wounds grew such loyalty as Theseus showed when he shared extremest peril with wanton a Pirithous, or Pylades when he rescued distraught Orestes from the fury of Megaera. b So then, yielding their savage hearts to the king's soothing words—even as waters that winds have made their battleground sink to rest, and yet on the drooping sails one surviving breath is long in dying—even so submissive they entered the palace.

Here first he has leisure to let his glance pass o'er the heroes' dress and mighty weapons. On Polynices' back he spies a lion flayed, all rough with uncombed mane, like to that one which in the Teumesian c glades Amphitryon's son laid low in his boyish years and clothed himself withal, before the battle with the monster of Cleonae. d Tydeus' broad shoulders the proud spoils of Calydon, grim with bristles and curved fang, strive to enfold. Aghast and motionless stands the old king at so dire an omen, calling to mind the divine oracles of Phoebus and the warning uttered from the inspired cell. His countenance is fixed in frozen silence, while through his limbs ran a thrill of joy; he felt that they had come, led by heaven's clear prompting, whom prophetic Apollo in riddling obscurities had fore-shown to be his destined sons-in-law, under the feigned guise of beasts. Then stretching forth his hands to the stars, "O Night," he cries, "who eastest thy mantle over toiling earth and heaven, and sendest the fiery stars on their divers roaming courses, a The Nemean lion; Cleonae, a village near Nemea.

indulgens reparare animum, dum proximus aegris 500
infundat Titan agiles animantium ortus, tu mihi perplexis quaesitam erroribus ultro advehis alma fidem veterisque exordia fati detegis: adsistas operi tuaque omina firmes.
semper honoratam dimensis orbibus anni
| te domus ista colet: nigri tibi, diva, litabunt
| electa cervice greges, lustraliaque exta
| lacte novo perfusus edet Vulcanius ignis.
salve prisca fides tripodum obscureique recessus!
deprendi, Fortuna, deos!" sic fatus, et ambos 510 innetens manibus tecta interioris¹ ad aulae progreditur. canis etiamnum altaribus ignes sopitum cinerem et tepidi libamina saeri servabant; adolere focos epulasque recentes instaurare iubet. dictis parere ministri
| certatim adcelerant: vario strepit icta tumultu
| regia: pars ostro tenues auroque sonantes
| emunire toros alteque inferre tapetas, pars teretes levare manu ae disponere mensas.
| ast alii tenebras et opacam vincere noctem
| adgressi tendunt auratis vincula lychnus.
| his labor inserto torrere exsanguia ferro
| viscera caesarum pecudum, his cumulare canistris
| perdomitam saxo Cererem; lactatur Adrastus
| obsequio fervere domum.

Iamque ipse superbis 525
fulgebat stratis solioque effultus eburno.
parte alia iuvenes siccati vulnera lymphis discumbunt, simul ora notis foedata tuentur

¹ interioris Schrader: ulterioris Pω.
gracious refresher of the mind, till the next sun shed blithe upspringing upon faint mortality, thou, kindly Night, dost bring me of thy bounty assurance long sought in perplexity and doubt, and dost reveal the ancient purposes of fate: aid now my work, and certify the omens thou hast given. Ever shall this house throughout the circling periods of the year hold thee high in honour and in worship; black bulls of chosen beauty shall pay thee sacrifice, O goddess! and Vulcan's fire shall eat the lustral entrails, where-o'er the new milk streams. Hail, ancient truth of mystic Tripod! hail, secret grotto! I have found, O Fortune, that the gods are gods indeed!" So saying, and joining arms with both he goes forward to the inner chamber of his dwelling. Even yet the fires slumbered in the grey ashes on the altars, and the poured offerings of the sacrifice were yet warm; he bids the flames again be roused and the late banquet be renewed. His henchmen obey his words in emulous haste: manifold tumult echoes throughout the palace. Some array the couches with delicate purple and rustling embroidery of gold and pile the cushions high, some polish smooth and place in order the tables: others again set about to banish the darkness of gloomy night by stretching chains for gilded lanterns; these have the task of roasting on a spit's point the bloodless flesh of slain beasts, those of crushing grain on a stone and heaping the bread in baskets; Adrastus rejoices to see his house aglow with obedient service.

And now he himself, raised high on the proud cushions of an ivory throne, shone resplendent; elsewhere the youths recline, their wounds healed with cleansing water, and beholding each other's
STATIUS

inque vicem ignoscunt. tunc rex longaeus Acasten—natarum haec altrix eadem et fidissima custos 530 lecta saerum iustae Veneri occultare pudorem—imperat acciri tacitaque immurmurat aure.¹

Nec mora praeeptis, eum protinus utraque virgo arcano egressae thalamo : mirabile visu, Pallados armisonae pharetrataeque ora Dianae 535 aequa ferunt, terrore minus. nova deinde pudori visa virum facies : pariter pallorque ruborque purpureas hausere genas, oculique verentes ad sanctum rediere patrem. postquam ordine mensae vieta fames, signis perfectam auroque nitentem 540 lasides pateram famulos ex more poposcit, qua Danaus libare deis seniorque Phoroneus adsueti. tenet haec operum caelata figuras:
aureus² anguicomam praeesecto Gorgona collo ales habet, iamiamque vagas—ita visus³—in auras 545 exsilit ; illa graves oculos languentiaque ora paene movet vivoque etiam pallescit in auro.
hinc Phrygius fulvis venator tollitur alis, Gargara desidunt surgenti et Troia recedit, stant maesti comites, frustraque sonantia lassant 550
ora canes umbramque petunt et nubila latrant.
hanc undante nero fundens vocat ordine cunctos caelicolas, Phoebum ante alios, Phoebum omnis ad aram

¹ tacitaque . . . aure Pω: tacitaeque . . . auri Klotz: tacite-que . . . auri Deipser: tacitoque . . . ore Koestlin.
² aureus Pω : Perseus Bentley.
³ ita visus Pω : gavisus D.

¹ “hausere” is used by a startling zeugma both with “pallor” (its natural use), and with “rubor” (for “suffuses”).
² He was a former king of Argos.
380
scarred visages bear mutual forgiveness. Then the aged king bids Acaste be summoned—his daughters’ nurse and trusty guardian, chosen to keep ward on maiden modesty consecrated to lawful wedlock—and murmurs in her silent ear.

She stayed not upon his bidding, but straightway both maidens came forth from their secret bower, in countenance, marvellous to tell, like to quiver-bearing Diana and warrior Pallas, yet without their terror. They spy the new faces of the heroes and are shamed; pallor at once and blushes made havoc of their bright cheeks, and their timorous eyes resought their reverend sire. When in the banquet’s course hunger was quelled, the son of Iasus, as his custom was, bade his thralls bring a goblet fair-wrought with figures and shining with gold, wherefrom both Danaus and elder Phoroneus were wont to pour libation to the gods. Thereon was embossed work of images: all golden, a winged youth holds the snake-tressed Gorgon’s severed head, and even upon the moment—so it seems—leaps up into the wandering breeze; she almost moves her heavy eyes and drooping head, and even grows pale in the living gold. Here the Phrygian hunter is borne aloft on tawny wings, Gargara’s range sinks downwards as he rises and Troy grows dim beneath him; sadly stand his comrades, in vain the hounds weary their throats with barking and pursue his shadow or bay at the clouds. From this he pours the streaming wine and in order due calls on all the denizens of heaven. Phoebus before the rest; Phoebus’ presence all gold is naturally pale, and so suggests the face growing pale in death: “vivo” means the natural, native metal, cf. “vivoque sedilia saxo.”

381
laude ciet comitum famulumque evineta pudica fronde manus, cui festa dies largoque refecti ture vaporatis lucent altaribus ignes.

"Forsitan, o iuvenes, quae sint ea sacra quibusque praecipuum causis Phoebi obtestemur honorem" rex ait, "exquirant animi. non inscia suasit relligio, magnis exreita cladibus olim plebs Argiva litant; animos advertite, pandam.
postquam caerulei sinuosa volumina monstri, terrigenam Pythona deus se septem orbibus atris amplexum Délphos squamisque annosa terentem robor, Castaliis dum fontibus ore trisuleo fusus hiat nigro sitiens alimenta veneno, perculit, absumptis numerosa in vulnera telis, Cirrhaeique dedit centum per ingera campi vix tandem explicitum. nova deinde piacula caedis perquirens nostri tecta haund opulenta Crotopi attigit. huie primis et pubem incunibus annis mira decore pios servabat nata penates intemerata toris. felix, si Delia numquam furta nec occultum Phoebo sociasset amorem!
namque ut passa deum Nemeaei ad fluminis undam, bis quinos plena cum fronte resumeret orbes Cythuthia, sidereum Latonae feta nepotem edidit; ac poenae metuens—neque enim ille eoactis donasset thalamis veniam pater—avia rura eligit ae natum saepta inter ovilia furtim montivago pecoris custodi mandat alendum.
non tibi digna, puer, generis eunabula tanti

1 pios Bentley: pio Pw.

a From Cirrha, the port of Delphi; so l. 641.
invoke with praise, garlanded with reverent myrtle, friend and thrall alike, about his altar; for in his honour they make holiday, and the altars, refreshed by lavish incense, glow through wreaths of smoke.

"Perchance ye may inquire, O youths," thus says the monarch, "what means this sacrifice, and for what reason we pay Phoebus signal honour. Urged by no ignorant fear, but under stress of dire calamity, the Argive folk aforetime made this offering. Lend me your hearing, and I will recount the tale. When that the god had smitten the dark and simuous-coiling monster, the earth-born Pytho, who cast about Delphi his sevenfold grisly circles and with his scales ground the ancient oaks to powder, even while sprawling by Castalia's fountain he gaping with three-tongued mouth athirst to feed his deadly venom: when having spent his shafts on numberless wounds he left him, scarce fully stretched in death over a hundred acres of Cirrhaean soil, then, seeking fresh expiation of the dead, he came to the humble dwelling of our king Crotopus. A daughter, in the first years of tender maidenhood, and wondrous fair, kept this pious home, a virgin chaste. How happy, had she ne'er kept secret tryst with the Delian, or shared a stolen love with Phoebus! For she suffered the violence of the god by Nemea's stream, and when Cynthia had twice five times gathered her circle's visage to the full, she brought forth a child, Latona's grandson, bright as a star. Then fearing punishment—for her sire would ne'er have pardoned a forced wedlock—she chose the pathless wilds, and stealthily among the sheep-pens gave her child to a mountain-wandering guardian of the flock for nurture. No cradle worthy of a birth so noble, hapless gramineos dedit herba toros et vime querno texta domus; clausa arbutei sub cortice libri membra tepent, suadetque leves cava fistula somnos, et pecori commune solum. sed fata nec illum 586 concessere larem; viridi nam caespite terrae proiectum temere et patulo caelum ore trahentem dira canum rabies, morsu depasta cruento, dissicet. hic vero attonitas ut nuntius aures 590 matris adit, pulsi ex animo genitorque pudorque et metus: ipsa ultro saevis plangoribus amens teeta replet, vacuumque ferens velamine pectus occurrir confessa patri; nec motus et atro imperat—infandum!—cupientem occumbere leto. 595 sero memor thalami maestae solacia morti, Phoebe, paras monstrum infandis Acheronte sub imo conceptum Eumenidum thalamis, cui virginis ora pectoraque; aeternum stridens a vertice surgit et ferrugineam frontem discriminat anguis. 600
haec tum dira lues nocturno squalida passu inlabi thalamis, animasque a stirpe recentes abripere altricum gremii morsuque cruento devesci et multum patrio pinguescere luctu.
haud tulit armorum praestans animique¹ Coroebus 605
seque ultro lectis iuvenum, qui robore primi famam posthabita faciles extendere vita, obtulit. illa novos ibat populata penates portarum in bivio—lateri duo corpora parvum dependent, et iam una manus vitalibus haeret 610 ferratique unguies tenero sub corde tepeseunt—:
obvius huic, latus omne virum stipante corona,

¹ animique P: animisque D.
infant, did thy grassy bed afford thee, or thy woven home of oaken twigs; enclosed in the fibre of arbutus-bark thy limbs are warm, and a hollow pipe coaxes thee to gentle slumbers, while the flock shares thy sleeping-ground. But not even such a home did the fates permit, for, as he lay careless and drinking in the day with open mouth, fierce ravening dogs mangled the babe and took their fill with bloody jaws. But when the tidings reached the mother's horror-struck ears, father and shame and fear were all forgot; herself straightway she fills the house with wild lamentation, all distraught, and baring her breast meets her father with her tale of grief. Nor is he moved, but bids her—Oh horrible!—even as she desires, suffer grim death. Too late remembering thy union, O Phoebus, thou dost devise a solace for her miserable fate, a monster conceived 'neath lowest Acheron in the Furies' unhallowed lair: a maiden's face and bosom has she, from her head an ever-hissing snake rises erect, parting in twain her livid brow. Then that foul pest, gliding at night with unseen movement into the chambers, tore from the breasts that suckled them lives newly-born, and with blood-stained fangs gorged and fattened on the country's grief. But Coroebus, foremost in prowess of arms and high courage, brooked it not, and with chosen youths, unsurpassed in valour and ready at life's hazard to enlarge their fame, went forth, a willing champion. From dwellings newly ravaged she was going, where in the gateway two roads meet, the corpses of two little ones hung at her side, and still her hooked talons claw their vitals and the iron nails are warm in their young hearts. Thronged by his band of heroes the youth rushed to the attack, fit iuvenis, ferrumque ingens sub pectore duro condidit, atque imas animae mucrone corusco scrutatus latebras tandem sua monstra profundo 615 reddit habere Iovi. iuvat ire et visere iuxta liventes in morte oculos uterique nefandam proluviem et crasso squalentia pectora tabo, qua nostrae cecidere animae. stupet Inacha pubes, magnaque post lacrimas etiamnum gaudia pallent. 620 hi trabibus duris, solacia vana dolori, proterere examinos artus asprosque molares deculcare genis: nequit iram explere potestas. illam et nocturno circum stridore volantes impastae fugistis aves, rabidamque canum vim 625 oraque sicca ferunt trepiderum inhiasse luporum. saevior in miseros fatis ultricis ademptae Delius insurgit, summaque biverticis umbra Parnassi residens arcu crudelis iniquo pestifera arma iacit, camposque et celsa Cyclopum 630 tecta superiecto nebularum incendit amictu. labuntur dulces animae, Mors fila Sororum ense metit captamque tenens fert manibus urbem. quaerenti, quae causa, duci, quis ab aethere laeves ignis et in totum regnaret Sirius annum, 635 idem auctor Paean rursus iubet ire cruento inferias monstro iuvenes, qui caede potiti. fortunate animi longumque in saecula digne promeriture diem! non tu pia degener arma occulis aut certae trepidas occurrere morti. 640

1 fit P: it w.

386
and buried his broad blade in her cruel breast, and with flashing steel probing deep the spirit's lurking-place at length restored to nether Jove his monstrous offspring. What joy to go and see at close hand those eyes livid in death, the ghastly issue of her womb, and her breasts clotted with foul corruption, whereby our young lives perished! Appalled stand the Inachian youth, and their gladness, though great now sorrow is ended, even yet is dim and pale. With sharp stakes they mangle the dead limbs—vain solace for their grief—and beat out the jagged grinding teeth from her jaws: they can—yet cannot glut their ire. Her did ye flee unfed, ye birds, wheeling round with nocturnal clamour, and ravening dogs, they say, and wolves gaped in terror upon her, dry-mouthed.' But against the unhappy youths the Delian rises up fierce at the doom of his slain avengeress, and seated on the shady top of twin-peaked Parnassus with relentless bow he cruelly scatters shafts that bring pestilence, and withers beneath a misty shroud the fields and dwellings of the Cyclopes.\(^a\) Pleasant lives droop and fail, Death with his sword cuts through the Sisters' threads, and hurries the stricken city to the shades. Our leader then inquiring what the cause may be, what is this baleful fire from heaven, why Sirius reigns throughout the whole year, the word of the same god Paean brings command, to sacrifice to the blood-stained monster those youths that caused her death. O valour heaven-blest! O worth that will merit a long age of fame! No base craven thou to hide thy devoted deed, or shun in fear a certain death!

\(^a\) i.e., Argos, which the Cyclopes were supposed originally to have built.
comminus ora ferens Cirrhaei in limine templi constitit et sacras ita vocibus asperat iras: ‘non missus, Thymbraee, tuos supplexve penates advenio: mea me pietas et conscia virtus has egere vias. ego sum, qui caede subegi, Phoebe, tuum mortale nefas, quem nubibus atris et squalente die, nigra quem tabe sinistri quaeris, inique, poli. quodsi monstra effera magnis cara adeo superis, iacturaque vilior orbi mors hominum et saevo tanta inclementia caelo est, quid meruere Argi? me, me, divum optime, solum obiecisse caput fatis praestabat. an illud lene magis cordi, quod desolata domorum pecta vides, ignique datis cultoribus omnis lucet ager? sed quid fando tua tela manusque demoror? exspectant matres, supremaque fiunt vota mihi. satis est: merui, ne parcere velles.
proinde move pharetras arcusque intende sonoros insignemque animam leto demitte; sed illum, pallidus Inachiis qui desuper imminet Argis, dum morior, dispelle globum.’

Sors aequa merentes
respicit. ardentem tenuit reverentia caedis Letoiden, tristemque viro submissus honorem largitur vitae; nostro mala nubila caelo diffugiunt, at tu stupefacti a limine Phoebi exoratus abis. inde haec stata sacra quotannis sollemnes recolunt epulae, Phoebeaque placat

2 lucet P\(\omega\) : luget Heinsius.

388
Unabashed he stood on the threshold of Cirrha's temple, and with these words gives fierce utterance to his sacred rage: 'Not sent by any, nor suppliant, O Thymbraean, do I approach thy shrine: duty and consciousness of right have turned my steps this way. I am he, O Phoebus, who laid low thy deadly scourge, I am he whom thou, ruthless one, dost seek out by poison-cloud, and the light of day defiled, and the black corruption of a baleful heaven. But even if raging monsters be so dear to the gods above, and the destruction of men a cheaper loss to the world, and heaven be so stern and pitiless, in what have the Argives sinned? My life, my life alone, most righteous of the gods, should be offered to the fates! Or is it more soothing to thy heart that thou seest homesteads desolate, and the countryside lit up by the burning roofs of husbandmen? But why by speaking do I delay the weapons of thy might? Our mothers are waiting, and the last prayers for me are being uttered. Enough: I have deserved that thou should'st be merciless. Bring then thy quiver, and stretch thy sounding bow, and send a noble soul to death! But, even while I die, dispel the gathered mist that from on high hangs pallid over Inachian Argos.'

Equity hath regard for the deserving. Awe of slaughter took hold on Leto's fiery son, and yielding he grants the hero the sad boon of life; the deadly clouds fly scattering from our heaven, while thou, thy prayer heard, departest from marvelling Phoebus' door. Thenceforward do we in solemn banquet yearly renew the appointed sacrifice, and placate the templa novatus honos. has forte invisitis aras vos quae progenies? quamquam Calydonius Oeneus et Parthaoniae, si dudum certus ad aures clamor iti, tibi iura domus. tu pande, quis Argos advenias, quando hae variis sermonibus horae."

\(^a\) A title of Apollo, from his shrine at Thymbra in the Troad, \textit{cf.} 699.

Deiecit maestos extemplo Isemius heros in terram vultus, taciteque ad Tydea laesum oblique oculos; tum longa silentia movit: "non super hos divum tibi sum quaerendus honores, unde genus, quae terra mihi, quis defluat ordo sanguinis antiqui: piget inter sacra fateri. sed si praeceptavit miserum cognoscere curae, Cadmus origo patrum, tellus Mavortia Thebe, est genetrix Io casta mihi."

tum motus Adrastus hospitiis—agnovit enim:—"quid nota recondis? semus" ait, "nec sic aversum fama Mycenis volvit iter. regnum et furias oculosque pudentes novit et Arctois si quis de solibus horret qui que bibit Gangen aut nigrum occasibus intrat Oceanum, et si quos incerto litore Syrtes destituunt. ne perge queri casusque priorum adnumerare tibi: nostro quoque sanguine multum erravit pietas, nec culpa nepotibus obstat. tu modo dissimilis rebus mereare secundis excusare tuos. et iam temone supino languet Hyperboreae glacialis portitor Ursae. fundite viña foci, servatoremque parentum Letoiden votis iterumque iterumque canamus.

---

a Parthaon was a king of Calydon, father of Oeneus.

b Theban, from the river Isemenus.

c Statius has quaintly combined the two names of the constellation, the Bear and the Wain; by the Hyperborean Bear he simply means the North, so that the phrase corresponds to Spenser's "the Northern Waggoner."
The shrine of Phoebus in recurring festival. Of what stock come ye, whom chance has led to these our altars? though, if but now my ears did rightly catch your outcry, Oeneus of Calydon is thy sire, and thine the lordship of Parthaonia's house. But thou, do thou reveal who thou art that comest thus to Argos, since now the hour permits of varied discourse."

Straightway did the Ismenian hero bend his sad looks to earth, and cast at injured Tydeus a silent sidelong glance; then after a long pause he spoke: "Not at these honours paid to heaven is it meet to ask me of my birth or land or ancient descent of blood; hard is it to confess the truth amid the holy rites. But if your wish is urgent to know my unhappy tale, Cadmus was the ancestor of my sires, my land Mavortian Thebes, my mother is Jocasta." Then Adrastus, moved to friendly compassion—for he recognized him—said: "Why hide what all have heard? this know we, nor doth Fame journey so distant from Mycenae. Yea, of that reign, and the madness, and the eyes that knew shame of their seeing, even he hath heard who shivers 'neath an Arctic sun, and he who drinks of Ganges, or sails into the Ocean darkening to the west, and they whom the shifting shoreline of the Syrtes fails. Cease to lament, or to recount the woes of thy fathers: in our house also hath there been many a fall from duty, but past error binds not posterity. Only do thou, unlike to them, win by fortune's favour this reward, to redeem thy kindred. And now the frosty wagnorer of the Hyperborean Bear droops languidly, with backward slanting pole. Pour your wine upon the altar-hearth, and chant we our prayer, again and yet again, to Leto's son, the saviour of our fathers!
Phoebe parens, seu te Lyciae Patarea nivosis exercent dumeta iugis, seu rore pudico Castaliae flavos amor est tibi mergere crines, seu Troiam Thymbraeus habes, ubi fama volentem ingratis Phrygios umeris subisse molares, seu iuvat Aegaeum feriens Latonius umbra Cynthus et adsiduam pelago non quaeerere Delon:
tela tibi longeque feros lentandus in hostes areus, et aetherii dono cesserere parentes aeternum florere genas, tu doctus iniquas Parcarum praenosse manus fatumque quod ultrast et summo placitura Iovi, quis letifer annus, bella quibus populis, quae mutent sceptra cometae, tu Phryga submittis eltharae, tu matris honoris terrigenam Tityou Stygiis extendis harenis; te viridis Python Thebanaque mater ovantem horruit in pharetris, ultrix tibi torva Megaera ieiumum Phlegyan subter cava saxa iacentem aeterno premit accubitu dapibusque profanis instimulat, sed mixta famem fastidia vinctunt:
adsis, o memor hospitii. Iunoniaque arva dexter ames, seu te roseum Titana vocari gentis Achaemeniae ritu, seu praestat Osirin frugiferum, seu Persei sub rupibus antri indignata sequi torquentem cornua Mithram.”

---

a i.e., hunting.
b i.e., in building Troy.
c The mountain in Delos.
d Marsyas.
e Niobe, daughter of Cadmus.
f A Lapith who had set fire to Apollo’s temple.
g i.e., Argos.
h The reference is to the sun-worship of the Persians; Mithras is frequently represented dragging a bull to be sacrificed. “Persean,” from Perses, son of Perseus and Andromeda, founder of the Persian nation, cf. Hdt. vii. 61.
Phoebus, Sire! whether the copses of Patara and Lycia’s snowy uplands keep thee busy, or thou delightest to bathe thy golden hair in Castalia’s pure dew, or whether as Thymbra’s lord thou dwellest in Troy, where they say thou didst willingly bear on thankless shoulders blocks of Phrygian stone, or whether Latonian Cynthus pleases thee, casting his shadow on the Aegean wave, and Delos, settled sure in the deep, nor needing now thy search,—thine are the arrows and the bending of the bows against the savage enemy afar; to thee did celestial parents grant thy cheeks’ eternal bloom; thou art skilled to foreknow Fate’s cruel handiwork, and the destiny that lies beyond, and high Jove’s pleasure, to what peoples pestilence cometh or wars, what change of sceptres comets bring; thou makest the Phrygian subject to thy lyre, and for thy mother’s honour dost stretch the earth-born Tityos on the Stygian sands; thee the green Python and the Theban mother horror-struck beheld triumphant with thy quiver, to avenge thee grim Megaera holds fast the starving Phlegyas, who lies ever pressed beneath the cavernous rocks, and tortures him with the unholy feast, but mingled loathing defeats his hunger: be thou present to our succour, mindful of our hospitality, and shed on the fields of Juno the blessings of thy love, whether ’tis right to call thee rosy Titan, in the fashion of the Achaemenian race, or Osiris bringer of the harvest, or Mithras, that beneath the rocky Persean cave strains at the reluctant-following horns.” Interea gelidis Maia satus aliger umbris iussa gerens magni remeat Iovis; undique pigrae ire vetant nubes et turbidus implicat aer. nec zephyri rapuere gradum, sed foeda silentis aura poli. Styx inde novem circumflua campis, hinc obiecta vias torrentem incendia cludunt. pone senex trepida suceedit Laius umbra vulnere tardus adhuc; capulo nam largius illi transabiert animam cognatis ictibus ensis impius, et primas Furiarum pertulit iras; it tamen et medica firmat vestigia virga. tum steriles luci possessaque manibus arva et ferrugineum nemus adstupet, ipsaque Tellus miratur patuisse retro, nec livida tabes invidiae functis quamquam et iam lumine cassis defuit. unus ibi ante alios, cui laeva voluntas semper et ad superos—hinc et gravis exitus aevi—insultare malis rebusque aegrecere laetis, "vade" ait, "o felix, quoscunque vocaris in usus, seu Iovis imperio, seu maior adegit Erinys ire diem contra, seu te furiata sacerdos Thessalis arcano iubet emigrare sepulcro, heu dulces visure polos solemque relictum

1 campis Pω: ripis Bentley.
2 animam P: costas ω.
Meanwhile the winged son of Maia returns from the cold shades, fulfilling the errand of great Jove; on every side sluggish clouds hinder his way and misty air enfolds him, no Zephyrs wafted his course, but the foul vapours of the silent world. On this side Styx encircling its nine regions, on that a barrier of fiery torrents encloses his path. Behind him follows old Laius’ trembling shade, still halting from his wound; for deeper than the hilt had his kinsman’s impious swordthrust pierced into his life and sped the first blow of Avenging Wrath; yet on he goes, strengthening his steps with the healing wand. Then barren woods and spirit-haunted fields and groves of lurid hue stand in amaze, and Earth herself marvels that the backward road lies open, nor even to the dead and those already bereft of light was lacking the livid blight of envy. One there, perversely eager beyond the rest ever to revile the gods—thus indeed had he come by a grievous doom—and to repine at happiness, eries: “Good speed, thou lucky one, on what behest soever summoned, whether by Jove’s command, or whether an overmastering Fury drive thee to meet the day, or frenzied witch of Thessaly bid thee come forth from thy secret sepulchre: alas! thou that wilt see the pleasant sky and the sunlight thou didst leave behind et virides terras et pueros fontibus amnes, tristior has iterum tamen intrature tenebras.”
illos ut caeco recubans in limine sensit Cerberus atque omnes\(^1\) capitum subrexit hiatus saevus et intranti populo; iam nigra tumebat colla minax. iam sparsa solo turbaverat ossa, ni deus horrentem Lethaeo vimine muleens ferrea tergemino domuisset lumina somno.

Est locus—Inachiae dixerunt Taenara gentes—, qua formidatum Maleae spumantis in auras
it caput et nullo admittit culmine visus, stat sublimis apex ventosque imbresque serenus despicit et tantum fessis insiditur astris.
illic exhausti posuere cubilia venti, fulminibusque iter est\(^2\) : medium cava nubila montis insumpserunt latus, summos nee praepetis alae plausus adit colles, nee rucea tonitrua pulsant.\(^3\) ast ubi prona dies, longos super aequora fines exigit atque ingens medio natat umbra profundo.
interiore sinu frangentia litora eurvat Taenaros, expositos non audax scandere\(^4\) fluctus.
illic Aegaeo Neptunus gurgite fessos in portum deducit equos, prior haurit harenas ungula, postremi solvuntur in aequora pisces.
hoc, ut fama, loco pallentes devius umbras trames agit nigrique Io\(\text{\textis}\) vacua atria ditat mortibus. Arcadii perhibent si vera coloni,

\(^1\) atque omnes \(P\omega\) : aeque Unger, alte Lachmann: angui-comus Koch.
\(^2\) iter est \(P\omega\) : quies conj. Postgate.
\(^3\) ll. 37-40 omitted by \(P\omega\), though inserted in the margin by another hand in PBQ. Elsewhere in Statius tonitus is masculine.
\(^4\) frangentia . . . scandere \(P\omega\) : scandentia . . . frangere Ach. i. 449).
and the green earth and the pure river-springs, yet more sadly wilt return again to this darkness.

Cerberus lying on the murky threshold perceived them, and reared up with all his mouths wide agape, fierce even to entering folk; but now his black neck swelled up all threatening, now had he torn and scattered their bones upon the ground, had not the god with branch Lethaean soothed his bristling frame and quelled with threefold slumber the steely glare.

There is a place—named Taenarum by the Inachian folk—where foaming Malea’s dreaded headland rises into the air, nor suffers any vision to reach its summit. Sublime stands the peak and looks down serene on winds and rain, and only to weary stars affords a resting-place. There tired winds find repose, and there the lightnings have their path; hollow clouds hold the mountain’s midmost flanks, and never beat of soaring wing comes nigh the topmost ranges nor the hoarse clap of thunder. But when the day inclines towards its setting, a vast shadow casts its fringes wide over the level waters, and floats upon mid-sea. Around an inner bay Taenaros curves his broken shore-line, not bold to breast the outer waves. There Neptune brings home to haven his coursers wearied by the Aegean flood; in front their hooves paw the sand, behind, they end in fishy tails beneath the water. In this region, so ’tis said, a hidden path conducts the pallid ghosts, and dowers with many a death the spacious halls of swarthy Jove.

If Arcadian husbandmen speak truth, shrieks

\[ a \ i.e., \ Pluto. \]
stridor ibi et gemitus poenarum, atroque tumultu fervet ager; saepe Eumenidum vocesque manusque in medium sonuere diem, Letique\(^1\) triformis ianitor agricolas campis auditus abegit.

Hae et tunc fusca volucer deus obsitus umbra \(^5\) exsilit ad superos, infernaque nubila vultu discutit et vivis adflatibus ora serenat.
inde per Areturum mediaeque silentia Lunae arva super populosque meat. Sopor obvius illi Noctis agebat equos, trepidusque adsurgit honorì \(^6\) numinis et recto decedit limite caeli.
inferior volat umbra deo, praereptaque noscit sidera principiumque sui; iamque ardua Cirrhae pollutamque suo despectat Phocida busto.
ventum erat ad Thebas; gemuit prope limina nati \(^6\) Laius et notos cunctatus inire penates.

ut vero et celsis suamet\(^2\) iuga nixa columnis vidit et infectos etiamnum sanguine currus, paene retro turbatus abit: nec summa Tonantis iussa nec Arcadiae retinent spiramina virgae.

Et tunc forte dies noto signata Tonantis fulmine, praerupti cum te, tener Euhie, partus transmisere patri. Tyriis ea causa colonis insomnem ludo certatim educere nocem suaserat; effusi passim per tecta, per agros, serta inter vacuosque mero crateras anhelum proflabant sub luce deum; tunc plurima buxus

\(^1\) Letique \(P\omega\): Lethesque \(Friesemann.\)
\(^2\) suamet \(P\omega\): sedem et \(L.\)

\(a\) Mercury was born in Arcadia.
\(b\) Bacchus, untimely born from Semele who was blasted by the lightning of Jove, and lodged in his father's thigh till he was ripe for birth.
\(c\) i.e., Thebans.
are heard there and the moaning of the damned, and the land is all astir with hurrying grisly forms; often the cries and blows of the Furies have resounded till mid-day, and the baying of Death's tri-formed warder has scared the rustics from the fields.

By this way then did the nimble god, all wrapped about with dusky shadow, leap forth to the upper world, and shake from his face the vapours of the nether region, and make serene his countenance with draughts of living air. Thence by Arcturus and the moon's mid silences o'er fields and cities he wends his way. Sleep, driving Night's coursers, met him, and rose abashed to salute his godhead, turning aside from his celestial path. Beneath the god flies the shade, and knows again his lost stars and the land that bore him; and now he looks down on Cirrha's heights and Phocis, that his own corpse polluted. Now they were come to Thebes, and hard by his own son's threshold Laius groaned, tarrying to enter the well-known house. But when he saw his own yoke hanging on the lofty pillars and the chariot still stained with blood, almost had he in wild fear turned back and fled, nor could the Thunderer's high commands restrain him, nor the waving of the Areadian a wand.

That too chanced to be the day marked by the well-known falling of the Thunderer's brand, when thy birth's untimely hastening, O infant Euhius, b caused thy sire to take thee to himself. Therein had the Tyrian settlers c found cause to pass the night in sleepless rivalry of sport; scattered far and wide through house and field, amid garlands and mixing-bowls drained dry they panted forth the wine-god under the light of day; then many a boxwood aeraque taurinos sonitu vincentia pulsus.\(^1\) ipse etiam gaudens nemorosa per avia sanas impulerat matres Baccho meliore Cithaeron; \(^80\) qualia per Rhodopen rabido convivia coetu Bistones aut mediae ponunt convallibus Ossae. illis semianimum pecus excussaeque leonum ore dapes, et lacte novo domuisse furem\(^2\) luxus: at Ogygii si quando adflavit Iacchi \(^85\) saevus odor, tunc saxa manu, tunc pœula pulchrum spargere et immerito sociorum sanguine fusō instaurare diem festasque reponere mensas.\(^3\) Nox ea, cum taeita volucer Cyllenius aura regis Echionii stratis adlapsus, ubi ingens \(^90\) fuderat Assyriis exstructa tapetibus alto membra toro. pro gnara nihil mortalia fati corda sui! capi ille dapes, habet ille soporem. tunc senior quae iussus agit, neu falsa videri noctis imago queat, longaevi vatis opacos \(^95\) Tiresiae vultus vocemque et vellera nota induitur. mansere comae propexaque mento canities pallorque suus, sed falsa cecurrit infula per crines, glaucaque innexus olivae vittarum provenit honos: deline tangere ramo \(^100\) pectora et has visus fatorum expromere voces: "non somni tibi tempus, iners, qui noete sub alta, germani secure, iaces, ingentia dudum acta vocant rerumque graves, ignave, paratus. tu, veluti magnum si\(^4\) iam tollentibus austris \(^105\)

---

\(^1\) taurinos sonitu vincentia pulsus \(P\omega\) (ducentia \(N\ with\ vincentia written over\): Tyrrhenos sonitus vincentia pulsu \(Lachmann\).

\(^2\) furem \(P\): cruorem \(\omega\).

\(^3\) si \(\omega\): se \(P\).

\(^a\) Thracians.

\(^b\) Eteocles.

\(^c\) Probably with reference to Sardanapalus (Assurbanipal), the Assyrian, proverbial for luxury (Juv. x. 362).
Cithaeron himself exultant had set prudent matrons flocking in a nobler frenzy through his pathless groves: even as the Bistonians in wild concourse hold their revels upon Rhodope or in the depths of Ossa's vales. For them one of the flock snatched half-alive from the lion's jaw is a feast, and to abate their fury with new milk is luxury; but when the fierce fragrance of Ogygian Iacchus breaths upon them, then how glorious to fling stones and goblets, and with the shedding of guiltless comrades' blood to begin the day anew and appoint once more the festal banquet!

Such was the night when the swift Cyllenian glided down on the silent air to the couch of the Echionian prince, where in huge bulk he had flung his limbs on a bed piled high with Assyrian coverlets. Alas! for mortal hearts that know not their destiny! He feasts and he slumbers. Then the old man performs what he is bidden, and, lest he seem but a false phantom of the night, puts on the darkened visage of the ancient seer Tiresias, and his voice and well-known woollen bands. His own long hair and hoary beard combed downward from the chin remain, and his own pallid hue, but through his locks there runs the feigned circlet, and the sacred fillets entwined with the grey olive are plain to view. Then he seemed to touch his breast with the olive bough and give utterance to these fateful words: "This is no time of sleep for thee, thou sluggard, who liest careless of thy brother in the depth of night! long time have great deeds summoned thee, slothful one, and weighty preparings for what shall be. But thou, even as if some ship's captain, while the south..."
Ionium nigra iaceat sub nube magister immemor armorum versantisque aequora clavi, cunctaris. iamque ille novis—seit Fama—superbit conubiiis viresque parat, quis regna capessat, quis neget, inque tua senium sibi destinat aula. 110 dant animos socer augurio fatalis Adrastus dotalesque Argi, nec non in foedera vitae pollutus placuit fraterno sanguine Tydeus.
hinc tumor, et longus fratri promitteris exsul.
ipse deum genitor tibi me miseratus ab alto 115 mittit: habe Thebas, caecumque cupidine regni ausurumque eadem germanum expelle, nec ultra fraternos inhiantiem obitus sine fidere coeptis fraudibus aut Cadmo dominas inferre Mycenas.” Dixit, et abscedens—et enim iam pallida turbant 120 sidera lucis equi—ramos ac vellera fronti deripuit, confessus avum, dirique nepotis incubuit stratis, iugulum mox caede patentem nudat et undanti perfundit vulnere somnum.
illi rupta quies, attollit membra toroque 125 eripitur¹ plenus monstris, vanumque cruorem excutiens simul horret avum fratremque requirit.
qualis ubi audito venantum murmure tigris horruit in maculas somnosque excussit inertes;
bella cupit laxatque genas et temperat ungues, 130 mox ruit in turmas natisque alimenta cruentis

¹ eripitur P: erigitur ω.

402
winds are already raising the billows on the Ionian main, should he idle beneath a black storm-cloud, forgetful of his tackling and of the rudder that sways the waters,—thou tarriest. And he even now—so Fame can tell—waxes proud of his new wedlock, and gets to himself might whereby to seize the realm and refuse thee thy part, and appoints himself an old age in thy halls. Adrastus, foretold by omen to be the father of his bride, and the Argive dowry raise his spirits, yea, and Tydeus, stained by a brother's blood, hath he graciously received into a lifelong bond. Hence swelling pride, and a promise to thy brother of long exile for thee. The sire of gods himself in pity sends me down to thee from on high: hold fast to Thebes, and drive away thy kinsman who is blind with lust of rule, and will dare as much against thyself, nor suffer him all agape for a brother's death to trust any more in the treachery he devises, nor to bring Mycenae to queen it over Cadmus."

He spoke, and departing—for already the sun's horses were driving in rout the pale stars—tore from his head the chaplet and woollen bands, and revealed himself his grandsire, then leaning over his dread grandson's couch bared his throat's open wound and flooded his sleep with streaming blood. The other, startled from his slumbers, springs up and leaps from the couch, full of horror, and shaking from him the phantom blood shrinks appalled from his grandsire and seeks out his brother. Just as when a tigress hearing the noise of hunters has grimly faced the nets and shaken off lazy sleep: 'tis war she yearns for, and she loosens her jaws and trims her talons, and soon she rushes amid the companies and carries off in her mouth a man still breathing, to feed her spirantem fert ore virum: sic excitus ira ductor in absentem consumit proelia fratrem.

Et iam Mygdoniis elata cubilibus alto dispulerat\(^1\) caelo gelidas Aurora tenebras, orantes excussa comas multumque sequenti sole rubens; illi roseus per nubila seras advertit flammas alienumque aethera tardo Lucifer exit equo, donec pater igneus orbem impleat atque ipsi radios vetet esse sorori:
cum senior Talaionides nce longa morati Dircaeusque gradum pariterque Acheloius heros corripnere toris. illos post verbera fessos exceptamque hiemem cornu perfuderat omni Sommus; at Inachio tenuis sub pectore regi tracta quies, dum mente deos inceptaque versat hospitia, et quae sint generis adscita repertis fata movet. postquam mediis in sedibus aulae congressi inque vicem dextras iuxere locumque, quo serere arcanas aptum atque evolvere curas, insidunt, prior his dubios compellat Adrastus:
"egregii iuvenum, quos non sine numine regnis invexit nox dextra meis, quibus ipse per imbres fulminibus mixtos intempestumque Tonantem has mensque domos vestigia fecit Apollo, non equidem obscurum vobis plebique Pelasgæ esse rear, quantis conubia nostra procorum turba petant studiis: geminae mihi namque, nepotum laeta fides, aequo pubescunt sidere natae.
quantus honos quantusque pudor, ne credite patri, \(160\)
\[^1\] dispulerat Lachmann: impulerat \(P_2\).

\(a\) Tithonus, her husband, was son of Laomedon, king of Phrygia; Mygdonia was a part of Phrygia.
\(b\) Adrastus was the son of Talaus; Dirce was a fountain at Thebes, Achelous a river in Aetolia.

404
savage whelps; even so stirred by rage the chieftain dreams of war against his absent brother.

And now Aurora rising from her Mygdonian resting-place had scattered the cold shadows from the high heaven, and shaking the dew-drops from her hair blushed deep in the sun's pursuing beams; toward her through the clouds the rosy morning-star turns his late fires, and with slow steed leaves an alien world, until the fiery father's orb be full replenished and he forbid his sister to usurp his rays. Then did the aged son of Talaus and with no long delay the heroes twain of Dirce and of Achelous rise swiftly from their couches. Upon them, wearied by blows and endurance of the storm, had Sleep poured all his horn's bounty; but scant repose visited the breast of the Inachian monarch, while in his thoughts he broods upon heaven's will and the new ties of friendship, and wonders what destinies he is admitting to his house in his new-found sons-in-law. They meet in the mid chambers of the palace, and draw nigh and grasp each other's hand in turn, then seat themselves where they may best make interchange of secret counsel, and, the others hesitating, Adrastus thus begins: "Peerless youths, whom a propitious night has brought heaven-prompted to my realm, whose steps my own Apollo has guided even to my palace in spite of rain and lightning-flash and the Thunderer's unseasonable sky, I cannot deem it unknown to you and the Pelasgian folk, how zealous a crowd of suitors seeks alliance with my house; for my two daughters, joyful pledge of grandchildren, are reaching equal years of full-grown maidenhood. How great their beauty and their modesty, trust not a father's word, nay, ye could et super hesternas licuit cognoscere mensas. has tumidi solio et late dominantibus armis optavere viri—longum enumerare Pheraeos Oebaliosque duces—et Achaea per oppida matres spem generis, nec plura tuus despexerat Oeneus 165 foedera Pisaeisque socer metuendus habenis. sed mihi nec Sparta genitos nec ab Elide missos iungere fas generos: vobis hic sanguis et aulae cura meae longo promittitur ordine fati. di bene, quod tales stirpemque animosque venitis, 170 ut responsa iuvent: hic durae tempore noctis partus honos, haec illa venit post verbera merces.”

Audierant, fixosque oculos per mutua paulum ora tenent, visisque inter sese ordine fandi cedere. sed cunctis Tydeus audentior actis incipit: “o quam te parcum in praeconia famae mens agitat matura tuae, quantumque ferentem fortunam virtute domas! cui cedat Adrastus imperii? quis te solio Sicyonis avitae excitum infrenos componere legibus Argos 175 nesciat? atque utinam his manibus permittere gentis, Iuppiter aeque, velis, quas Doricus alligat intus1 Isthmos et alterno quas margine submovet infra! non fugeret diras lux intercisa Mycenas, saeva nec Eleae gemerent certamina valles,2 180 Eumenidesque aliis aliae sub regibus, et quae

1 intus P: undis ω.
2 After this line Duebner, Mueller, Kohlmann and Postgate recognize a lacuna; it seems sufficient to understand fuissent in 186.

---

a i.e., Thessalian and Spartan, from N. and S. Greece.
b Oenomaus, who challenged the suitors of Hippodamia to a chariot-race, and slew them when they lost.
c See note on i. 325.
d See note on i. 166.
judge at yesterday's banquet. Many a one, with throne and wide-extending sway to boast of, has desired them—'twere long to tell the tale of Pheraean and Oebean princes—a—and mothers also throughout the towns of Achaea, for hope of posterity; nor did Oeneus thy own father despise more proffered unions, nor the sire of Pisa's bride with his terrible chariot-reins. But none of Spartan birth nor of them that hail from Elis may I choose for my daughters' consorts: to you doth ancient destiny pledge my blood and the guardianship of my halls. The gods are gracious, in that ye come to me so high in birth and spirit that I rejoice in their oracles. This is the prize that the night's sufferings have won, this is your reward for the blows ye bore.

They heard him, and for a while held their eyes fixed in mutual gaze, seeming to yield each other place of speech. But Tydeus, in every deed more daring, begins: "O how sparingly doth thy sage mind impel thee to proclaim thy own renown, and how greatly by worth dost thou outdo all fortune's favour! To whom should Adrastus yield in power? Who knows not that thou, when driven from thy ancestral Sicyon's throne, didst give law to turbulent Argos? and would that thou wert willing, O just Jupiter, to entrust to these hands the races that Dorian Isthmus contains within the interior lands, and those which it removes beneath its other bound! The interrupted light would not have fled from dire Mycenae, nor would the vales of Elis have groaned at the fierce contests, nor divers Furies afflicted divers kings, nor happened all tu potior, Thebane, queri: nos vero volentes expositique animis." sic interfatus et alter subicit: "anne aliquis soceros accedere tales abnuat? exsulibus quamquam patriaque fugatis nondum laeta Venus, tamen omnis corde resedit tristitia, adfixique animo cessere dolores. nec minus haec laeti trahimus solacia, quam si praecepiti convulsa noto prospectet amicam puppis humum. iuvat ingressos felicia regni omnina, quod superest fati vitaeque laborum fortunā transire tua." nee plura morati consurgunt, dictis impensius aggerat omne promissum Inachius pater, auxilioque futurum et patriis spondet reduces inducere regnis._

Ergo alacres Argi, fuso rumore per urbem advenisse duci generos primisque hymenaeis egregiam Argian nec formae laude secundam Deipylen tumida iam virginitate iugari, gaudia mente parant; socias it Fama per urbes, finitimisque agitatur agris procul usque Lycaeos Partheniosque super saltus Ephryraeaque rura nec minus Ogygias cadem dea turbida Thebas insilit. haec totis perfundit moenia pinnis Labdaciumque ducem praemissae consona nocti territat; hospitia et thalamos et foedera regni permixtumque genus—quae tanta licentia monstro, quis furor?—et iam^1 bella canit.

1 furor? et iam Lachmann: furor est iam Pw.

^ I understand "fuissent" with "Eumenides" and "quae," etc.

408
that thou, O Theban, canst best bewail. We verily are willing, and our hearts are open to thee.” So spake he, and the other added: “Would any one refuse to welcome such a father of his bride? Though Venus smile not yet upon us exiles, banished from our land, nevertheless all sorrows of our hearts are calmed, and the grief is gone that held fast upon our minds. No less joyfully do we take unto us this solace, than a ship rent by the tearing gale beholds the friendly shore. We delight to enter upon a reign of happy omen, and to pass, under thy destiny, what remains of our allotted lives and labours.” Without more ado they rise, and the Inachian sire adds weight of eager words to every promise, and vows that he will succour them and bring them back to their fathers’ realms.

The Argives, therefore, as the report spreads through the city that husbands for his daughters have come to the king’s court, and that illustrious Argia, and Deipyle famed no less for beauty, are giving in wedlock their lusty maidenhood, eagerly prepare for great rejoicing. Fame flies through the kindred cities, and is carried from lip to lip in the neighbouring lands even as far as the Lycaean and beyond Parthenian glades and the Ephyrean countryside, nor less does the same tumultuous goddess descend upon Ogygian Thebes. With wings full-stretched she broods over those walls, bringing terror that accords with the past night to the La- dacian chief: the welcome and the marriage does she relate, and the royal covenant and the union of houses—what mad licence in the devilish monster’s tongue!—and at last she tells of war.

b Ephyre was an old name of Corinth.
Diffuderat Argos

exspectata dies: laeto regalia coetu atria complentur, species est cernere avorum comminus et vivis certantia vultibus aera.
tantum ausae perferre manus! pater ipse bicornis in laevum prona nixus sedet Inachus urna;
hunc tegit Iasiusque senex placidusque Phoroneus, et bellator Abas' dignatusque Tonantem Acrisius' nudoque ferens caput ense Coroebus, torvaque iam Danai facinus meditantis imago;
exin mille duces. foribus tum1 inmissa superbis unda fremit volgi, procerum manus omnis et alto quis proprior de rege gradus, stant ordine primi.
interior sacris calet et sonat aula tumultu femineo; casta matrem2 cinxere corona Argolides, pars virginibus circum undique fusae foedera conciliant nova solanturque timorem.
ibant insignes vultuque habituque verendo candida purpureum fusae super ora pudorem deiectaeque genas; tacite subit ille supremus virginitatis amor, primaeque modestia culpae confundit vultus; tunc ora rigantur honestis imbribus, et teneros lacrimae inuere parentes.
non seens ac supero pariter si cardine lapsae Pallas et asperior Phoebi soror, utraque telis, tutraque torva genis flavoque in vertice nodo, illa suas Cyntho comites agat, haec Araeynthia;

1 tum Baehrens: cum Pω. 2 matrem PKQ: matrum w.

a Or perhaps, "had gladdened the Argives," by an extension of "animum diffundere." cf. Ov. A. A. i. 218
"diffundetque animos omnibus ista dies."

b Because Jupiter visited his daughter Danaë in the brazen tower. For Coroebus see i. 605 sq. The "murder" was that of their husbands by the Danaïdes.
The long-expected day had spread the Argives all abroad: the royal halls are filled with joyous gathering, here may they look face to face upon their forefathers, and see bronzes that vie with the living countenance. So much hath skill dared and wrought! Father Inachus himself, twin-horned, leans leftward upon his tilted urn; old Iasius supports him and calm Phoroneus and warrior Abas, and Acrisius angry with the Thunderer, and Coroebus bearing a head upon his naked sword, and the grim likeness of Danaus already meditating murder; and many a prince thereafter. Then the common folk in clamorous flood are given entrance at the proud portals, while the whole company of chiefs and all who in degree stand nigh the monarch’s majesty take first place of rank. Within, the palace is all aglow with sacrificial fires, and loud with female tumult; a chaste band of Argive women surrounds the mother-queen, others thronging about the maidens reconcile them to the new bonds and reassure their timorous hearts. They moved in splendour and majesty of look and dress, with eyes cast down and modest blush suffusing all their fairness; that last regretful love of maidenhood steals silently into their hearts, and the first shame of guilt overwhelms their countenances; then a generous rain bedews their cheeks, and tears bring joy to their tender-hearted parents. Just so might Pallas and Phoebus’ sterner sister glide down together from high heaven, terrible alike in armour and in looks, and with golden hair braided on their heads, bringing their maiden company, from Cynthus she and she

\[i.e.,\] Diana, as the huntress; "sterner," perhaps by comparison with other daughters of Jove, e.g. Venus; not with Pallas, who is here the goddess of war, cf. 1. 243 ("cristas").
tunc, si fas oculis, non umquam longa tuendo expedias, cui maior honos, cui gratior, aut plus de Iove, mutatosque velint transumere cultus, et Pallas deceat pharetras et Delia cristas.

Certant laetitia superosque in vota fatigant Inachidae, quae cuique domus sacrique facultas. hi fibris animaque litant, hi caespite nudo. nec minus auditi, si mens accepta, merentur ture deos, fractisque obtundunt limina silvis. ecce metu subito—Lachesis sic dura iubebat—impulsae mentes, excussaque gaudia patri, et turbata dies. innuptam limine adibant Pallada, Monychiis cui non Argiva per urbes posthabita est Larissa iugis: hic more parentum Iasides, thalamis ubi casta adulesceret aetas, virgineas libare comas primosque solebant excusare toros. celsam subeuntibus arecem in gradibus summi delapsus culmine templi, Arcados Euhippi spolium, cedit aereus orbis, praemissasque faces, festum nubentibus ignem, obruit, eque adytis simul exaudita remotis nonum ausos firmare gradum tuba terruit ingens. in regem conversi omnes formidine prima, mox audisse negant; cunctos tamen omina rerum dira movent, variisque metum sermonibus augent. nec mirum: nam tum infaustos donante marito

1 merentur $P$: meretur $\omega$.
2 innuptam limine $P_\omega$: innupto in limine Garrod conj. and cp. v. 68 nupta limina.

---

a Mountains in Delos and on the border of Attica respectively.

b Possibly, as Klotz suggests, because those who were about to be brides were not allowed to enter the temple of "innupta Pallas."

*\(c\) i.e., Athenian.
from Araeynthus; then wouldst thou never learn by long gazing, even had thine eyes leave to gaze, which had the greater beauty, which the greater charm, or which had more of Jove, and were they but pleased to take each other's dress, Pallas would beseem the quiver and Delia the crested helmet.

The sons of Inachus contend in rivalry of joy, and weary the gods with vows, as each had household-gear and power of offering. These make supplication with entrails and the victim's life, those with bare turf; others, heard no less, if their heart be accepted, would fain win merit of the gods by incense, and shade their portals with the spoil of the woodlands. But lo! a sudden fear—so cruel Lachesis commanded—strikes on their hearts and robs the sire of his rejoicing, and turns the day to gloom. On her threshold they were drawing nigh to Pallas the unwedded, who among cities prefers not the Munyehian hills to Argive Larissa; here by ancestral rite the daughters of Iasus, so soon as their chaste years grew ripe for wedlock, were wont to make offering of virgin tresses, and pray pardon for the first marriage-bed. As they climb the steps and approach the lofty pile, there fell from the temple's highest summit a brazen shield, the spoil of Arcadian Euhippus, and overwhelmed the heralding torches, the festal light of the marriage train; and while they dare not yet to make sure advance, a mighty trumpet-blare, heard from the shrine's inmost recesses, filled them with terror. All at the first shock of panic turned toward the king, then denied they had heard aught; yet all are troubled by the event's dire omen, and increase their fear by various talk. Nor was it wonderful: for thou wast wearing, Argia, ornatus, Argia, geris dirumque monile Harmoniae. longa est series, sed nota malorum persequerar, unde novis tam saeva potentia donis.

Lemnius haec, ut prisca fides, Mavortia longum furta dolens, capto postquam nil obstat amor poena nec ultrices castigavere catenae, Harmoniae dotale decus sub luce iugali struxerat. hoc, docti quamquam maiora, laborant Cyclopes, notique operum Telchines amica certatim iuvere manu; sed plurimus ipsi sudor. ibi arcano florentis igne zmaragdos cingit et infaustas percussum adamanta figuras Gorgoneosque orbes Siculaque incude relictos fulminis extremi cineres viridumque draconum lucentes a fronte iubas; hic flebile germen Hesperidum et dirum Phrixei velleris aurum; tum varias pestes raptumque interplicat atro Tisiphone de crine ducem, et quae pessima ceston vis probat; haec circum spumis lunaribus ungit callidus atque hilari perfundit cuncta veneno. non hoc Pasithea blandarum prima sororum, non Decor Idaliusque puer, sed Luctus et Irae

1 sed Pw: et Buehrens, who with most edd. punctuates after malorum, whence Lachmann condemned 268.

a Daughter of Venus and wife of Cadmus.
b Vulcan. The reference is to the famous bed which he contrived. It was fitted with chains which closed upon Venus and Mars as they lay together on the bed. (See Hom. Od. viii. 266 f.) Harmonía was the daughter of Venus and Mars.
c Statius must mean amber, wept by the daughters of the sun when turned into poplars, but he calls them Hesperides (as being in the west) instead of Heliades.
d The girdle of Venus is spoken of as having power to instil desire; see Hom. II. xiv. 214.

414
the ill-starred ornament of thy husband's giving, the dread necklace of Harmonia.\(^a\) Far back the story runs, but I will pursue the well-known tale of woes, whence came it that a new gift had such terrible power.

The Lemnian,\(^b\) so they of old believed, long time distressed at Mars' deceit and seeing that no punishment gave hindrance to the disclosed amour, and the avenging chains removed not the offence, wrought this for Harmonia on her bridal day to be the glory of her dower. Thereat, though taught mightier tasks, the Cyclopes labour, and the Telchines famed for their handiwork helped in friendly rivalry of skill; but for himself the sweat of toil was heaviest. There forms he a circlet of emeralds glowing with a hidden fire, and adamant stamped with figures of ill omen, and Gorgon eyes, and embers left on the Sicilian anvil from the last shaping of a thunderbolt, and the crests that shine on the heads of green serpents; then the dolorous fruit of the Hesperides\(^c\) and the dread gold of Phrixus' fleece; then divers plagues doth he intertwine, and the king adder snatched from Tisiphone's grisly locks, and the wicked power that commends the girdle\(^d\); all these he cunningly anoints about with lunar foam,\(^e\) and pours over them the poison of delight. Not Pasithea,\(^f\) eldest of the gracious sisters, nor Charm nor the Idalian youth did mould it, but Grief, and all the Passions, and Anguish,

\(^a\) For this cf. Val. Fl. Arg. vi. 447; Apuleius, Met. i. 3. It was supposed that witches could obtain foam or spume from the moon when they drew it down to earth, and so made their poisons more deadly.

\(^b\) The eldest of the Graes; their names were more commonly said to be Aglaia, Euphrosyne, and Thalia.
et Dolor et tota pressit Discordia dextra.
prima fides operi, Cadmum comitata iacentem Harmonia versis in sibila dira querellis Illyricos longo suleavit pectore campos.
improba mox Semele vix dona nocentia collo induit, et fallax intravit limina Juno.
teque etiam, infelix, perhibent, locasta, decorum possedisse nefas; vultus hac laude\(^1\) colebas, heu quibus, heu placitura toris! post longior ordo, tune donis Argia nitet vilisque sororis ornatus sacro praeclulta supervenit auro.
viderat hoc coniunx perituri vatis et aras ante omnis epulasque trucem secreta coquebat invidiam, saevis detur si quando potiri cultibus, heu nihil auguriis adiuta propinquis.
quos optat gemitus, quantas cupid impia clades!
digna quidem. sed quid miseri decepta mariti arma, quid insonites nati meruere furores?\(^2\) Postquam regales epulas et gaudia vulgi bisseni clusere dies. Ismenius heros respicere ad Thebas iamque et sua quaerere regna.
quippe animum subit illa dies, qua, sorte benigna fratris, Echionia steterat privatus in aula, respiciens descisse\(^2\) deos trepidoque tumultu dilapsos comites, nudum latus omne fugamque

\(^1\) laude \(P\omega\): fraude Garrod, luce Baehrens.
\(^2\) descisse \(\omega\): discisse \(P\) (ci from ce, i.e. discess(iss)e).

---

\(^a\) According to the legend, Harmonia and Cadmus her husband were turned into serpents, and ended their lives in Illyria.
\(^b\) Juno persuaded Semele to ask her lover Jupiter to reveal himself to her as Wielder of the Lightning; he did so, and Semele was blasted by the stroke, and died giving birth to Bacchus.
\(^c\) Eriphyle, wife of Amphiaraus, in exchange for the neck-and Discord, with all the craft of her right hand. The work first proved its worth, when Harmonia’s complaints turned to dreadful hissing, and she bore company to grovelling Cadmus, and with long trailing breast drew furrows in the Illyrian fields. Next, scarce had shameless Semele put the hurtful gift about her neck, when lying Juno crossed her threshold. Thou too, unhappy Jocasta, didst, as they say, possess the beauteous, baleful thing, and didst deck thy countenance with its praise—on what a couch, alas! to find favour; and many more beside. Last Argia shines in the splendour of the gift, and in pride of ornament and accursed gold surpassed her sister’s mean attiring. The wife of the doomed prophet had beheld it, and at every shrine and banquet in secret cherished fierce jealousy, if only it might ever be granted her to possess the terrible jewel, nought profited, alas! by omens near at hand. What bitter tears she doth desire! to what ruin tend her impious wishes! Worthy is she, indeed, but what hath her hapless consort deserved, and his deluded arms? And what the guiltless frenzy of her son?

When twice six days had ended the regal banqueting and the rejoicing of the people, the Ilemenian hero turned his gaze toward Thebes, and would fain now be seeking his kingdom. For he recalls that day, when by the hazard that favoured his brother he stood in Echion’s palace stripped of power, and saw his cause deserted by the gods and his friends all slunk away in hurry and alarm, himself defenceless persuaded her husband to go to the war, where he met his death. Her son Alcmaeon is said to have slain his mother in revenge (305).
fortunae. namque una soror producere tristis exsulis ansa vias; etiam hane in limine primo liquerat et magna lacrinas includerat ira. 315
tunc quos excedens hilares, quis cultus iniqui praecipuus ducis, et profugo quos ipse notarat ingenuisse sibi, per noctem ae luce sub omni digerit; exedere animum dolor iraque demens et, qua non gravior mortalibus addita curis, 320
spes, ubi longa venit. talem sub peetore nubem consilii volvens Dircen Cadmique negatas adparat ire domos. veluti dux taurus amata valle earens, pulsum solito quem gramine vitor iussit ab erepta longe mugire iuvenca, 325 cum profugo placuere tori cervixque recepto sanguine magna redit fractaeque in pectora quereus,1 bella cupit pastusque et capta armenta reposit iam pede, iam cornu melior—pavet ipse reversum victor, et attoniti vix agnovere magistri—: 330 non alias tacita iuvenis Teumesius iras mente acuit. sed fida vias arcanaque conjux senserat; utque toris primo complexa iacebat aurorae pallore virum, "quos, callide, motus quamve fugam moliris?" ait "nil transit amantes. 335 sentio, pervigiles aeuunt suspiria questus, numquam in pace sopor. quotiens haee ora naturae fletibus et magnas latrantia2 pectora curas

1 in pectora quercus PB (with vires written over): in pectore ω, vires DKS, vires Q (with quercus written over).
2 latrantia PBN: iactantia ω.
less on every side and all his fortune fled. For but one sister had dared to escort the exile on his sad path; from her even had he parted, his journey scarce begun, and in deep anger repressed his tearful grief. Then nightly and day by day does he recount in order those whose joy he marked as he went forth, those who were foremost in flattery of the unjust prince, or whom he had himself seen to bewail his exile; anguish devours his mind, and furious wrath, and hope, than which the heart can bear no heavier burden, when 'tis long deferred. Brooding thus in his mind upon a cloud of care, he makes ready to set out for Dirce and the Cadmean home denied him. Even as a chieftain bull, banished from his loved valley, whom a conqueror has driven from his wonted meadow and bidden low far far parted from his stolen love, yet anon in exile takes pleasure in his mighty thews, and his neck fresh-blooded waxes strong again, and he bethinks him of the oaks that he has shattered, and eager for battle demands back the pastures and the captive herds; already in speed of foot and power of horn hath he the mastery, his conqueror himself is dismayed at his return, and the astonished herdsmen scarce know him for the same: not otherwise does the Teumesian youth sharpen his wrath in brooding silence. But his faithful wife had marked his secret yearning to be gone, and lying on the couch in the first pale light of dawn, her arms about her lord, "What thoughts of flight," she said, "are these thou ponderest? nought escapes a lover's eye. I know thy wakeful complainings and thy bitter sighs, thy ever-troubled slumber. How often touching thee with my hand do I find this face all wet with tears, and thy breast loud groaning with admita deprendo manu? nil foedere rupto conubiiisve super moveor viduaque iuventa, etsi crudus amor necdum post flammea toti intepuere tori: tua me, properabo fateri, angit,¹ amate,² salus. tune incomitatus, inermis regna petes poterisque tuis decedere Thebis, si neget?: atque illum sollers dependerit semper fama duces tumidum narrat raptoque superbum difficilemque tibi: necdum consumpserat³ annum.
me quoque nunc vates, nunc exta minantia divos aut avium lapsus aut turbida noctis imago terret, et a! memini, numquam mihi falsa per umbras luno venit. quo tendis iter?: ni conscius ardur ducit et ad Thebas melior socer.” hic breve tandem risit Echionius iuvenis tenerumque dolorem coniugis amplexu solatus et oscula maestis tempestiva genis positae lacrimisque repressit; “solve metus animo, dabitur, mihi crede, merentum consiliis tranquilla dies; te fortior annis nondum cura decet. sciat haec Saturnius olim fata parens, oculosque polo demittere si quos Iustitia et rectum terris defendere curat:
fors aderit lux illa tibi, qua moenia cernes coniugis et geminas ibis regina per urbes.”

Sic ait, et caro raptim se limine profert.
Tydea iam socium coeptis, iam pectore fido

¹ angit Pw: tangit Bentley. ² amate KC: amata Pw.
³ consumpserat Pw: consumpserit Heinsius.

² i.e., when you fled from Thebes; he will be all the tiercer when his year is over. The old emendation consumpserit (“nor will he have reigned”) misses the point.
420
thy weight of cares! 'Tis not the sundering of our marriage-bond that moves me, nor a widowed youth; although our love is still fresh, nor has our couch yet since the bridal lost the first glow of passion. 'Tis thy own safety, O beloved—I hasten to confess it—that wrings my heart. Wilt thou seek thy realm unarmed, unfriended, and be able to quit thine own Thebes, should he refuse it? Yea, Report, that is ever cunning to catch the mind of princes, tells that he is proud and arrogant in his stolen power, and ill-disposed to hear thee; nor had he yet reigned a full year.\(^a\) Terrified too am I now by soothsayers, now by entrails that speak of threatening gods, by flight of birds, or by disturbing visions of the night; and ah! never do I call to mind that Juno came falsely to me in my dreams. Whither doth thy journey lead thee? except it be a secretly cherished passion that draws thee to Thebes, and union with an nobler house." Then at last the Echionian youth brief-laughing consoled his wife's tender grief, and set timely kisses on her sorrowful cheeks and stayed her tears: "Free thy mind of fear: prudent counsels, believe me, win peaceful days; cares beyond thy years become thee not. But should one day the Saturnian father take knowledge of my fate, and Justice, if she think at all to glance down from heaven and defend the right on earth: then perchance that day shall dawn for thee, when thou shalt see thy husband's walls, and go in queenly pomp through two cities."

So saying he hurried forth from the chamber that he loved, and sadly accosts Tydeus, already the partner of his enterprise, already sharing his troubles aequamentem curas—tantis post iurgia mentes vixit amor—socerumque adfatur tristis Adrastum.
fit mora consilio, cum multa moventibus una iam potior cunctis sedit sententia, frater perruptare fidem tutoque in regna precando explorare aditus. audax ea munera Tydeus sponte subit: nee non et te, fortissime gentis Aetolum, multum lacrimis conata morari Deipyle, sed iussa patris tuitique regressus legato instaeque preces viree sororis.
Iamque emensus iter silvis ac litore durum, qua Lernaea palus ambustaque sonebus alte intepet hydra vadis, et qua vix carmine raro longa sonat Nemee nondum pastoribus ausis, qua latus Eoos Ephyres quod vergit ad euros Sisyphiique sedent portus irataque terrae curva Palaemonio secluditur unda Lechaeo.1
hinc praetervenctus Nisum et te, mitis Eleusin, laevus abit,2 iamque arva gradu Teumesia et arees intrat Agenoreas; ibi durum Eteoclea cernit sublimem solio saeptumque horrentibus armis. 385 iura ferus populo trans legem ac temporae regni iam fratri de parte dabat: sedet omne paratus in facinus queriturque fidem tam sero reposci.
Constitit in mediis—ramus manifestat olivae legatum—causasque viae nomenque rogatus

1 Lechaeo PDN: liceo ω: cf. Silv. ii. 2. 35.
2 abit PB: habet (i over e) Q; habet ω.

a i.e., after the slaughter of the Nemean lion.
b Lechaeum was the port of Corinth (Ephyre), where Sisyphus had been king. For the reverse journey cf.
i. 312 sq.
with faithful heart—so strong the bond of love that united them after their quarrel—and Adrastus, father of his spouse. Long time do they hold counsel, when after pondering many a scheme one plan at last finds preference with all, to make trial of his brother's constancy and seek by humble request a safe return to the realm. Bold Tydeus volunteers the mission; yea, and thee too, bravest of the Aetolian race, would Deipyle fain stay by many a tear, but her father's command and the assurance of an envoy's safe return and her sister's just entreaties make her yield.

And now he had accomplished the full measure of a journey made rough by forests and seashore: where lay the marsh of Lerna and the burnt Hydra's heat makes warm the depths of those unrighteous waters, and where through the length of Nemea scarce is heard the scanty song of the yet timid shepherds: where Ephyre's eastern side slopes to the winds of Orient and the Sisyphian havens lie, and the wave that vents its wrath upon the land lies in the curved retreat of Lechaemum sacred to Palae-mon. Thence passes he by Nisus, leaving thee, kindly Eleusis, on his left hand, and at last treads the Teunesian fields and enters the Agenorean towers. There he beholds the cruel Eteocles high upon a throne and girt round with bristling spears. The appointed season of his reign already past, he was holding the folk under savage governance in his brother's stead; prepared for every crime he sits, and complains of so late a claiming of his promise.

Standing in the midst—the branch of olive proclaims him ambassador—when asked his name he declared it and the purpose of his coming; then, rude edidit: utque rudis fandi pronusque calori semper erat, iustis miscens tamen aspera coepit: "si tibi plana fides et dicti cura maneret foederis, ad fratrem completo iustius anno legatos hinc ire fuit teque ordine certo fortunam exuere et laetum descendere regno, ut vagus ille diu passusque haud digna per urbes ignotas pactae tandem succederet aulæ. sed quia dulcis amor regni blandumque potestas, posceris: astriferum iam velox circulus orbem torsit et amissae redierunt montibus umbrae, ex quo frater inops ignota per oppida tristes exsul agit casus; et te iam tempus aperto sub Iove ferre dies terrenaque frigora membris ducere et externos submissum ambire penates. pone modum laetis; satis ostro dives et auro conspicuus tenuem Germani pauperis annum risisti; moneo, regnorum gaudia temet dedoecas patiensque fugae mereare reverti." Dixerat. ast illi tacito sub pectore dudum ignea corda fremunt, iacto velut aspera saxa comminus erigitur serpens, cui subter inanes longa sitis latebras totumque agitata per artus convocat in fauces et squamea colla venenum: "cognita si dubiis fratri mihi iurgia signis ante forent nec clara odorum arcana paterent, sufficeret vel sola fides, qua\(^1\) torvus et\(^2\) illum mente gerens;\(^3\) ceu saepa novus iam moenia laxet

\(^1\) qua Klotz: quam P\(\omega\): quod Postgate.
\(^2\) torvus et \(\omega\): servo sed P.
\(^3\) gerens P\(\omega\): geris D.N.

\(^a\) i.e., the shade of the leaves which have fallen and grown again.
of speech as ever and quick to anger, and with mixture of harsh words, although his plea was just, he thus began: "Hadst thou simple honesty left thee and regard for a sworn bond, 'twere more right that envoys should go hence to thy brother, now thy year is finished, and that thou in due course shouldst put off thy state and contentedly leave thy throne, so that he, after long wanderings and unseemly hardships in many a strange city, should at length succeed to the promised kingdom. But since thy darling passion is to reign, and power exerts its flattering charm, we summon thee; already hath the swift circle brought round the starry globe, and the mountains have regained the shadows that they lost, since thy brother hath suffered the unhappy lot of poverty and exile in unknown cities; now is it time thou too didst spend thy days under Jove's open sky, and let earth's coldness freeze thy limbs, and pay submissive court at the hearths of strangers. Set a term to thy prosperity; long enough in rich pomp of gold and purple hast thou mocked at thy brother's year of mean poverty; I warn thee, unlearn of thine own will the joys of ruling, and in patient exile merit thy return."

He ended, but the other's fiery heart rages beneath his silent breast, as when a serpent angered by a flung stone darts up close at hand, whose limbs long thirst has racked, down in its hollow lair, and gathered all the venom to its throat and scaly neck. "Had they been doubtful signs that forewarned me of my brother's quarrel, did not his secret hate shine clear as day to me, that bold assurance alone would suffice, whereby yon, in mind his very pattern, thus prelude his fury, as though already a new train of fossor et hostiles inimicent classica turmas, praefuris. in medios si comminus orsa tulisses Bistonas aut refugo pallentes sole Gelonos, parcior eloquo et medi reverentior aeque inciperes. neque te furibundae crimine mentis arguerim: mandata referis. nunc omnia quando plena minis, nec sceptræ fide nec pace sequestra poseitis, et propior capulo manus, haec mea regi Argolico, nondum aequa tuis, vice dicta reporta:
quae sors iusta mihi, quae non indebitus annis sceptræ dicavit honos. tenco longumque tenebo.
te penes Inachiae dotalis regia dono coniugis, et Danaae—quid enim maioribus actis\(^1\) invideam?—cumulentur opes, felicibus Argos auspiciis Lernamque regas: nos horrida Direes pascua et Euboicis artatas fluctibus oras, non indignati miserum dixisse parentem Oedipoden: tibi larga—Pelops et Tantalus auctor!— nobilitas, propiorque fluat de sanguine iuncto Iuppiter. anne feret luxu consueta paterno hunc regina larem? nostræ cui iure sorores anxia pensa trahant, longo quam sordida luctu mater et ex inis auditus forte tenebris offendat sacer ille senex! iam pectora volgi adsuevere iugo: pudet heu! plebisque patrumque, ne totiens incerta ferant mutentque gementes

\(^1\) actis \(P_\omega\): aulis Madvig.

\(^a\) The Argive house was more directly descended from Jove than that of Oedipus.
sappers were breaching our fenced walls, and the trumpets were kindling the hostile bands to fierceness. Even if thou hadst been speaking to Bistonians face-to-face in their midst, or to the pale Geloni, on whom the sun shines not, thou wouldst have been more sparing of thy eloquence, and more observant of what is fair and just, in opening thy cause. Nor would I accuse thee of this madness: thou speakest but at command. Now, therefore, since all your words are threats, and ye demand the sceptre with warrant neither of trust nor peace, and your hands are ever on the sword-hilt, carry back in turn this message of mine, far short of thine as yet, to the Argolie prince: The fortune that is my right, the sceptre that due privilege of years hath assigned me, I hold, and will hold long. Keep thou thy royal dower, the gift of thy Inachian consort, pile up thy Danaan treasure—for why should I envy thee those nobler deeds?—rule Argos and Lerna under happy auspices! Be it mine to hold the rough pastures of Dirce, and the shores narrowed by the Euboean waves, nor think it shame to call unhappy Oedipus my sire! Let ancestral splendour be thy boast—scion of Pelops and Tantalus!—and by a nearer channel of descent unite Jove's blood with thine. Will thy queen, accustomed to her father's luxury, endure this simple home? rightly would my sisters perform their anxious tasks for her, my mother, unsightly from long mourning, and that accursed dotard, heard clamouring perchance from his dark seclusion, would give her offence! The people's minds are already accustomed to my yoke; I am ashamed, alas! for the folk and elders alike, lest they should suffer so oft the uncertainty of fortune imperia et dubio pigeat parere tyranno. 445 non pareit populis regnum breve; respice, quantus horror et attoniti nostro in discrimine eives!
hosne ego, quis certa est sub te duce poena, relinquam?
iratus, germane, venis. fæc velle: nec ipsi, si modo notus amor meritique est gratia, patres 450 reddere regna sinent.” non ultra passus et orsa iniecit mediis sermonibus obvia: “reddes,” ingeminat, “reddes: non si te ferreus agger ambiat aut triplices alio tibi carmine muros Amphion auditus agat, nil tela nec ignes 455 obstiterint, quin ausa luas nostrisque sub armis captivo moribundus humum diademate pulses.
tu merito; ast horum miseret, quos sanguine viles coningibus natisque infanda ad proelia raptos proicis excidio, bone rex. o quanta Cithaeron 460
funera sanguineusque vadis, Ismene, rotabis!
haec pietas, haec magna fides! nec crimina gentis mira equidem duco: sic primus sanguinis auctor incestique patrum thalami; sed fallit origo: Oedipodis¹ tu solus eras,² haec praemia morum 465
ac sceleris, violente, feres! nos poscimus annum;
sed moror.” haec audax etiamnum in limine retro³ vociferans iam tune impulsa per agmina praeceps evolat. Oeneae vindex sic ille Dianae erectus saeitis et adunque fulmine malae, 470

¹ Oedipodis Jortin: Oedipodes Pw.
² eras P: eris Deipser. ³ retro w: regis P.

a The Calydonian boar, who avenged the neglected worship of Diana.
428
THEBAID, II. 445–470

and the distressful change of rulers, and unwillingly obey a doubtful throne. Unsparing to a people is a short reign; turn and behold the dismay and horror of my citizens at my danger! Shall I abandon these, whom under thy sway sure punishment awaits? 'Tis in anger, O kinsman, that thou comest. Or suppose me willing; the fathers themselves will not suffer me to render up the crown, if I but know their love and there is gratitude for all my bounty.”

No more endured he, but even in mid-speech flung at him this retort: “Thou shalt restore,” he eries, and again, “Thou shalt restore! Nay, should an iron rampart fence thee, or Amphion with the strains of another song draw about thee a triple wall, in no wise shall fire or sword defend thee from paying for thy bold deed, and, ere thou die, beating thy captive diadem on the ground beneath our arms. Such a fate wilt thou deserve; those do I pity, whose cheap lives thou dost seize and hurl to death in horrid butchery, worthy king, and their wives and babes withal. What carnage shalt thou see, Cithaeron, and thou, Ismenus, roll down upon thy blood-stained waters! This then is loyalty, and this thy trusted word! Nor marvel I at the crimes of your race; such was the first author of your blood, such your incestuous sires; but there is a flaw in your parentage, thou only art the son of Oedipus, and this, O man of violence, shall be the reward of thy sin and crime! We claim our year! But I waste words—”

Boldly thus he shouted back while still in the doorway, then dashed out headlong through their disordered ranks. Even so the famous champion of Oenean Diana,a with bristles stiff and lightning stroke of tusked jaw, hard pressed though he be by the cum premeret Pelopea phalanx, saxa obvia volvens fractaque arbusta Acheloia ripis, iam Telamona solo, iam stratumIxiona linquens te, Meleagre, subit: ibi\(^1\) demum cuspide lata haesit et obnixo ferrum laxavit\(^2\) in armo. talis adhuc trepidum linquit Calydonius heros concilium infrendens, ipsi ceu regna negentur, festinatque vias ramumque precantis olivae abicit. attonitae tectorum e limine summo aspectant matres, saevoque infanda precantur Oenidae tacitoque simul sub pectore regi.

Nee piger ingenio scelerisque nefandae rector eget. iuvenum fidos, lectissima bello corpora, nunc pretio, nunc ille hortantibus ardens sollicitat dietis, nocturnaque proelia saevus instruit, et sanctum populis per saecula nomen legatum insidiis tacitoque invadere ferro—quid regnis non vile ?—eupit. quas quaereret artes, si fratrem, Fortuna, dares! o caeca nocentum consilia! o semper timidum seclus! exit in unum plebs ferro iurata caput; ceu castra subire apparat aut celsum crebri arietis ictibus\(^3\) urbis inclinare latus: densi sic agmine facto quinquaginta altis funduntur in ordine portis. macte animi, tantis dignus qui crederis armis!

Fert via per dumos propior, qua calle latentipraecele rant densaeque legunt compendia silvae.

\(^1\) ibi o: tibi P.
\(^2\) laxavit P: lassavit Madvig.
\(^3\) crebri arietis ictibus Unger: crebris arietibus Po.
Argive band, that rolls down stones upon him and boughs of trees uprooted from Achelous' banks, yet leaves now Telamon, now Ixion prostrate on the ground, and attacks thee, Meleager; there at last was he stayed upon the spear-thrust, and relaxed the weapon's force in his fierce-struggling shoulder. Such was the Calydonian hero, as he left the yet timorous council, with savage threats, as though 'twere he who was denied the kingdom; he hastes away, hurling from him the branch of olive. The mothers in amazement watch him from their thresholds' edge, and utter curses on the fierce son of Oeneus, and withal in their secret hearts upon the king.

But the monarch is not slothful, nor lacks cunning resource of crime and fraud unspeakable. A faithful company of chosen warriors he urges now by bribes, now by ardour of persuasive words, and fiercely plots a nocturnal affray, and would fain attack the ambassador—a name reverenced by peoples through the ages—by treachery and the silent-lurking sword. What is there that kings hold not vile? What cunning would he devise, were it his brother thou didst place in his power, O Fortune! O blind and guilty counsels! O ever timorous crime! A sworn band of soldiery go out against one single life, as though they made ready to storm a camp or level a city's lofty side with the ram's battering blows; fifty thus form close array, and march in order through the tall gates. Heaven favour now thy courage, who art deemed worthy of so numerous a foe!

A nearer road leads them through copses, where by a hidden path they make the better speed and travel by a cut through the dense woods. It was a lecta dolis sedes: gemini procul urbe malignis faucibus urgentur colles, quos umbra superni montis et incurvis claudunt iuga frondea silvis—insidias natura loco caecamque latendi struxit opem—mediasque arte secat aspera rupes semita, quam subter campi devexaque latis arva iacent spatiiis. contra importuna crepido, Oedipodioniae domus alitis; hic fera quondam pallentes erecta genas suffusaque tabo lumina, concretis infando sanguine plumis relliquias amplexa virum semesaque nudis pectoribus stetit ossa premens visuque tremendo conlustrat campos, si quis concurret dictis hospes inexplicitis aut comminus ire viator audefat et dirae commercia iungere linguac;
nec mora, quin acuens exsertos protinus ungues liventesque manus strictosque in vulnera terribili adplausu circum hospita surgeret ora;
et latuere doli, donec de rupe cruenta heu! simili depensa viro, cessantibus alis, tristis inexpletam scopulis adfligeret alvum.
monstrat silva nefas: horrent vicina iuvenci gramina, damnatis avidum pecus abstinet herbis; 520 non Dryadum placet umbrachoris, non commodasacris Faunorum, diraeque etiam fugere volucres prodigiale nemus. tacitis hue gressibus acti

1 quos superni P\textsuperscript{w}: quas superne \textit{Mueller}: quos superne \textit{Garrod}.
2 tremendo \textit{Mueller}: frementi \textit{P}: trementi \textit{w}.
3 strictosque \textit{Housman}: fractosque \textit{P\textsuperscript{w}}.
4 in vulnera \textit{PN}: in vulnere \textit{w}.

\textsuperscript{a} The scene of the ambush is modelled on Virg. \textit{Aen.} xi. 522 \textit{sq.}, but Statius has made it obscure and difficult; “colles urgentur faucibus” seems to be merely an inversion.
choice spot for a stratagem: "at a distance from the city two hills bear close upon each other with a grudging gulf between; the shadow of a mountain above and leafy ridges of curving woodland shut them in. Nature has implanted treachery in the place, and the means of hidden ambush. Through the middle of the rocks threads a rough and narrow track, below which lies a plain and a broad expanse of sloping fields. Over against it a threatening cliff rises high, the home of the winged monster of Oedipus; here aforetime she stood, fierce uplifting her pallid cheeks, her eyes tainted with corruption and her plumes all clotted with hideous gore; grasping human remains and clutching to her breast half-eaten bones she scanned the plains with awful gaze, should any stranger dare to join in the strife of riddling words, or any traveller confront her and parley with her terrible tongue; then, without more ado, sharpening forthwith the unsheathed talons of her livid hands and her teeth bared for wounding, she rose with dreadful beating of wings around the faces of the strangers; nor did any guess her riddle, till caught by a hero that proved her match, with failing wings—ah! horror!—from the bloody cliff she dashed her insatiate paunch in despair upon the rocks beneath. The wood gives reminder of the dread story: the cattle abhor the neighbouring pastures, and the flock, though greedy, will not touch the fateful herbage; no Dryad choirs take delight in the shade, it ill befits the sacred rites of the Fauns, even birds obscene fly far from the abomination of the grove. Speeding hither with silent steps comes the doomed of "fauces urgentur collibus." The "gemini colles" recur in vi. 257.
deveniunt peritura cohors, hostemque superbun adnixi iaculis et humi posita arma tenentes exspectant densaque nemus statione coronant. Coooperat umenti Phoebum subtexere palla Nox et caeruleam terris infuderat umbram. ille propinquabat silvis et ab aggere celso scuta virum galeasque videt rutilare comantis. qua laxant rami nemus adversaque sub umbra flammeus aeratis lunae tremor errat in armis. obstipuit visis, ibat tamen; horrida tantum spicula et inclusum capulo tenus admovet ensem, ac prior "unde, viri, quidve occultatis in armis?" non humili terrore rogat. nee reddita contra vox, fidamque negant suspecta silentia pacem. ecce autem vasto Chthonii contorta lacerto, quo duce freta cohors, fuses intervolat auras hasta; sed audenti deus et fortuna recessit. per tamen Olenii tegimen suis atraque saetis terga super laevos umeros vicina eruori effugit et viduo iugulum ferit inrita ligno. tunc horrere comae sanguisque in corda gelari. hue ferus atque illum animum pallentiaque ira ora fere— nec tanta putat sibi bella parari—: "ferte gradum contra campoque erumpite aperto! quis timor audendi, quae tanta ignavia? solus, solus in arma voco." neque in his mora: quos ubi plures, quam ratus, innumerus videt excursare latebris, hos prodire2 iugis, illos e vallibus innis crescere, nec paucos campo, totumque sub armis convulcere iter, ut claus-as indagine profert in medium vox prima feras, quae sola medendi

1 reddita ω: credita P.
2 prodire ω: deire P: cf. vi. 519.
band; leaning on their spears and with grounded arms held ready, they await their haughty foe, and set strong guard around the wood.

Night had begun to shroud the sunlight in her dewy pall, and had cast over the earth her dark shadow. The hero drew nigh the woods, and from a lofty mound sees the red gleam of warriors' shields and plumed helmets, where the forest boughs leave an open space, and through the opposing shade the flickering moonlight plays upon the brazen armour. Appalled at the sight he yet went onward; he but draws to him his spiky darts, and the sword sheathed to the hilt. Then first he makes question, in no base terror: "Whence are ye, men, what mean ye lurking thus armed?" No voice made answer, the suspicious silence holds no sure pledge of peace. Lo! a spear, hurled by the mighty arm of Chthonius, the leader of the band, flies through the dusky air; but heaven and fortune lent no aid to his venture. Yet through the covering of Olenian boar and the black bristly hide it sped, over his shoulder, near drawing blood, and widowed of its point strikes harmless on his throat. With hair erect and blood frozen about his heart he looks this way and that, fiercely alert and pale with rage, nor deems so large a troop to be equipped against him: "Come forth against me! out with you into the open! why such timorous daring, such arrant cowardice? alone I challenge you, alone!" Nor waited they; but when he saw them, more than he thought, swarming up from countless lurking places, some issuing from the ridges, others in ever-growing numbers coming from the valley-deeps, nor few upon the plain, as when the first cry drives the eneireled quarry into the open, and the road all lit turbata ratione via est, petit ardua dirae Sphinges et abseisis infringens eautibus uneas exsuperat iuga dira manus, scopuloque potitus, unde procul tergo metus et via prona nocendi, saxum ingens, quod vix plena cervice gementes vertere humo valcant murisque\(^1\) inferre iuvenei, rupibus evellit; dein toto sanguine nixus sustinet, immanem quaerens librare ruinam, qualis in adversos Lapithas erexit inanem magnanimus eratera Pholus. stupet obvia leto turba superstantem atque emissi turbine montis obruitur; simul ora virum, simul arma manusque fractaque commixto sederunt pectora ferro. quattuor hie adeo disiecti mole sub una congemuere, fuga tremefactum protinus agmen executitur coeptis. neque enim temnenda iacebant funera: fulmineus Dorylas, quem regibus ardens aequabat virtus, Martisque e semine Theron terrigenas confisus avos, nec vertere cuiquam frena secundus Halys, sed tune pedes occubat arvis, Pentheumque trahens nondum te Phaedimus aequo, Bacche, genus. quorum ut subitis exterrita fatis agmina turbatam vidit laxare catervam, quae duo sola manu gestans adelinia monti fixerat, intorquet iacula et fugientibus addit.
mox in plana libens, nudo ne in pectore tela inciderent, saltu praeceps defertur et orbem, quem procul oppresso vidit Therone volutum, corripuit, tergoque et vertice tegmina nota

\(^1\) valeant murisque Kooten: murisque valent \(P\omega\).

\(^a\) As he had been Pentheus’ foe, when the latter tried to suppress the Bacchanals.

436
by gleams of armour, he makes for the heights of the dire Sphinx—the only path of safety in his bewilderment—and tearing his nails upon the sheer ciff he seales the dreadful steep and gains mastery of the rock, where he has security behind and a clear downward range of harm. Then he tears away from the rocks a huge boulder, that groaning bullocks scarce with full strength could move from the ground and drag up to the wall; then heaving with all his force he raises and strives to poise the deadly mass: even as great-hearted Pholus lifted the empty mixing-bowl against his Lapith foes.
Right in death's path, aghast they view him high aloft; the mountain falls hurtling, and whelms them;
at once human limbs and faces, weapons and armour lie in mingled ruin. Four men in all groan mangled beneath that one rock; straightway the host flees panie-stricken, dashed from their enterprise. For no cowards were they who lay there dead: Dorylas of the lightning stroke, in glowing valour a match for princes, and Theron of the seed of Mars, proudly confident in earth-born ancestors, Halys, second to none in swaying at will his reined steed, but fallen on those fields in dismounted fight, and Phaedimus, who drew his birth from Pentheus, and found thee, Bacchus, still his foe. But when he saw the band in terror and disordered rout from the sudden fate of these, he hurls two javelins—these alone did he carry, and had leant them against the mountain—and sends them after the fugitives. Soon, lest darts should fall on his exposed breast, of his own will he leapt down swiftly to the level plain, and seized the shield which he saw had rolled away when Theron was crushed down, and with his wonted covering of saeptus et hostili propugnans pectora parma constittit. inde iterum densi glomerantur in unum Ogygidae firmantque gradum; trahit ocius ensem Bistonium Tydeus, Mavortia munera magni Oeneos, et partes pariter divisus in omnes hos obit atque illos ferroque micantia tela decutit; impeditant numero seque ipsa vicissim. arma premunt, nec vis conatibus ulla, sed ipsae in socios errare manus et corpora turba involvi prolapsa sua; manet ille ruentes angustus telis et inexpugnabilis obstat.

non aliter—Geticae si fas est credere Phlegrae— armatum immensus Briararcus stetit aethera contra, hinc Phoebi pharetras, hinc torvae Pallados anguis, inde Pelethroniam praefixa cuspide pinum Martis, at hinc lasso mutata tennens Pyraemone tennens fulmina, cum toto nequiquam obsessus Olympos tot queritur cessare manus: non segnier ardet hue illuc clipeum obiectans, seque ipse recedens circuit, interdum trepidis occurrit et instat spicula devellens, clipeo quae plurima toto fixa tremunt armantque virum saepe aspera passum volnera, sed nullum vitae in secreta receptum nee mortem sperare valet.

rotat ipse furentem Deilochum, comitemque illi iubet ire sub umbras Phegea sublata minitantem bella seuri Dircaeumque Gyan et Echionium Lycophontem. 610

1 mutata Pw: motata Lachmann.
2 valet Pw: valens, iubet, vacat edd.
back and head, and breast defended by his enemy’s shield he stood his ground. Then gathering again into one dense body the Ogygians advance; instantly Tydeus draws his Bistonian blade, great Oeneus’ warlike gift, and attacking every quarter alike confronts now these, now those, and with his sword strikes down their glittering weapons; their numbers hinder them, and their arms impede each other; no strength is in their efforts, but their blows go astray on their own fellows, and falling they are entangled in their own disorder. He awaits their onset, a narrow mark for javelins, and resists them, firm and unshakable. Not otherwise—if Getic Phlegra be worthy credence—stood Briareus vast in bulk against embattled heaven, contemning on this hand Phoebus’ quiver, on that the serpents of stern Pallas, here Mars’ Pelethronian pinewood shaft, with point of iron, and yonder the thunderbolts oft changed for new by weary Pyraemon, and yet complaining, though combated in vain by all Olympus, that so many hands were idle; no fainter was he in ardour, with shieldoutheld now this way, now that, himself retiring, doubling round, and ever and anon darting on their irresolute lines and pressing his vantage, while he pulls forth the many javelins that are stuck quivering all about his shield, an armoury for the hero; and many a bitter wound he suffers, yet none gains entrance to life’s secret courses, nor may hope to be deadly. A whirling stroke deals he at raging Deilochus, and bids Phgeus, who threatens attack with axe upraised, go join him beneath the shades, Dircean Gyas too and Lycophontes of Echionian

a Phlegra in Thrace where the gods fought the giants.
iam trepidi sese quaerunt numerantque, nec idem caedis amor, tantamque dolent rarescere turbam.

1 arcuerim K: arguerim Pω.

\[a\] i.e., Bacchus.

\[b\] Teumesus was a mountain near Thebes.
stock. And now, losing heart, they seek each other and count their numbers, nor feel the same zest for blood, but grieve that so large a band is growing few.

Lo! Chromis, of Tyrian Cadmus' seed—him once Phoenician Dryope was carrying in her weighted womb, when revelling bands swept her along forgetful of her burden, and while she was dragging a bull unto thee, O Euhan,a grasping its horns, the babe fell forth by stress of undue striving—Chromis at that time, in bold confidence of spears and hide of captured lion, brandished a stout club of knotted pinewood, and taunting cried: "Is one man, ye warriors, one man to go to Argos, boasting of so many slain? Scarce will he gain credence on his return! Come, friends, are there none strong in arm or weapon any more? was this our promise to the king, O Cydon? was it this, O Lampus?" While yet he shouts, the Teumesianb cornel-shaft enters his open mouth, nor does his throat stay it; his voice is choked, and the sundered tongue floats in the rush of blood. Awhile he stood, till death poured through his limbs, and he fell, and falling was silent, while his teeth bit upon the spear.

You too, O Thespians, why should I deny you and withhold from honourable renown? Periphas—none of brighter parts than he, or truer devotion—was raising from the ground his brother's dying frame, his left hand supporting the languid neck, and his right arm about his side: his breast beneath the cuirass is drained by choking sobs of grief, nor can the fastenings restrain the welling tears that flow from his helm, when amid his deep groans a heavy spear shatters his curved ribs from behind him.
exit et in fratrem, cognataque pectora telo\(^1\) consentit; ille oculos etiamnum\(^2\) in luce natantes sistit et aspecta germani morte resolvit. at cui vita recens et adhuc in vulnere vires "hos tibi complexus, haec dent" ait "oscula nati." procubuere pares fatis, miserabile votum mortis, et alterna claustrum lumina dextra.

Proterrebat agens trepidis vestigia retro passibus urgentem, donec defecit iniqua lapsus humo, pariterque manus distractus in ambas orat et a iugulo nitentem sustinet hastam: "parce per has stellis interlabentibus umbras, per superos noctemque tuam; sine, tristia Thebis nuntius acta feram vulgique per ora paventis contempto te rege canam: sic inrita nobis tela cadent, nullique tuum penetrabile ferro pectus, et optanti victor reveharis amico." dixerat. ille nihil vultu mutatus "inares perdis" ait "lacrimas, et tu, ni fallor, iniquo pollicitus mea colla duci: nunc arma diemque proice; quid timidae sequeris compendia vitae? bella manent." simul haec, et crassum sanguine telum iam redit; ille super dietis infensus amaris prosequitur vietos: "non haec trieterica vobis nox patrio de more venit, non orgia Cadmi cernitis aut avidas Bacchum scelerare parentes. nebridas et fragiles thyrsos portare putastis

\(^1\) telo P\(\omega\): ferro Schol. iii. 152: leto Nauke.

* Perhaps Tydeus should be regarded as the subject of "consertit."
* i.e., in war there is no use for the craven.
Issuing from him it pierces his brother also, and with one weapon unites the kindred breasts. The other steadies his swimming eyes, where light still lingered, but beholding his kinsman done to death closes them in darkness. But he, to whom life remains and strength as yet despite his wound, cries: "Such an embrace, such kisses may thy sons give thee!" So fell they, alike in doom, their vow performed alas! in death, and their eyes closed each by the other's hand.

But Tydeus, straightway attacking, drove Menoeetes with shield and spear before him terrified, in hurried backward retreat, till stumbling on the uneven ground he lost his footing; then prays he with both hands spread wide in supplication, and pushes away the spear that presses at his throat: "Spare me, I beseech thee by these star-inwoven shades, by the gods above, and by this night that favours thee: suffer me to bear to Thebes the sad tidings of thy deeds, and in our king's despite laud thee before our trembling folk; so may our darts fall fruitless and no steel pierce thy breast, and thou return triumphant to thy friend's desire!" He finished, but the other with countenance unchanged: "Vain tears thou wastest, and thou, if I mistake not, didst promise my head to the cruel prince. Surrender now thy arms and the light of day! Why seek the gaining of thy craven life? 'Tis wars are waiting." While yet he speaks, the spear-point returns thick-clotted with blood. Thereupon with bitter words he pursues the vanquished: "No triennial night or solemn festival are ye keeping now! no orgies of Cadmus do ye behold, no mothers eager to profane Bacchus! Did ye think ye were carrying fawnskins and brittle
STATIUS

imbellem ad sonitum maribusque incognita veris 665
foeda Celaenaeae committere proelia buxo? hie aliae cedet, alius furor: ite sub umbras,
o timidi paucique! " haec intonat; ast tamen illi membra negant, lassusque ferit praecordia sanguis.
iam sublata manus cassos defertur in ictus, tardatique gradus, clipeum nee sustinet umbo mutatum¹ spoliis,² gelidus cadit imber anhelo pectore, tum crines ardentiaque ora roribus et taeta morientum aspargine manant:
ut leo, qui campis longe custode fugato Massylas depastus oves, ubi sanguine luxuriata fames cervixque et tabe gravatae conseedere iubae, mediis in caedibus adstat aeger, hians victusque cibis; nec iam amplius irae crudescent: tantum vacuis ferit aera malis molliaque eiecta delambit vellera lingua.
Ille etiam Thebas spoliis et sanguine plenus isset et attonitis sese populoque ducique ostentasset ovans, ni tu, Tritonia virgo, flammam multaque operis caligine plenum consilio dignata virum: " sate gente superbi Oeneos, absentes cui dudum vincere Thebas adnuimus, iam pone modum nimiumque secundis pare deis: huic una fides optanda labori.
fortuna satis usus abi." restabat acerbis funeribus socioque gregi non sponte superstes
¹ mutatum $Pw$ : nutantem Lachmann.
² spoliis $Pw$ : spiclis conj. Alton.

Where Marsyas the flute-player was defeated by Apollo.
Cf. the use of "mutare" in vii. 71. E. H. Alton suggests "spiclis" for "spoliis." The spoils are apparently regarded as carried on the shield. "spiclis" ("darts") would refer to the missiles sticking in the shield, flung by his enemies.

444
wands to your unwarlike music? or were joining the fray that true men know nought of at the sound of Celaenae's a boxwood pipe? Far other carnage is this, far other madness! 'To death with you, cowards and too few!'" So thunders he, but nevertheless his limbs deny him, and the tired blood beats heavy on his heart. His arm is raised, but falls in idle blows, his steps are slow, nor can his elbow bear the weight of the buckler changed b by the spoils it bears; the cold sweat pours down his panting breast, and his hair and burning visage stream with gory dew and the foul bespattering of dying bodies: even as a lion, who has driven the shepherd far from the meadows and taken his fill of Massylian sheep, when his hunger is sated in abundance of blood, and his neck and mane are congealed and heavy with corruption, stands faint in the midst of the slaughter, his mouth agape, fordone with gorging; gone is his savage fury, he only snaps in the air his empty jaws, and with hanging tongue licks them clean of the soft wool.

Rich in spoils and bloodshed, he would even have gone to Thebes, and vaunted his triumph before astonished prince and people, hadst not thou, Tritonian maid, c deemed worthy of thy counsel the hero, still ardent and all dazed by his deeds: "Scion of proud Oeneus, to whom just now, though far away, we granted victory over Thebes, set now a limit, and strain no more the gods' undue favour; seek only credence for these toils. Depart, having used thy fortune to the full." There yet remained, an unwilling survivor of his comrades' slaughter, Maeon, c Pallas Athene, who was born, according to one legend, from a lake Triton in Libya.

445
Haemonides—ille haec praeviderat, omina doctus aeris\(^1\) et nulla deceptus ab alite—Maeon, nec veritus prohibere ducem, sed fata monentem privavere fide. vita miserandus inerti damnatur; trepido Tydeus immitia mandat:

"quisquis es Aonidum, quem erastina munere nostro manibus exemptum mediis Aurora videbit, haec iubeo perferre duei: cinge aggere portas, tela nova, fragiles aevo circum inspice muros, praecipue stipare viros densaque memento multiplicate acies! fumantem hunc aspice late ense meo campum: tales in bella venimus."

Haec ait, et meritae pulerum tibi. Pallas, honorem sanguinea de strage parat, praedamque iacentem comportat gaudens ingeniaque acta reenset. quercus erat tenerae iam longum oblita iuventae aggere camporum medio, quam plurimus ambit frondibus incurvis et crudo robore cortex. huic leves galeas perfossaque vulnere erebro insert armax ferens, huic truncos ietibus enses subligat et tractas membris spirantibus hastas. corpora tunc atque arma simul eumulata superstans incipit—oranti nox et iuga longa resultant—:

"diva ferox, magni decus ingeniumque parentis, bellipotens, cui torva genis horrore decore cassis et asperso crudescit sanguine Gorgon, nec magis ardentes Mavors hastataque pugnae impulerit Bellona tubas, huic adnue saero, seu Pandionio nostras invisere noctes\(^2\)."

---

\(^1\) aeris P; aeros BKN: heros DQ (aeris written over in Q).
\(^2\) noctes Postgate: voces P: caedes P in margin, and \(\omega\).

---

\(^a\) The Acropolis of Athens, where Pandion once reigned.
the son of Haemon; all this he had foreseen, taught of omens from the air nor deceived by any bird; nor had he feared to deter his chieftain, but the fates deprived his warnings of belief. His doom is to be pitied as a useless life; in terror he receives Tydeus' stern behest: "Whosoever of the Aonians thou art, whom saved by my bounty from uttermost darkness to-morrow's Dawn shall yet behold, this message I command thee to carry to thy prince: Raise a mound about your gates, renew your weapons, see to your old and mouldering walls, mind above all to marshall your men in close array and press troop on troop; look now at this field, everywhere smoking from my sword: even so do we make war!"

So speaking, he prepares for thee, O Pallas, of thy deserving a fair guerdon from the gory rout, and in joy collects the booty lying there and surveys all his mighty deeds. Upon a hillock in mid-plain there was an oak tree, long time forgetful of its tender youth, with curving boughs and rude strength of trunk and thick encompassing bark. To this he brings and fastens smooth helmets and armour pierced by many a stroke, to this he binds swords that his blows have broken short and spears pulled out from limbs yet breathing. Standing then on the heap of arms and bodies he thus begins, while night and the long ridges make echo to his prayer: "Stern goddess, glory and wisdom of thy mighty sire, powerful in war, thou on whose cheeks the terrible splendour of thy grim casque and blood-besprinkled Gorgon glow fierce with rage,—nor did ever Mavors or Bellona with her battle-spear inspire more furious trumpet-blasts—look favourably on this offering, whether thou comest from Pandion's hill" to be monte venis, sive Aonia devertis\(^1\) Itone laeta choris, seu tu Libyco Tritone repexas lota comas, qua te biiugo temone frementem interemeratarum voluer rapit axis equarum:
nunc tibi fraeta virum spolia informisque dicamus 725 exuvias. at si patriis Parthaonis arvis inferar et reduci pateat mihi Martia Pleuron, aurea tune mediis urbis tibi templas dicabo collibus. Ionias qua despectare procellas dulce sit, et flavo tollens ubi vertice pontum 730 turbidus obiectas Acheleus Echinadas exit.
hic ego maiorum pugnas vultusque tremendos magnumimum effingam regum, figamque superbis arma tholis, quaeque ipse meo quaesita reveyx sanguine, quaeque dabis captis, Tritonia, Thebis 735 centum ibi virginis votae Calydonides aris Actaeas tibi rite faces et ab arbore casta nectent purpureas nivio discrimine vittas, pervigilemque focus ignem longaeva sacerdos nutriet, arcanum numquam spretura\(^2\) pudorem. 740 tu bellis, tu pace feres de more frequentes primitias operum, non indignante Diana.” dixerat, et dulces iter instaurabat ad Argos.

\(^{1}\) devertis \textit{Pw}; divertis \textit{DN}; de vertice \textit{conj. Garrod}.
\(^{2}\) spretura \textit{P}; inspectura \textit{w}.

\(a\) A mountain in Thessaly, on which there was a temple of Athena. Aonian seems here to mean haunt of Muses, from its usual meaning, Boeotian; the Muses were connected with Thessaly also.

\(b\) See note on 1. 684.
present at my night of triumph, or whether thou dost turn aside from thy glad dances in Aonian Itone,\nor hast washed and combed thy hair again in Libyan\nTriton's waters, whither the fleet axle of thy inviolate mares doth speed thee shouting loud upon thy twohorsed chariot; now do we dedicate to thee the shattered spoils and shapeless armour of heroes. But should I come to my native Parthaonian fields,\nand Martian Pleuron throw wide her gates for my returning, then in the midst of the city's hills will I consecrate to thee a golden temple, where it may be thy pleasure to look down upon Ionian storms, and where turbulent Aehelous with yellow head tossed high disturbs the deep, and leaves the barrier of the Echinades behind. Here will I carve ancestral wars and the awful visages of great-hearted kings, and arms will I hang in the proud shrines, arms that I myself bore home and gained at my own blood's cost, and those that thou, Tritonian maid, shalt give when Thebes is taken. A hundred Calydonian maidens there, votaries of thy virgin altars, shall duly twine thee Attie torches, and weave from thy chaste olive-tree purple fillets set off with snow-white wool; an aged priestess shall tend a never-failing fire upon the hearths, and hold in continual reverence thy mystic saneties. Thou as of old shalt win in war and in peace rich first-fruits of my labours, nor shall Diana be offended." So prayed he, and set out again for pleasant Argos.

\[c\] See note on i. 670.
\[d\] Diana was the most important deity of Aetolia.
LIBER III

At non Aoniae moderator perfidus aulæ¹ nocte sub ancipiti, quamvis uementibus abris longus ad auroram superet labor, otia somni accipit: invigilant animo scelerisque parati supplicium exerceant curae; tum plurima versat 5 pessimus in dubiiis augment timor. "ei mihi" elamat, "unde morae?"—nam prona ratus facilemque tot armis
Tydea, nec numero virtutem animumque rependit—"num regio diversa viae? num missus ab Argis subsidio globus? an sceleris data fama per urbes 10 finitimas? paucosne, pater Gradive, manue legimus indeeores? at enim fortissimus illie et Chromis et Dorylas et nostris turribus aequi Thespiadæ totos raperent mihi funditus Argos. nec tamen ille meis, reor, impenetrabilis armis 15 aere gerens solidoque satis² adamante laeertos venerat; heu segnes, quorum labor haeret in uno, si conserta manus." vario sie turbidus aestu angitur ac sese culpæ super omnia, qui non orantem in mediis legatum coetibus ense 20 pereulerit foedasque palam satiaverit iras. iam pudet incepti, iam paenitet. ac velut ille

¹ aulæ ω: orae P.
² satis Heinsius: datos Pω.
BOOK III

But not to the perfidious lord of the Aonian palace comes the repose of slumber in the twilight hours, although for the dank stars long travail yet remain till dawn; in his mind care holds vigil and wreaks the penalty for his plotted crime; then fear, gloomiest of augurs in perplexity, broods deeply. "Ah me!" he cries, "why this tarrying?"—for he had deemed the task a light one, and Tydeus an easy prey to so many warriors, nor weighed his valour and spirit against their numbers—"Went they by different roads? Was a company sent from Argos to his succour? Or has news of the deed spread round the neighbouring cities? Chose we too few, O father Gradivus, or men unrenowned in action? But valiant Chromis and Dorylas and the Thespians, a match for these towers of mine, could at my bidding level all Argos with the ground. Nor proof, I ween, against my weapons had he come hither, though his frame were wrought of bronze or solid adamant. For shame, ye cowards, whose efforts fail before a single foe, if indeed ye fought at all!" Thus is he tormented by various gusts of passion, and above all blames himself, for that he struck not the envoy with his sword as he spoke in mid assembly, nor openly sated to the full his savage wrath. Now he feels shame of his design, and now repents him of the fluctibus Ioniis Calabae datus arbiter alno—nec rudis undarum, portus sed linquere amicos purior Olenii frustra gradus impulit astri—, cum fragor hiberni subitus Iovis, omnia mundi elaustra tonant multusque polos inclinat Orion, ipse quidem malit terras pugnatque reverti, fert ingens a puppe notus, tunc arte relicta ingemit et caecas sequitur iam nescius undas :
talis Agenoreus ductor caeloque morantem Luciferum et seros maerentibus increpat ortus.

Ecce sub occiduas versae iam Noctis habenas astrorumque obitus, ubi primum maxima Tethys impulit Eoo cunctantem Hyperiona ponto, ima flagellatis, signum lugubre malorum, ponderibus trepidavit humus, motusque Cithaeron antiquas dedit ire nives ; tunc visa levari culmina septenaeque iugo concurrere portae.
et prope sunt causae : gelido remeabat Eoo iratus fatis et tristis morte negata Haemonides ; needum ora patent, dubiusque notari signa dabat magnae longe manifesta ruinae planetuque et gemitu ; lacrimas nam protinus omnis fuderat. haud aliter salut duvertitur orbus pastor ab agrestum nocturna strage luporum, cuius erile pecus silvis inopinus abegit imber et hibernae ventosa cacumina lunae :

1 abegit Pω : adegit Ellis.

a The star Capella, whose rising was at the rainy season; from Aege, daughter of Olenus (from whom the Aetolian town derived its name), who with her sister Helice suckled Zeus in Crete, and as a reward was turned into a goat and given a place in the sky. The rising of Orion was also at the rainy season. "Brings low the poles": i.e., when the low clouds make the sky seem to touch the earth.
shame. And like to the appointed helmsman of a Calabrian barque upon Ionian waters (nor does he lack sea-craft, but the Olenian star\(^a\) rising clearer than its wont has beguiled him to leave a friendly haven), when a sudden uproar fills the wintry sky, and all heaven's confines thunder, and Orion in full might brings low the poles—he himself would fain win the land, and struggles to return, but a strong south wind astern bears him on; then, abandoning his craft, he groans, and heedless now follows the blind waters: even so the Agenorean chieftain upbraids Lucifer, yet lingering in the heavens, and the sun, so slow to rise on the distressed.

Lo! beneath the western rein of Night, her course already turned, and the setting stars, so soon as mighty Tethys had driven forth tardy Hyperion from the Eastern sea, the earth with swaying masses trembled to her foundations, drear sign of ills to come, and Cithaeron was stirred and made his ancient snows to move; then were the rooftops seen to rise and the sevenfold gates to meet the mountain-ridges. Nor distant was the cause: wroth with his destiny and sad that death had been denied him, the son of Haemon\(^b\) was returning in the cold hour of dawn; not yet is his face plain, but, though indistinct to view, he gave from afar clear signs of dire disaster by wailing and beating his breast; for all his tears had soon been shed. Not otherwise does a bereaved herdsman leave the glade where savage wolves have wrought nocturnal earnage, what time a sudden squall of rain and the windy horns of the winter moon have driven his master's cattle to the woods;

\(^a\) Maeon, see ii. 690.
luce patent caedes; domino perferre recentes ipse timet casus, haustaque informis harena questibus implet agros, stabulique silentia magni odit et amissos longo ciet ordine tauros.

Illum congestae portarum ad limina matres ut solum videre—nfas!—nulla agmina circum magnanimosque duces, nil ausae quaeere tollunt elamorem, qualis bello supremus apertis urbibus, aut pelago iam descendente carina.
ut primum invisi cupido data copia regis:
hanc tibi de tanto donat ferus agmine Tydeus infelicem animam, sive haec sententia divum, seu fortuna fuit, seu, quod pudet ira fateri, vis invicta viri. vix credo et nuntius: omnes procubuere, omnes. noctis vaga lumina testor et socium manes et te, mala protinus ales, qua redeo, non hanc laerimis meruisse nec astu crudelem veniam atque inhonorae munera lucis.
sed mihi iussa deum placitoque ignara moveri Atropos atque olim non haec data ianua leti eripuere necem. iamque ut mihi prodiga vitae pectora et extremam nihil horrescentia mortem aspicias: bellum infandum omnibusque negatam movisti, funeste, aciem; dum pellere leges, et consanguineo gestis\(^2\) regnare superbus exsule, te series orbarum excisa domorum planctibus adsiduis, te diro horrore volantes quinquaginta animae circum noctesque diesque

\(^1\) descendente \(P\wedge\): desidente \(Heinsius\). \(Klotz\ cp. Val.\) \(Flacc.\ viii. 332.\)

\(^2\) gestis \(P\wedge: gliscis \(\omega.\)

\(^a\) "protinus": lit. "thou immediately, i.e., inevitably evil light makes the slaughter manifest; he fears to take the new tidings to his lord, and pouring unsightly dust upon his head fills the fields with his lamentations, and hates the vast and silent stalls, while he calls aloud the long roll of his lost bulls.

When the mothers crowding to the threshold of the gates beheld him all alone—ah, horror!—no troop around him or valiant chieftains, they venture not to question him, but raise a cry like unto that last cry when cities are flung open to the victors, or when a ship sinks at sea. As soon as audience at his desire was granted by the hated king: "This hapless life fierce Tydeus doth present thee of all that company, whether the gods have willed it so, or fortune, or, as my anger feels shame to confess, that man's unconquerable might. Scarce do I believe my own report; all have perished, all! Witness night's wandering fires, my comrades' ghosts, and thou, evil omen wherewith I must needs return, no tears nor wiles won me this cruel grace and dishonoured gift of light. But the gods' commands snatched destruction from me, and Atropos, whose pleasure knows no denial, and the fate that long since shut against me this door of death. And now that thou mayst see that my heart is prodigal of life, nor shrinks from final doom: 'tis an unholy war thou hast begun, thou man of blood, no omens will approve thy arms; and while thou endeavourest to banish law, and reign exultant in thy kinsman's exile, the unceasing plaint of a long line of ruined desolate homes, and fifty spirits hovering night and day shall haunt thee with dire terror; for I also omen": the very fact of his coming home alive was an evil omen, because it meant that he must kill himself.
adsilient; neque enim ipse moror.” iam moverat iras rex ferus, et tristes ignescunt sanguine vultus. inde ultro Phlegyas et non cunctator iniqui Labdacus—hos regni ferrum penes—ire manuque 80 proturbare parant. sed iam nudaveratensem magnanimitus vates, et nunc trucis ora tyranni, nunc ferrum aspectans: “numquam tibi sanguinis huius ius erit aut magno ferientes imperdita Tydeo pectora; vado equidem exsultans ereptaque fata 85 insequoet comites feror exspectatus ad umbras. te superis fratrique—” et iam media orsa loquentis absciderat plenum capulo latus; ille doloripugnati ingestem nisu duplicatus inictum conruit, extremsque animae singultibus errans 90 alternus nunc ore venit, nunc vulnere sanguis. excussae procerum mentes, turbataque mussantconcilia; ast illum conjux fidique parentes servantem vultus et torvum in morte peracta, non longum reducem laetati, in tecta ferebant. 95 sed ducis infandi rabidae non hactenus irae stare queunt; vetat igne rapi, pacemque sepulcri impius ignaris nequiquam manibus arcet.

Tu tamen egregius fati mentisque nee umquam— sic dignum est—passure situm, qui comminus ausus 100 vadere contemptum reges, quaque ampla veniret libertas, sancire viam: quo carmine dignam, quo satis ore tuis famam virtutibus addam, augur amate deis? non te caelestia frustra 456 delay not." Already the fierce king's anger was stirred, and blood lights up his scowling visage. Then Phlegyas and Labdacus, who never dallied at evil work—the realm's armed might was in their keeping—prepare unbidden to go and assault him with violence. But already the great-souled seer had bared his blade, and looking now at the truculent tyrant's face, now at his sword: "Never shalt thou have power upon this blood of mine nor strike the breast that great Tydeus spared; I go, yea exultant, and meet the fate whereof he robbed me; I am borne to the shades of my expectant comrades. As for thee, to the gods and thy brother—"

Even as he spoke, the sword was in his side to the hilt, cutting short his words; he fights against the agony, and with a strong effort doubling himself over the mighty blow sinks down, and the blood, sped by the last gaspings of his life, comes forth now from his mouth, now from the wound. The chiefs are stricken with dismay, the councillors mutter in alarm; but he, with visage set and grim in the death his hand accomplished, is borne to his house by his wife and trusty kinsmen, who have had no long joy of his return. But the mad rage of the impious ruler cannot so long be stayed; he forbids that the corpse be consumed with fire, and in vain defiance bars the peace of the tomb from the unwitting shades.

But thou, so noble in thy death and in thy constancy, thou who wilt never suffer oblivion—such is thy due reward—thou who daredst scorn a monarch to his face, and thus hallow the path of ample freedom: by what strain of sufficing utterance can I add due renown to thy high prowess, augur beloved by the gods? Not in vain did Apollo teach thee all his edocuit lauruque sua dignatus Apollo est,\(^1\) et nemorum Dodona parens Cirrhaeaque virgo tau deb \(^2\) tacito populos suspendere Phoebo, nune quoque Tartareo multum divisus Averno Elysias, i, carpe plagas, ubi manibus axis invius Ogygiis nec suntis iniqua tyranni iussa valent; durant habitus et membra cruentis inviolata feris, nudoque sub axe iacentem et nemus et tristis volucrum reverentia servat.

At nuptae exanimes puerique aegrique parentes moenibus effusi per plana, per avia, passim quisque suas avidi ad lacrimas miserabile currunt certamen, quos densa gradu comitantur euntes milia solandi studio; pars visere flagrant unius acta viri et tantos in noite labores.

fervet iter gemitu et plangoribus arva reclamant.

ut vero infames scopolos silvamque nefandam perventum, ceu nulla prius lamenta nec atri manassent imbres, sic ore miserrimus uno exoritur fragor, aspectuque accensa cruento arva reclamant: stat sanguineo discissus amictu Luctus atrox caesoque invitat pectore matres.

scrutantur galeas frigentum inventaque monstrant corpora, prociduae super externosque suosque.

hae pressant in tabe comas, hae lumina signant vulneraque alta rigant\(^3\) lacrimis, pars spicula dextra nequiquam parecente trahunt, pars molliter aptant brachia trunca loco et cervieibus ora reponunt.

\(^1\) There is possibly a lacuna after this line.
\(^2\) gaudiebit Markland: audebit P\(\omega\).
\(^3\) rigant P: replent \(\omega\).

\(a\) Theban; see s on i. 173.
heavenly lore and deem thee worthy of his laurel, and Dodona mother of forests and the Cirrhaean virgin shall rejoice to keep the folk in suspense while Phoebus holds his peace. And now far removed from Tartarean Avernus go thou and roam Elysian regions, where the sky admits not Ogygian souls, nor a guilty despot's cruel behests have power; thy raiment and thy limbs endure, left inviolate by gory beasts, and the forest and the birds with sorrowing awe watch o'er thee, as thou liest beneath the naked sky.

But fainting wives and children and ailing parents pour forth from the city walls, and by easy road or trackless region everywhere haste in piteous rivalry, eager to gain the object of their own lament, while in their company go crowded thousands zealous to console; some are burning with desire to see one warrior's achievement and all the labours of the night. The road is loud with lamentation, and the fields re-echo the cries of grief. But when they reached the infamous rocks and the accursed wood, as though none had mourned before, nor bitter tears had flowed, one cry of keenest anguish rises, as from one mouth, and the sight of the carnage drives the folk to madness; Grief inconsolable stands there with bloody raiment rent and with pierced breast incites the mothers. They search the helmets of the warriors now cold in death, and display the bodies they have found, stretched prostrate alike on stranger and on kinsman. Some steep their hair in the gore, some close up eyes and wash the deep wounds with their tears, others draw out the darts with vainly merciful hand, others gently replace the severed limbs and set the heads again to their shoulders.
At vaga per dumos vacuique in pulvere campi magna parens iuvenum, gemini nunc funeris, Ide squalentem sublata comam llevantiaque ora ungue premens—nec iam infelix miserandaque, verum terror inest lacrimis—, per et arma et corpora passim canitiem impexam dira tellure volutans quaeerit inops natos omnique in corpore plangit. Thessalis haud aliter bello gavisa recenti, cui gentile nefas hominem renovare canendo, multifida attollens antiqua lumina cedro nocte subit campos versatque in sanguine functum vulgus et explorat manes, cui plurima busto imperet ad superos: animarum maesta queruntur concilia, et nigri pater indignatur Avernii. Illi in secessu pariter sub rupe iacebant felices, quos una dies, manus abstulit una, pervia vulneribus media trabe pectora nixi. ut vidit lacrimisque oculi patuere profusis: "hosne ego complexus genetrix, haec oscula, nati, vestra tuor?: sic vos extremo in fine ligavit ingenium crudele necis?: quae vulnera tractem, quae prius ora premam?: vosne illa potentia matris, vos uteri fortuna mei, qua tangere divos rebar et Ogygias titulis anteire parentes?: at quanto melius dextraque in sorte iugatae, quis steriles thalami nulloque ululata dolore respexit Lucina domum! mihi quippe malorum

\footnote{a}{A Theban mother, not elsewhere mentioned: the names of her sons are not given.}
\footnote{b}{i.e., of being disturbed by the witch.}
But Ide\textsuperscript{a} wanders through the thickets and on the open dusty plain—Ide, mighty mother of twin heroes, twinned now in death—with dishevelled hair all flowing, and nails piercing deep her livid cheeks; no more unhappy or pitiable is she, but terrible in her grief; and everywhere by weapons and by bodies she strews on the dire ground her white uncombed locks, and in helpless plight seeks her sons and over every corpse makes lamentation. Not otherwise does the Thessalian witch, whose race's hideous art it is to charm back men to life by spell of song, rejoice in warfare lately ended, and holding high her faggot-torch of ancient cedar nightly haunt the fields, while she turns the slain folk over in their blood, and tries the dead, to see to which corpse she shall give many a message for the world above; the gloomy councils of the shades complain,\textsuperscript{b} and black Avernus' sire waxes indignant.

Together they were lying, apart from the rest beneath a rock, fortunate, that one day, one hand had wrought their doom; their wound-pierced breasts are knit fast by the uniting spear. She saw them, and her eyes made passage for the streaming tears: "Is it so ye embrace, my sons, is it so ye kiss, before your mother's eyes? Is it so that Death's cruel cunning at the final hour hath bound you? Which wounds shall I first touch, which face caress? Are ye those strong defenders of your mother, that glory of my womb, whereby I thought to touch the gods, and surpass the mothers of Ogygia in renown? How much better far, how happy in their union are they whose chamber is barren, whose house Lucina never visited at the cry of travail! Nay, to me my labour hath brought but sorrow.
causa labor; sed nec bellorum in luce patenti conspiciui fatis aeternaque gentibus ausi quaesistis miserae vulnus memorabile matri, sed mortem obseuram numerandaque\(^1\) funera passi, heu quantus furto eruor et sine laude iacetis! quin ego non dexam miserae complexibus ausim dividere et tanti consortia rumpere leti: ite diu fratres indiscretique supremis ignibus et carus urna confundite manes!"

Nec minus interea digesta strage suorum hie Cthonium coniunx, hie mater Penthea clamat Astyoche, puerique rudes, tua, Phaedime, proles, amissam didiere patrem, Marpessaque pactum Phyllea, sanguineumque lavant Acamanta sorores. tune ferro retegunt silvas eollisque propinqui annosum truеant apicem, qui conscius actis noetis et inspexit gemitus; ibi grandior aevo ante rogos, dum quisque suo nequit igne revelli, concilium infaustum dictis mulcebat Aletes: "saepе quidem infelix varioque exercita ludo fatorum gens nostra fuit,\(^2\) Sidonius ex quo hospes in Aonios icet sata ferrea suleos, unde novi fetus et formidata colonis arva suis. sed nec veteris cum regia Cadmi fulmineum in einem monitis Iunonis iniquae consedit, neque funerea cum laude potitus infelix Athamas trepido de monte veniret, numeranda \(\omega\): numerosa \(P\): numerosa ubi funera Garrod.

\(^1\) numeranda \(\omega\): numerosa \(P\): numerosa ubi funera Garrod.
\(^2\) fuit \(P\) (ruit written over): ruit \(\omega\).

\(^a\) Lit. "suffering deaths which were (only) for the count-
Nor in the broad glare of battle met ye a glorious fate, nor daring deeds ever famous among men did ye seek a death whose story might be told to your unhappy mother, but obscure ye fell and counting but in the tale of deaths⁠¹; alas! in what streams of blood ye lie, unnoticed and unpraised! I dare not indeed sunder your poor embracing arms, or break the union of so noble a death; go, then, and long abide true brothers, unparted by the final flames, and mingle your loved ashes in the urn!"

No less in the meantime do the rest make lament, each over their own slain: here doth his wife mourn Chthonius, there Astyoche his mother grieves over Pentheus, and tender lads, thy offspring, Phaedimus, have learnt their father’s fate; Marpessa laves Phylleus, her betrothed, and his sisters cleanse the blood-stained Acamas. Then with the iron they lay bare the woods, and lop the antique crown of the neighbouring hill, that knew the secret of the night’s doings and watched the agony; there before the funeral piles, while each clings to the fire he himself has kindled, aged Aletes speaks consoling words to the unhappy company: "Often indeed has our race known sorrow and been racked by the heartless sport of Fate, ay, ever since the Sidonian wanderer cast the iron seed upon the furrows of Aonia, whence came strange growing and fear to the husbandmen of their own fields. But neither when old Cadmus’ palace sank into fiery ashes at cruel Juno’s bidding,⁠² nor when hapless Athamas,⁠³ gaining a deadly fame, came down from the astonied mount, haling, alas! ing," numeranda, not memoranda; they were only two more in the list of dead.

⁠¹ See note on ii. 293.
⁠² See n. on i. 13.
semianimem heu laeto referens clamore Learcum, hic gemitus Thebis, nec tempore clarius illo Phoenissae sonuere domus, cum lassa furorem vicit et ad comitum lacrimas expavit Agave. una dies similis fato specieque malorum aequa fuit, qua magniloquos luit impia flatus Tantalis, innumeris cum circumfusa ruinis corpora tot raperet terra, tot quaereret ignes. talis erat vulgi status, et sic urbe relicta primaevique senesque et longo examine matres invidiam planxere deis miseroque tumultu bina per ingentes stipabant funera portas. meque ipsum memini—needum apta laboribus aetas—flesse tamen gemituque meos aequasse parentes. illa tamen superi. nec quod tibi, Delia, castos prolapsum fontes specula temerare profana heu dominum insani nihil agnovere Molossi, deflerim magis, aut verso quod sanguine fluxit in subitos regina lacus: sic dura Sororum pensa dabant visumque Iovi. nunc regis iniqui ob noxam immeritos patriae tot culmina eives exuimus, nec adhuc calcati foederis Argos fama subit, et iam bellorum extrema dolemus. quantus equis quantusque viris in pulvere erasso sudor! io quanti crudele rubebitis amnes!

a Agave slew her son Pentheus unwittingly, under the influence of Bacchic frenzy.

b Niobe, daughter of Tantalus and wife of Amphion, king of Thebes. She boasted of her seven sons and seven daughters, and was punished by their being all slain by Apollo and Artemis.
with exultant cries Learchus, nigh a corpse, hath such woe come to Thebes; nor louder then did Phoenician homes re-echo, when weary Agave overcame her frenzy, and trembled at her comrades' tears. One day alone matched this in doom, and brought disaster in like shape, that day when the impious Tantalid atoned her presumptuous boasting, when she caught up all those bodies whose countless ruin strewed the earth around her, and sought for each its funeral flames. As great then was our people's woe, and even so from forth the city went young and old and mothers flocking, and cried out their hearts' bitterness against heaven, and in crowding misery thronged the double pyre at each mighty gate. I too, so I remember, though my years were tender, wept nevertheless, and equalled my parents' tears. Yet those ills were heaven-sent; nor would I more lament that the mad Molossian hounds knew not their master, when he crept forth from his unholy spying-place to profane, O Delia, thy chaste fountains, nor that the queen, her blood transformed, melted suddenly into a lake. Such was the hard assignment of the Sisters, and so Jove willed it. But now by a cruel monarch's erime have we lost these guiltless citizens, so many chiefs of our land; and not yet hath the fame of the spurned covenant reached Argos, and already we suffer the extremities of war. Alas! what sweat of toil in the thick dust of battle is in store for men and steeds! alas! how high will ye flow, ye rivers, blushing your cruel red!

The references are to Actaeon and Dirce; the latter, the wife of Lycus, a Theban prince, was changed into the fountain of that name.
viderit haec bello viridis manus: ast ego doner dum licet igne meo terraque insternar avita!" haec senior, multumque nefas Eteolcis acervat crudelem infandumque vocans poenasque daturum. unde ea libertas? iuxta illi finis et aetas tota retro, seraeque decus velit addere morti.

Haec sator astrorum iamdudum e verticie mundi prospectans primoque imbutas sanguine gentes Gradivum acciri propere iubet. ille furentes Bistonas et Geticas populatus caedibus urbes turbidus aetherias currus urgebatis ad arces, fulmine cristatum galeae iubar armaque in auro tristica, terrificis monstrorum animata figuris, incutiens: tonat axe polus elipeique cruenta lux rubet, et solem longe ferit aemulus orbis.
hunc ubi Sarmaticos etiamnum efflare labores Iuppiter et tota perfusum pectora belli tempestate videt: "talis mihi, nate, per Argos, talis abi, sic ense madens, hac nubilus ira. exturbent resides frenos et cuneta perosis te cupiant, tibi praecipites animasque manusque devoteant, rape cunctantes et foedera turba, cui dedimus, tibi fas ipsos incendere bello caelicolas pacemque meam. iam semina pugnae ipse dedi: remeat portans immania Tydeus ausa, ducis scelus et, turpis primordia belli,

1 tota Pω: torta Garrod, from ms. at Peterhouse.
2 cuneta Pω: vincla Bentley; tuta Garrod.
All this will our youth behold, yet green to war; as for me, may I be granted, while it may be, my own funeral pyre, and be laid in my ancestral earth!" So spoke the aged man, and heaped high the crimes of Eteocles, calling him cruel and abominable and doomed to punishment. Whence came this freedom of speech? his end was near, and all his life behind him, and he would fain add glory to a late-found death.

All this the creator of the stars had long observed from the summit of the world, and seen the peoples stained by the first bloodshed; then bids he Gradivus straight be called. He having laid waste with slaughter the wild Bistonian folk and Getic towns was driving his chariot in hot haste toward the ethereal heights, flashing the splendour of his lightning-crested helm and angry golden armour, alive with monstrous shapes of terror; heaven's vault roars thunderous. his shield glows with blood-red light and its emulous orb strikes on the sun from far. When Jupiter saw that he yet panted with his Sarmatic toils, and that all the tempest of war yet swayed his breast: "Even as thou art, my son, even so hie thee through Argos, with thy sword thus dripping, in such a cloud of wrath. Let them cast off the sloth that curbs them, let them hate all and desire but thee, let them in frenzy vow to thee their lives and hands; sweep away the doubting, confound all treaties; thou mayst consume in war—to thee have I granted it—even gods themselves, ay, and the peace of Jove. Already I have sown the seeds of battle: Tydeus, as he returns, brings news of monstrous outrages, the monarch's crime, the first beginnings of base warfare, the ambush and the insidias fraudesque, suis quas ultus in armis.
adde fidem. vos o superi, meus ordine sanguis, ne pugnare odiis, neu me temptare precando certetis;
sie Fata mihi nigraeque Sororum iuraveret colus:
manet haec ab origine mundi fixa dies bello, populique in proelia nati.
quodni me veterum poenas sancire malorum gentibus et diros sinitis punire nepotes—arcem hanc aeternam, gentis sacaria nostrae, testor et Elysios, etiam mihi numina, fontes—, ipse manu Thebas correptaque moenia fundo exequam versasque solo super Inacha tecta effundam turres aut stagna in caerula verram3 imbre superiecto, licet ipsa in turbinre rerum Iuno suos colles templumque amplexa laboret.” dixit, et attoniti iussis. mortalia credas pectora, sic eunci vocemque animosque tenebant.4 non secus ac longa ventorum pace solutum aequor et imbelli recubant ubi litora somno, silvarumque comas et abacto flamine nubes muleet iners aestas; tune stagna lacusque sonori detumure, tacent exusti solibus amnes.
Gaudet ovans iussis et adhuc temone calenti fervidus in laevum torsit Gradivus habenas.
iamque iter extremum caelique abruptly tenebat, treachery, which with his own weapons he avenged. Add thou credence to his tale. And you, ye gods, scions of my blood, indulge no angry strife, no rivalry to win me by entreaties; thus have the Fates sworn to me, and the dark spindles of the Sisters: this day abides from the beginning of the world ordained for war, these peoples are destined to battle from their birth. But if ye suffer me not to exact solemn vengeance for their sins of old, and to punish their dreadful progeny—I call to witness these everlasting heights, our race's holy shrine, and the Elysian streams that even I hold sacred—with my own arm will I destroy Thebes and shatter her walls to their foundations, and cast out upon the Inachian dwellings her uprooted towers, or else pour down my rain upon them and sweep them into the blue depths, ay, though Juno's self should embrace her hills and temple, and toil amid the chaos.”

He spoke, and they were spellbound at his commands. Mortal in mind thou hadst deemed them, so curbed they one and all their voice and spirit. Even as when a long truce of winds has calmed the sea, and the shores lie wrapt in peaceful slumber, indolent summer sets her spell upon forest leaves and clouds, and drives the breezes far; then on lakes and sounding meres the swelling waters sink to rest, and rivers fall silent 'neath the sun's scorching rays.

Exulting with joy at these commands, and glowing yet with his chariot's burning heat, Gradivus leftward swung the reins; soon he was gaining his journey's end and the steeps of heaven, when Venus in its defence. “Elysian streams”: i.e., Styx, a river of the underworld.
cum Venus ante ipsos nulla formidine gressum figit equos; cessere retro iamiamque rigentes suppliciter posuere iubas. tune pectora summo 265 adclinata ingo voltumque obliqua madentem incipit—interea dominae vestigia iuxta spumantem proni mandunt adamanta iugales—: "bella etiam in Thebas, soec o pulcherrime, bella ipse paras ferroque tuos abolere nepotes? 270 nec genus Harmoniae nec te conubia caelo festa nec hae quiequam lacrmae, furibunde, morantur? criminis haece merces? hoc fama pudorque relictus, hoc mihi Lemniacae de te meruere catenae? perge libens; at non eadem Volcania nobis obsequia, et laesi servit tamen ira mariti! illum ego perpetuis mihi desudare caminis si iubeam vigilesque operi transmittere noctes, gaudeat ornatusque novos ipsique laboret arma tibi; tu—sed scopulos et aena precando 280 flectere corda paro; solum hoc tamen anxia, solum obtestor, quid me Tyrio sociare marito progeniem caram infaustisque dabas hymenaeis? dum fore praeclaros armis et vivida rebus pectora vipereo Tyrios de sanguine iactas 285 demissumque Io\'is serie genus. a! mea quanto Sithonia mallem nupsisset virgo sub Arco trans Borean Thracasque tuos. indigna parumne pertulumus, divae Veneris quod filia longum reptat et Illyricas deiectat virus in herbas? 290

\[ \text{a i.e., the people of Thebes, which was founded by Cadmus, whose wife she was.} \]

470
unafraid stood in his horses' very path; backward they gave place, and e'en now have drooped their thick manes in suppliant wise to earth. Then leaning her bosom on the yoke, and with sidelong tearful glance she begins—meanwhile bowed at their mistress' feet the horses champ the foaming steel: "War even against Thebes, O noble father, war dost thou thyself prepare, and the sword's destruction for all thy race? And does not Harmonia's offspring, nor heaven's festal day of wedlock, nor these tears of mine, thou madman, give thee one moment's pause? Is this thy reward for my misdoing? Is this the guerdon that the Lemnian chains and scandal's tongue and loss of honour have won for me at thy hands? Proceed then as thou wilt; far different service does Vulcan pay me, and even an injured husband's wrath yet does my bidding. If I were to bid him sweat in endless toil of furnaces and pass unsleeping nights of labour, he would rejoice and work at arms and at new accoutrements, yea, even for thee! Thou—but I essay to move rocks and a heart of bronze by praying!—yet this sole request, this only do I make in anxious fear: why didst thou have me join our beloved daughter to a Tyrian husband in ill-omened wedlock? And boast the while that the Tyrians, of dragon stock and direct lineage of Jove, would win renown in arms and show hearts keen and alive for action? Ah! would rather our maiden had married beneath the Sithonian pole, beyond Boreas and thy Thracians! Have I not suffered wrong enough, that my daughter crawls her length upon the ground, and spews poison on the Illyrian grass?

\[b\] i.e., Harmonia, wife of Cadmus, son of Agenor, king of Tyre.

471
nunc gentem immitteram—" lacrimas non pertulit ultra Bellipotens, hastam laeva transumit et alto, haud mora, desiluit curru, clipeoque receptam laedit in amplexu dietisque ita mulcet amicis:
 "O mihi bellorum requies et sacra voluptas unaque pax animo! soli cui tanta potestas divorumque hominumque meis occurrere telis impune et media quamvis in caede frementes hos adsistere equos, huncensem avellere dextrae.
 nec mihi Sidonii genialia foedera Cadmi nec tua cara fides—ne falsa inessere gaude!— exciderunt: prius in patrui deus infera mergar stagna et pallentes agar exarmatus ad umbras.
sed nunc fatorum monitus mentemque supremi iussus obire patris—neque enim Vulcania tali imperio manus apta legi—, quo pectore contra ire Iovem dictasque paret contemnere leges, cui modo—pro vires!—terrassaelumque fretumque ad tremere oranti tantosque ex ordine vidi delituisse deos? sed ne mihi corde supremos concipe, cara, metus! quando haec mutare potestas nulla datur—cum iam Tyriis sub moenibus ambae bellabunt gentes, adero et socia arma iuvabo.
tune me sanguineo late defervere1 campo res super Argolicas haud sic deiecta videbis;
hoc mihi ius, nec fata vetant." sic orsus aperto flagrantes immisit equos. non ocius alti
in terras cadit ira Iovis, si quando nivalem Othryn et Arctoae gelidum caput institit Ossae armavitque in nube manum: volat ignea moles 1 late defervere Pw: bellantem fervere conj. Garrod.
but now her innocent race—" no longer could the Lord of war endure her tears, but changed his spear to his left hand, and in a moment leapt from the lofty car, and clasping her to his shield hurt her in his embrace, and with loving words thus soothes her: "O thou who art my repose from battle, my sacred joy and all the peace my heart doth know: thou who alone of gods and men canst face my arms unpunished, and check even in mid-slaughter my neighing steeds, and tear this sword from my right hand! neither the marriage-bond of Sidonian Cadmus have I forgotten, nor thy dear loyalty—rejoice not in false accusing!—may I be rather plunged, god though I be, in my uncle's infernal lakes, and be hunted weaponless to the pale shades! But now 'tis the Fates' behests and the high Father's purpose I am bid perform—no fit choice were Vulcan's arm for such an errand!—and how can I dare face Jove or go about to spurn his spoken decree, Jove, at whose word—such power is his!—I saw of late earth and sky and ocean tremble, and mighty gods, one and all, seek hiding? But, dear one, let not thy heart be sore afraid, I pray thee—these things no power can change; and when soon beneath the Tyrian walls both races are making war, I will be present and help our kindred arms. Then with happier mien shalt thou behold me descending in fury upon the Argive fortunes far and wide over the bloody plain; this is my right, nor do the fates forbid it." So speaking, he drove on through the open air his flaming steeds. No swifter falls upon the earth the anger of Jove, where'er he stands on snowy Othrys or the cold peak of northern Ossa, and plucks a weapon from the cloud; fast flies the saeva dei mandata ferens, caelumque trisulca territat omne coma iamdudum aut ditibus agris signa dare aut punto miseris involvere nautas.

Iamque remensus iter fesso Danaeia Tydeus arva gradu viridisque legit de vexa Prosymnae terribilis visu: stant fulti pulvere crines, squalidus ex umeris cadit alta in vulnera sudor, insonnesque oculos rubor excitat, oraque retro solvit\(^1\) anhela sitis; mens altum spirat honorem conscia factorum. sic nota in pascua taurus bellator redit, adverso cui colla suoque sanguine procssisque natant palearibus armi;
tune quoque lassa tumet virtus multumque superbit pectore despeeto\(^2\); vacua iacet hostis harena turpe gemens crudosque vetat sentire labores.
talis erat; medias etiam non destitit urbes, quidquid et Asopon venteresque interiacet Argos, inflammare odiis, multumque et ubique retexens legatum sese Graia de gente petendis isse\(^3\) super regnis profugi Polynicis, at inde vim, noctem; scelus, arma, dolos, ea foedera passum regis Echionii; fratri sua iura negari.
prona fides populis; deus omnia credere suadet Armipotens, geminatque acceptos fama pavores.

Utque introgressus portas—et forte verendus concilio pater ipse duces cogebat Adrastus—

\(^1\) solvit \(P\) : sorbet \(\omega\).

\(^2\) pectore despeeto \(P\omega\) : despeeto pecore, at \(conj. Garrod\) despectus \(Bachrens\).

\(^3\) isse \(PD\, N\) : esse \(\omega\) (cf. i. 475).

---

\(^a\) Literally " and terrifies all the heaven so that it gives signs"; the infinitive is best explained as following " territat" by analogy with " cogit"; " territat," therefore, is equivalent 474 fiery bolt, bearing the god's stern command, and all heaven, affrighted at its threefold trail, soon threatens with ominous signs the fruitful fields or overwhelms unhappy sailors in the deep.a

And now Tydeus on his homeward way passes with weary step through the Danaan lands and down the slopes of green Prosymna; terrible is he to behold: his hair stands thick with dust, from his shoulders filthy sweat drips into his deep wounds, his sleepless eyes are raw and red, and gasping thirst has made his face drawn and sunken; but his spirit, conscious of his deeds, breathes lofty pride. So does a warrior bull return to his well-known pastures, with neck and shoulders and torn dewlaps streaming with his foe's blood and his own; then too doth weary valour swell high, filled with pride, as he looks down upon his breast; his enemy lies on the deserted sand, groaning, dishonoured, and forbids him to feel his cruel pains. Such was he, nor failed he to inflame with hatred the midway towns, all that lie between Asopos and ancient Argos, renewing everywhere and oft the tale, how he had gone on embassy from a Grecian people to claim the realm of exiled Polynices, but had endured violence, night crime, arms, treachery,— such was the Echionian monarch's plighted faith; to his brother he denied his due rights. The folk are swift to believe him; the Lord of Arms inlines them to credit all, and, once welcomed, Rumour redoubles fear.

When he entered within the gates—and it happened that the revered sire Adrastus was himself summoning his chiefs to council—he appears all to "terrore cogit." Such uses of analogy are very characteristic of Statius.

475
STATIUS

inprovisus adest, iam illinc a postibus aulae vociferans: "arma, arma viri, tuque optime Lernaeductor, magnanimum si quis tibi sanguis avorum, arma para! nusquam pietas, non gentibus aequum fas aut cura Iovis; melius legatus adissem Sauromatas rabidos servatoremque cruentum Bebrycii nemoris. nec iussa incuso pigetve officii: iuvat isse, iuvat, Thebasque nocentes explorasse manu; bello me, credite, bello, ceu turrem validam aut artam compagibus urbem, delecti insidiis instructique omnibus armis nocte doloque viri nudum ignarumque locorum nequiquam clausere; iacent in sanguine mixti ante urbem vacuam. nunc o, nunc tempus in hostes, dum trepidi exsanguesque metu, dum funera portant, nunc, socer, haec dum non manus excidit; ipse ego fessus quinquaginta illis heroum immanibus umbris vulneraque ista ferens putri insiccata cruore protinus ire peto!" trepidi de sedibus adstant Inachidae, eunctisque prior Cadmeius heros accurrit vultum deiectus et "ego ego divis invisus vitaeque nocens haec vulnera cerno integer! hosne mihi reditus, germane, parabas? in me haec tela mei! pro vitae foeda cupidio!

1 aut cura ω; auctura P; aut iura L and Garrod.
2 rabidos Wakefield (feroces Schol. of D): avidos Pω.
3 nunc socer haec dum non P; dum capulo nondum ω (nondum haec conj. Garrod).
4 mei P: dabas ω.

a As often, for Argos.
b Where Amycus, king of the Bebrycii, fought all strangers unexpectedly, and from the very portals of the palace erics aloud: "To arms, to arms, ye men, and thou, most worthy ruler of Lerna, if thou hast the blood of thy brave ancestors, to arms! Natural ties, justice, and reverence for Jove have perished from the world! Better had I gone an envoy to the wild Sauromatae, or the blood-stained warden of the Bebrycian grove. I blame not thy commands, nor regret my errand; glad am I that I went, yea glad, and that my hand has probed the guilt of Thebes. 'Twas war, believe me, war! like a strong tower or city stoutly fortified was I beset, all defenceless and ignorant of my path, treacherously at night, by a picked ambuscade armed to the teeth, ay, but in vain!—they lie there in their own blood, before a city desolated! Now, now is the time to march against the foe, while they are struck by panic and and pale with fear, while they are bringing in the corpses, now, sire, while this right arm is not yet forgotten. I myself even, wearied by the slaughter of those fifty warriors, and bearing the wounds ye see still running with foul gore, beg to set forth upon the instant!" In alarm the sons of Inachus start up from their seats, and before them all the Cadmean hero runs forward with downcast countenance: "Ah! hated of the gods and guilty that I am! do I see these wounds, myself unharmed? Is this, then, the return thou hadst in store for me, brother? Am I the mark, then, of my kinsman's weapons? Ah! shame-and slew those whom he defeated, until he was himself slain by Pollux.

"excidit," sc. "memoria" as in 1. 302. It is easier to suppose that this was not understood and "capulo" therefore inserted and "nunc socer" dropped than to account for the latter replacing "capulo."
infelix, fratri facinus tam grande negavi.
et nunc vestra quidem maneant in pace quieta\textsuperscript{1} moenia, nec vobis tanti sim causa tumultus hospes adhuc. scio—nec me adco res dextra levavit—, quam durum natis, thalamo quam triste revelli, 375 quam patria; non me ullius domus anxia culpet respectentve truces obliquo lumine matres.
ibo libens certusque mori, licet optima coniunx auditusque iterum revocet socer; hunc ego Thebis, hunc, germane, tibi iugulum et tibi, maxime Tydeu, debo.”  sic variis pertemptat pectora dictis 381 obliquatque preces. commotae questibus irae et mixtus lacrimis caluit dolor; omnibus ultro non iuvenum modo, sed gelidis et inertibus aevi pectoribus mens una subit, viduare penates, 385 finitimas adhibere manus. iamque ire. sed altus consiliis pater imperiique haud flectere molem inscius: “ista quidem superis curaeque medenda\textsuperscript{2} linquite. quæso, meae, nec te germanus inulto seeptra geret, neque nos avidi promittere bellum. 390 at nunc egregium tantoque in sanguine ovantem excipite Oeniden, animosaque pectora laxet sera quies: nobis dolor haud rationis egebit.”

Turbati extemplo comites et pallida coniunx Tydea circum omnes fessum bellique viaeque 395 stipantur. laetus mediis in sedibus aulæ constitit, ingentique exceptus terga columna, vulnera dum lymphis Epidaurius eluit Idmon,

\textsuperscript{1} quieta P: serena \textit{w}.
\textsuperscript{2} medenda \textit{w}: medentia \textit{P}: medenti \textit{Garrod}.

\textit{a} For “auditus” with noun, simply meaning “the voice of,” see ii. 54, ii. 455, v. 94. The word has been unnecessarily emended.
478
ful lust of life! Unhappy I, to have spared my brother so great a crime! Let now your walls at least abide in tranquil peace; let me not, who am still your guest, bring on you such tumult. I know—so hardly has fate dealt with me—how cruel it is, how sad to be torn from children, wife, and country; let no one’s anxious home reproach me, nor mothers fling at me sidelong glances! Gladly will I go, and resolved to die, ay, though my loyal spouse call me back, and her father’s voice once more plead with me. This life of mine I owe to Thebes, to thee, O brother, and to thee, great Tydeus!” Thus with varied speech he tries their hearts and makes dissembling prayer. His complaints stir their wrath, and they wax hot in tearful indignation; spontaneously in every heart, not only of the young, but of those whom age has made cold and slow to action, one purpose rises, to leave desolate their homes, to bring in neighbouring bands, and then to march. But the deep-counselling sire, well-versed in the government of a mighty realm: “Leave that, I pray you, to the gods and to my wisdom to set aright; thy brother shall not reign unpunished, nor are we eager to promise war. But for the present receive this noble son of Oeneus, who comes in triumph from such bloodshed, and let long-sought repose calm his warlike spirit. For our part, grief shall not lack its share of reason.”

Straightway his comrades and anxious wife bestir themselves in haste, all thronging round the way-worn and battle-weary Tydeus. Joyfully in mid-hall he takes his seat, and leans his back against a huge pillar, while Epidaurian Idmon cleanses his wounds nunc velox ferro, nunc ille tepentibus\(^1\) herbis mitior, ipse alta seductus mente renarrat principia irarum, quaeque orsus uterque vicissim, quis locus insidiis, taeito quae tempora bello, qui contra quantique duces, ubi maximus illi sudor, et indicio servatum Maona tristi exponit. cui fida manus  proceresque socerque adstupet oranti, Tyriusque incenditur exsul.

Solverat Hesperii de exo margine ponti flagrantes Sol pronus equos rutilamque lavabat Oceani sub fonte comam, cui turba profundi Nereos et rapidis adcurrunt passibus Horae, frenaque et auratae textum sublime coronae deripiunt, laxant calidis\(^2\) uementia loris pectora ; pars meritos vertunt ad molle iugales gramen et erecto currum temone supinant.
nox subiit eurasque hominum motusque ferarum compositum nigroque polos involvit amictu, illa quidem cunctis, sed non tibi mitis, Adraste, Labdacioque duci ; nam Tydea largus habebat perfusum magna virtutis imagine somnus.
et iam noctivagas inter deus armifer umbras desuper Arcadiae fines Nemeaeaque rura Taenariumque caecum Apollincaisque Therapnas armorum tonitru ferit et trepidantia corda implet amore sui. comunt Furor Iraque cristas, frena ministrat equis Pavor armiger. at vigil omni

\(^1\) tepentibus \(P\) : potentibus \(\omega\).
\(^2\) calidis \(P\) : roseis \(\omega\).

\(^a\) i.e., Polynices.

\(^b\) Theban, from Labdacus, grandfather of Oedipus.

480
with water—Idmon, now swift to ply the knife, now gentler with warm juice of herbs;—he himself, withdrawn into his mind's deep brooding, tells over the beginning of the deeds of wrath, the words each spoke in turn, the place of ambush, and the time of secret battle, what chieftains and how great were matched against him, and where most he laboured, and he relates how Maecon was preserved to take the sad tidings. The faithful company, the princes and his wife's sire, are spellbound at his words, and wrath inflames the Tyrian exile.

Far on the sloping margin of the western sea the sinking Sun had unyoked his flaming steeds, and laved their bright manes in the springs of Ocean; to meet him hastens Nereus of the deep and all his company, and the swift-striding Hours, who strip him of his reins and the woven glory of his golden coronet, and relieve his horses' dripping breasts of the hot harness; some turn the well-deserving steeds into the soft pasture, and lean the chariot backward, pole in air. Night then came on, and laid to rest the cares of men and the prowlings of wild beasts, and wrapped the heavens in her dusky shroud, coming to all with kindly influence, but not to thee, Adrastus, nor to the Labdaelian prince; for Tydeus was held by generous slumber, steeped in dreams of valiant prowess. And now amid the night-wandering shades the god of battle from on high made to resound with the thunder of arms the Nemean fields and Arcady from end to end, and the height of Taenarum and Therapnae favoured of Apollo, and filled excited hearts with passion for himself. Fury and Wrath make trim his crest, and Panic, his own squire, handles his horses' reins. But Rumour, awake
Fama sono vanos rerum succincta tumultus antevolat currum flatuque impulsa gementum alipedum trepidas denso cum murmure plumas excutit: urget enim stimuli auriga cruentis facta, infecta loqui, currueque infestus ab alto terga comamque deae Scythica pater increpat hasta, qualis ubi Aeolio dimissos carcere Ventos dux prae se Neptunus agit magnoque volentes incitat Aegaeo; tristis comitatus eunti circum lora fremunt Nimbique Hiemesque profundae Nubilaque et vulso terrarum sordida fundo Tempestas: dubiae motis radicibus obstant Cyclades, ipsa tua Mycono Gyaroque revelli, Dele, times magnique fidem testaris alumni.

Septima iam nitidum terris Aurora deisque purpureo vehit ore diem, Perseius heros cum primum arcana senior sese extulit aula, multa super bello generisque tumentibus amens incertusque animi, dare armis iura novosque gentibus\(^1\) inctuere stimulos, an frena teneret irarum et motos capulis adstringeret enses. hine pacis tranquilla movent, atque inde pudori foeda quies, flectique nova dulcedine pugnae difficiles populi; dubio sententia tandem sera placet, vatrum mentes ac provida veri saera movere deum. sollers tibi cura futuri,

\(^1\) gentibus \(P\omega\): mentibus \(K\).

---

\(a\) Bellona, cf. vii. 73.

\(b\) Mars.

\(c\) Delos, formerly a floating island, was made fastened to Myconos and Gyaros and made stationary, when Leto was about to give birth to Apollo and Artemis on it.
THEBAID, III. 426–451

to every sound and girt with empty tidings of tumult, flies before the chariot, sped onward by the winged steeds' panting breath, and with loud whirring shakes out her fluttering plumes; for the charioteer a with blood-stained goad urges her to speak, be it truth or falsehood, while threatening from the lofty ear the sire b with Scythian lance assails the back and tresses of the goddess. Even so their chieftain Neptune drives before him the Winds set free from Aeolus' cell, and speeds them willing over the wide Aegean; in his train Storms and high-piled Tempests, a surly company, clamour about his reins, and Clouds and the dark Hurricane torn from earth's rent bowels; wavering and shaken to their foundations the Cyclades stem the blast; even thou, Delos, fearest to be torn away from thy Myconos and Gyaros, and entreatest the protection of thy mighty son. c

And now the seventh Dawn with shining face was bearing bright day to earth and heaven, when the Persean hero d first came forth from the private chamber of his palace, distracted by thought of war and the princes' swelling ambition, and perplexed in mind, whether to give sanction and stir anew the rival peoples, or to hold tight the reins of anger and fasten in their sheaths the restless swords. On the one side he is moved by the thought of tranquil peace, on the other by the shame of dishonoured quiet and the hard task of turning a people from war's new glamour; in his doubt this late resolve at last finds favour, to try the mind of prophets and the true presaging of the sacred rites. To thy wisdom, a Adrastus; "Persean" here, as in i. 225, means Argive, because Perseus was son of Danaë, daughter of Acrisius, king of Argos.

Amphiarae, datur, iuxtaque Amythaone cretus iam senior—sed mente viret Phoeboque—Melampus adsociat passus: dubium, cui pronus¹ Apollo oraque Cirrhaca satiarit largius unda.
principio fibris pecudumque in sanguine divos explorant; iam tunc pavidis maculosa bidentum corda negant diraque nefas minitantia vena.
ire tamen vacuoque sedet petere omina caelo.
Mons erat audaci seductus in aethera dorso—nomine Lernaei memorant Apthesanta coloni—, gentibus Argolicis olim sacer; inde ferebant nubila suspenso celerem temerasse volatu Persea, cum raptos pueri perterrita mater prospexit de rupe gradus ac paene secuta est.
hue gemini vates sanctam canentis olivae fronde comam et niveis ornati tempora vittis evadunt pariter, madidos ubi lucidus agros ortus et algentes laxavit sole pruinias.
ac prior Oeclides solitum prece numen amicat:
"Iuppiter omnipotens—nam te pernicibus alis addere consilium volucresque implere futuri omenaque et causas caelo deferre latentes accipimus,—, non Cirrha deum promiserit antro certius, aut frondes lucis quas fama Molossis Chaonias sonuisse tibi: licet aridus Hammon invideat Lyciaeque parent contendere sortes

¹ pronus P: dexter ω: pectora Bentley.

a Perseus was given wings to enable him to fly, when he slew the Gorgon Medusa.

b i.e., Amphiaraus, son of Ocleus.

c The oracles referred to are those of Apollo at Delphi, Amphiaraus, is given the charge to read the future, and with thee Melampus, son of Amythaon—an old man now, but fresh in vigour of mind and Phoebus' inspiration—bears company; 'tis doubtful which Apollo more favours, or whose mouth he has sated with fuller draughts of Cirrha's waters. At first they try the gods with entrails and blood of cattle: even then the spotted hearts of sheep and the dread veins threatening disaster portend refusal to the timorous seers. Yet they resolve to go and seek omens in the open sky.

A mount there was, with bold ridge rising far aloft—the dwellers in Lerna call it Aphesas—sacred of yore to Argive folk: for thence they say swift Perseus\(^a\) profaned the clouds with hovering flight, when from the cliff his mother terror-stricken beheld the boy's high-soaring paces, and well nigh sought to follow. Hither the prophets twain, their sacred locks adorned with leaves of the grey olive and their temples decked with snow-white fillets, side by side ascend, when the sun rising bright has melted the cold hoarfrost on the humid fields. And first Oecelides\(^b\) seeks with prayer the favour of the wonted deity: "Almighty Jupiter,—for thou, as we are taught, impartest counsel to swift wings, and dost fill the birds with futurity, and bring to light the omens and causes that lurk in mid-heaven,—not Cirrha\(^c\) can more surely vouchsafe the inspiration of her grotto, nor those Chaonian leaves that are famed to rustle at thy bidding in Molossian groves: though arid Hammon envy, and the Lycian oracle contend in rivalry, and the beast of Zeus at Dodona, Zeus Ammon in Libya, Apollo in Lycia, Apis in Egypt, Branchus (son of Apollo) at Miletus." Niliacumque pecus patrioque aequalis\(^1\) honoris Branchus, et undosae quem\(^2\) rusticus accola Pisae Pana Lycaonia nocturnum exaudit in umbra, 480 ditior ille animi, cui tu, Dictaeae, secundas impuleris manifestus aves. mirum unde, sed olim\(^3\) hic honor alitibus, superae seu conditor aulae sic dedit effusum chaos in nova semina texens, seu quia mutatae nostraque ab origine versis 485 corporibus subiere notos, seu purior axis amotumque nefas et rarum insistere terris vera docent; tibi, summe sator terraeque deumque, scire licet. nos Argolicae primordia pugnae venturumque sinas caelo praenosse laborem. 490 si datur et duris sedet haec sententia Parcis solvere Echionias Lernaea cuspide portas, signa feras laevusque tones; tune omnis in astris consonet areana volucris bona murmura lingua. si prohibes, hic necte moras dextrisque profundum 495
alitibus praetexe diem.” sic fatus, et alto membra locat scopulo; tune plura ignotaque iungit numina et immensi fruitur caligine mundi.
Postquam rite diu partiti sidera cunctis perlegere animis oculisque sequacibus auras, 500 tune Amythaonius longo post tempore vates: “nonne sub excelso spirantis limite caeli, Amphiarae, vides, cursus ut nulla serenos

\(^1\)aequalis \(P\omega\): aequatus Schol. Theb. viii. 198.
\(^2\)quem \(Mueller\): qui \(P\omega\).
\(^3\)olim \(\omega\): olims (olis) \(P\): olimst \(Mueller\): olim est Garrod.

\(^a\) Jupiter was born on Mt. Dicte in Crete, according to one legend.

486
Nile, and Branchus, whose honour is equal to his sire's, and Pan, whom the rustic dweller in wave-beat Pisa hears nightly beneath the Lycaonian shades, more richly blest in mind is he, for whom thou, O Dictaean, dost guide the favouring flights that show thy will. Mysterious is the cause, yet of old has this honour been paid to the birds, whether the Founder of the heavenly abode thus ordained, when he wrought the vast expanse of Chaos into fresh seeds of things; or because the birds went forth upon the breezes with bodies transformed and changed from shapes that once were ours; or because they learn truth from the purer heaven, where error comes not, and alight but rarely on the earth: 'tis known to thee, great sire of earth and of the gods. Grant that we may have foreknowledge from the sky of the beginnings of the Argive struggle and the contest that is to come. If it is appointed and the stern Fates are set in this resolve, that the Lernaean spear shall shatter the Echionian gates, show signs thereof and thunder leftward; then let every bird in heaven join in propitious melody of mystic language. If thou dost forbid, then weave delays, and on the right shroud with winged creatures the abyss of day.' So spoke he, and settled his limbs upon a high rock; then to his prayer he adds more deities and deities unknown, and holds converse with the dark mysteries of the illimitable heaven.

When they had duly parted out the heavens and long scanned the air with keen attention and quick-following vision, at last the Amythaonian seer: "Seest thou not, Amphiaraus, how beneath the breathing sky's exalted bounds no winged creature travels on a course serene, nor hangs aloft, en-ales agat liquidoque polum complexa meatu pendeat aut fugiens placabile planxerit omen?
non comes obscurus tripodum, non fulminis ardens vector adest, flavaeque sonans avis unca Minervae, non venit auguriis melior; quin\(^1\) vultur et altis desuper accipitres exsultavere rapinis.
monstra volant, dirae stridunt in nube volucres.
octurnaeque gemunt striges et feralia bubo damna canens. quae prima deum portenta sequamur?
hisne dari. Thymbraee, polus? simul ora recurvo ungen secant rabidae planetumque imitantibus alis exagitant zephyros et plumea pectora caedunt.\(^2\) ille sub haece: \(^3\) equidem variis, pater, omen Phoebi saepe tuli: iam tum, prima cum pube virentem semideos inter pinus me Thessala reges duceret, hic casus terraeque marisque canentem obstipuere duces, nec me ventura locuto saepius in dubiiis auditus Iasoni Mopsus.
515
sed similis non ante metus aut\(^2\) astra\(^3\) notavi prodigiosa magis; quamquam maiora parantur.
hue adverte animum: clara regione profundi aetheros innumeris statuerunt agmina cygni, 520
sive hos Strymonia Boreas eiecit ab Arcto, seu fecunda refert placidi dementia Xili.\(^4\) fixerunt cursus: has rere in imagine Thebas; 525
nam sese immoti gyro atque in pace silentes eceu muris valloque tenent. sed fortior eece \(^1\) quin Bernartius (from a ms.): qui Pw.
\(^2\) aut Pw: tamen P.
\(^3\) astra Pw: monstra Mueller: signa Slater, etc., but astra \(^4\) Nili w: caeli P.
\(^a\) The raven (bird of Apollo), the eagle (of Jupiter), and the owl.
\(^b\) Apollo was worshipped at Thymbra, in the Troad.
\(^c\) The Argo, which started from Iolcos in Thessaly.
488
circling the pole in liquid flight, nor as it speeds along utters a cry of peaceful import? No dark companion of the tripod, nor fiery bearer of the thunderbolt is here, and fair-haired Minerva's hooting bird with the hooked beak comes not with better augury; but hawks and vultures exult on high over their airy plunder. Monstrous creatures are flying, and direful birds clamour in the clouds, nocturnal screech-owls cry, and the horned owl with its dismal funeral chant. What celestial portents are we to follow first? must we take these as lords of the sky, O Thymbraean? Even now in frenzy do they tear each other's faces with crooked talons, and lash the breezes with pinions that seem to smite the bosom, and assail their feathery breasts." The other in reply: "Oft indeed, father, have I read omens of various sort from Phoebus. Yea, when in my vigorous youth the pinewood barque of Thessaly bore me in company of princes half-divine, even then did the chieftains listen spellbound to my chant of what should befall us on land and sea, nor Mopsus' self was hearkened to more often by Jason in perplexity than my presagings of the future. But never ere this day felt I such terror, or observed prodigies so dire in heaven; yet happenings more awful are in store. Look hither then: in this clear region of profound aether numberless swans have marshalled their ranks, whether Boreas has driven them from the Strymonian North, or the benignant fostering air of placid Nile recalls them. They have stopped their flight: these deem thou in fancy to be Thebes, for they hold themselves motionless in a circle and are silent and at peace, as though enclosed by walls and rampart. But lo! a more valiant cohort adventat per inane cohors; septem ordine fulvo armigeras summi lovis exsultante caterva intuor: Inachii sint hi tibi, concipe, reges. invasere globum nivei gregis unaque pandunt caedibus ora novis et strictis unguibus instant. cernis inexperto roantes sanguine ventos, et plumis stillare diem? quae saeva repente victores agitat leto lovis ira sinistri? hie excelsa petens subita face solis inarsit submisitque animos, illum vestigia adortum maiorum volucrum tenevae deponitis alae. hie hosti implicitus pariter ruit, hune fuga retro volvit agens sociae linquentem fata catervae, hie nimbo glomeratus obit, hie praepete viva pascitur immoriens; spargit eava nubila sanguis." "quid furtim inlacrimas?" "illum, venerande Melampus, qui cadit, agnoseo." trepidos sic mole futuri cunctaque iam rerum certa sub imagine passos terror habet vates; piget inrupisse volantum concilia et caelo mentem insertasse vetanti, auditique odere deos.—unde iste per orbem primus venturi miseris animantibus aeger crevit amor? divumne feras hoc munus, an ipsi, gens avida et parto non umquam stare quieti.

---

a i.e., eagles, "ministers of the thunderbolt."

b In the following lines the fate of the Seven is foreshown, first Capaneus, then Parthenopaeus, Polynices, Adrastus, Hippomedon, Tydeus; finally Amphiaraus sees his own fate.

c "tenerae" shows that Parthenopaeus is meant here.

d This is the only instance in the Thebaid of a change of speaker without introductory words (e.g., he said); I have kept the traditional punctuation, though it would be quite possible to give "quid," etc., to Amphiaraus, and not make...
advances through the empty air; a tawny line of seven birds that bear the weapons of Jupiter supreme. I see, an exultant band; suppose that in these thou hast the Inachian princes. They have flung themselves on the circle of the snow-white flock, and open wide their hooked beaks for fresh slaughter, and with talons unsheathed press on to the attack. Seest thou the breezes dripping unwonted blood, and the air raining feathers? What sudden fierce anger of unpropitious Jove is driving the victors to destruction? This one soaring to the height is consumed by the sun’s quick fire, and lays down his proud spirit, that other, bold in pursuit of mightier birds, you let sink, ye still frail pinions. This one falls grappling with his foe, that one is swept backward by the rout and leaves his company to their fate. This one a rain-cloud overwhelms, another in death devours his winged foe yet living; blood bespatters the hollow clouds.” “What mean those secret tears?” “Him yonder falling, reverend Melampus, him I know full well!” Affrighted thus by the future’s dire import, and having suffered all under a sure image of things to come, the seers are held by terror; it repents them that they have broken in upon the councils of the flying birds, and forced their will upon a forbidding heaven; though heard, they hate the gods that heard them. Whence first arose among unhappy mortals throughout the world that sickly craving for the future? Sent by heaven, wouldst thou call it? Or is it we ourselves, a race insatiable, never content to abide on knowledge gained, that Melampus speak at all. Melampus weeps because he understands Amphiaraus’s fate; then Amphiaraus says “Why do you weep for me: I know my fate.”
eruimus, quae prima dies, ubi terminus aevi, quid bonus ille deum genitor, quid ferrea Clotho eogit? hinc fibrae et volucrum per nubila sermo astrorumque vices numerataque semina\footnote{semita \textit{PL}: semita \textit{w.}} lunae Thessalicumque nefas. at non prior aureus ille sanguis avum scopulisque satae vel robore gentes mentibus his usae: silvas amor unus humumque edomnisse manu: quid erastina volveret aetas, scire nefas homini. nos pravum et flebile vulgus scrutari penitus superos: hinc pallor et irae, hinc seelus insidiaeque et nulla modestia voti. 565

Ergo manu vittas damnataque vertice serta deripit abiectaque inhonorus fronde saecerdos inviso de monte redit: iam bella tubaeque comminus, absentesque fremunt sub pectore Thebae. ille nec aspectum volgi, nec fida tyranni conloquia aut coetus procerum perferre, sed atra sede tegi, et superum clausus negat acta fateri; te pudor et curae retinent per rura, Melampu. bissenos premit ora dies populumque ducesque extrahit incertis. et iam suprema Tonantis iussa fremunt agrosque viris annosaque vastant oppida; bellipotens praes se deus agmina passim mille rapit; liquere domos dilectaque laeti conubia et primo plorantes limine natos: tantus in attonitos eeeedit deus. arma paternis postibus et fixos superum ad penetralia currus

\footnote{a} The reference is apparently to horoscopes.
\footnote{b} It is not clear what he means by this: possibly "semita" should be read, "the calculated path of the moon."
\footnote{c} The earliest races, \textit{e.g.} the Arcadians, were supposed to have sprung from trees or rocks.
search out the day of our birth, and the scene of our life's ending, what the kindly Father of the gods is thinking, or iron-hearted Clotho? Hence comes it that entrails occupy us, and the airy speech of birds, and the moon's numbered seeds, and Thessalia's horrid rites. But that earlier golden age of our forefathers, and the races born of rock or oak were not thus minded; their only passion was to gain the mastery of the woods and the soil by might of hand; it was forbidden to man to know what to-morrow's day would bring. We, a depraved and pitiable crowd, probe deep the counsels of the gods; hence come wrath and anxious fear, hence crime and treachery, and importunity in prayer.

Therefore the priest tears from his brow the fillets and wreaths condemned of heaven, and all unhonoured, his chaplet cast away, returns from the hated mount; already war is at hand, and the sound of trumpets, and in his heart he hears the clamour of absent Thebes. Not sight of populace, nor trusted converse with the monarch, nor council of chieftains can he bear, but hidden in his dark chamber refuses to make known the doings of the gods; thee, Melampus, shame and thy own cares keep in thy country region. For twelve days he speaks not, and holds people and leaders in long-drawn suspense. And now tumultuous grow the Thunderer's high behests, and lay waste of men both fields and ancient towns; on every side the war-god sweeps countless troops before him; gladly do they leave their homes and beloved wives and babes that wail upon the threshold; with such power hath the god assailed their frenzied hearts. Eager are they to tear away the weapons from their fathers' doorposts and the vellere amor; tune fessa putri robigine pila haerentesque situ gladios in saeva recurrant vulnera et adtrito cogunt iuvenescere saxo.
hi teretes galeas magnorumque aerea suta thoracum et tunicas chalybum squalore crepantes pectoribus temptare, alii Cortynia lentant cornua; iam falces avidis et aratra caminis rastraque et incurvi saevum rubuere ligones.
caedere nec validas sanctis e stirpibus hastas,
nec pudor emerito clipeum vestisse iuveneo.
inrupere Argos maestique ad limina regis bella animis, bella ore fremunt; it clamor ad auras, quantus Tyrrheni gemitus salis, aut ubi temptat Enceladus mutare latus; super igneus antris mons tonat, exundant apices fluctusque Pelorus contrahit, et sperat tellus abrupta reverti.
Atque hic ingenti Capaneus Mavortis amore excitus et longam pridem indignantia pacem corda tumens—huic ampla quidem de sanguine prisco nobilitas; sed enim ipse manu praegressus avorum facta, diu tuto superum contemptor et aque impatiens largusque animae, modo suaserit ira—, umus ut e silvis Pholoes habitator opacae inter et Aetnaeos aequus consurgere fratres, ante fores, ubi turba ducum vulgique frementis, Amphiarae, tuas "quae tanta ignavia" clamat, chariots made fast in the inmost shrines of the gods; then they refashion for cruel wounds the spears that rotting rust has worn, and the swords that stick in their scabbards from neglect, and on the grindstone force them to be young once more. Some try shapely helms and the brazen mail of mighty corselets, and fit to their breasts tunics that creak with the mouldering iron, others bend Gortynian bows; in greedy furnaces scythes, ploughs and harrows and curved mattocks glow fiercely red. Nor are they ashamed to cut strong spear-shafts from sacred trees, or to make a covering for their shields from the worn-out ox. They rush to Argos, and at the doors of the despondent king clamour with heart and voice for war, for war! And the shout goes up like the roar of the Tyrrenian surge, or when Enceladus \( a \) tries to shift his side: above, the fiery mountain thunders from its caves, its peak o'erflows and Pelorus' flood is narrowed, and the sundered land hopes to return once more.

Then Capaneus, impelled by war's overmastering passion, with swelling heart that had long thought scorn of lingering peace,—nobility of ancient blood had he in full measure, but, surpassing the prowess of his sires, he had long despised the gods; impatient too was he of justice, and lavish of his life, did wrath but urge him—even as a dweller in Pholoe's dark forests, or one who might stand equal among Aetnaean brethren,\( b \) clamours before thy portals. Amphiaras, amid a crowd of chieftains and yelling folk: "What shameful cowardice is this, O sons

\( a \) A giant imprisoned under Aetna. Pelorus was a promontory to the N.E. of Messana.

\( b \) i.e., like a Centaur or one of the Cyclopes.
"Inachidae vosque o socio de sanguine Achivi? unius—heu pudeat!—plebeia ad limina civis tot ferro accinctae gentes animisque paratae pendemus? non si ipse eavo sub vertice Cirrhae, quisquis is est, timidis famaeque ita visus, Apollo mugiat insanum penitus seclusus in antro, exspectare queam, dum pallida virgo tremendas nuntiet ambages. virtus mihi numen et ensis, quem teneo! iamque hic timida cum fraude sacerdos exeat, aut hodie, voluerum quae tanta potestas, experiar." lactum fremit adsensuque furentem implet Achaea manus. tandem prorumpere adaetus Oeclides: "alio eurarum agitante tumultu non equidem effreno iuvenis clamore profani dictorumque metu, licet hie insana minetur, elicior tenebris: alio mihi debita fato summa dies, vetitumque dari mortalibus armis. sed me vester amor nimiusque arcana profari Phoebus agit; vobis ventura atque omne, quod ultra est.

496

Parnassus: Cirrha was really the town on the Corinthian gulf, but is often used for Delphi.
of Inachus, and ye Achaean of kindred blood? Before one citizen's lowly door—for shame!—do we hang irresolute, so vast a host, iron-girt and of ready valour? Not if beneath Cirrha's caverned height a he, whoe'er he is—Apollo cowards and rumour account him—were to bellow from the deep seclusion of his crazy grotto, could I wait for the pale virgin to announce the solemn riddlings! Valour and the good sword in my hand are the gods I worship! And now let this priest with his timid trickery come out, or this very day I shall make trial, what wondrous power there is in birds.” The Achaean mob raise joyful outcry, and encourage his madness. At last Oeclides, driven to rush forth among them: “'Tis not the unrestrained clamour of a blasphemous stripling nor the fear of his taunts that draws me from my darkness, mad though his threatenings be; far different are the tumultuous eares that vex me, far other is the destiny that brings my final doom, nor may mortal arms have power upon me. But now my love for you and Phoebus' strong inspiration compel me to speak forth my oracle: sadly to you will I reveal what is to come, yea all that lies beyond,—to you, I say, for to thee, thou madman, nought may be foreshown, concerning thee only is our lord Apollo silent. Whither, unhappy ones, whither are ye rushing to war, though fate and heaven would bar the way? What Furies' lash drives you blindly on? Are ye so weary of life? Is Argos grown so hateful? Hath home no sweetness? Heed ye not the omens? Why did ye force me to climb with trembling step to the secret heights of Perseus' mount, and break into the council of the heavenly ones? I could have remained in ignorance with casus, ubi atra dies, quae fati exordia cunctis, quae mihi. consulti testor penetralia mundi et volucrum adfatus et te, Thymbraee, vocanti non alias tam saeve mihi, quae signa futuri pertulerim: vidi ingentis portenta ruinae, 640 vidi hominum divumque metus1 hilaremque Megaeram et Lachesin putri vacuument2 saecula penso. proieite arma manu: deus ecce furentibus obstat, ecce deus! miseri, quid pulchrum sanguine victo Aoniam et diri saturare novalia Cadmi? 645 sed quid vana cano, quid fixos arceo casus? ibimus—” hic presso gemuit semel ore sacerdos. illum iterum Capaneus: “ tuus o furor auguret3 uni ista tibi, ut serves vacuos inglorius annos et tua non unquam Tyrrhenus tempora circum 650 clangor eat. quid vota virum meliora moraris? scilicet ut vanis avibus natoque domoque et thalamis potiare iacens, sileamus inulti Tydeos egregii perfossum pectus et arma foederis abrupti? quodsi bella effera Graios 655 ferre vetas, i Sidonios legatus ad hostes: haec pacem tibi serta dabunt. tua prorsus inani verba polo causas abstrusaque nomina4 rerum eliciunt? miseret superum, si carmina curae

1 metus P: nefas ω.
2 vacuument Pω: laxantem P margin.
3 auguret Mueller: augur et Pω.
4 nomina P: semina ω, nomina Baehrens.
you, of what hap awaits our arms, when cometh the black day of doom, what heralds the common fate—and mine! I call to witness the mysteries of the universe I questioned, and the speech of birds, and thee, Thymbraean, never before so pitiless to my supplication, what presagings of the future I endured: I saw a mighty ruin forshown, I saw gods and men dismayed and Megaera exultant and Lachesis with crumbling thread laying the ages waste. Cast away your arms! behold! heaven, yea, heaven withstands your frenzy! Miserable men, what glory is there in drenching Aonia and the fallows of dire Cadmus with the blood of vanquished foes? But why do I warn in vain? why do I repel a fate foredoomed? I go to meet it—”

Here ceased the prophet, and groaned. To him Capaneus yet once more: “To thyself alone utter thy raving auguries, that thou mayst live empty and inglorious years, nor ever the Tyrrhenian clangour resound about thy temples. But why dost thou delay the nobler vows of heroes? Is it forsooth that thou in slothful ease mayst lord it over thy silly birds and thy son and home and women’s chambers, that we are to shroud in silence the stricken breast of peerless Tydeus and the armed breach of covenant? Dost thou forbid the Greeks to make fierce war? then go thyself an envoy to our Sidonian foe: these chaplets will assure thee peace. Can thy words really coax from the void of heaven the causes and hidden names of things? Pitiable in sooth are the gods, if they

\[a\ i.e., \text{of the trumpet}; \text{the Etruscans excelled in bronze work, and this epithet of the trumpet is as old as Aeschylus (Eum. 567).}\] humanaeque preces! quid inertia pectora terres? 660 primus in orbe deos fecit timor! et tibi tuto nunc eat iste furor; sed prima ad classica cum iam hostilem Ismenon galeis Dirceenque bibemus, ne mihi tune, moneo, lituos atque arma volenti obvius ire pares venisque aut alite visa bellorum proferre diem: procul haec tibi mollis infula terrificique aberit dementia Phoebi:
illie augur ego et mecum quicumque parati insanire manu.” rursus fragor intonat ingens hortantum et vasto subter volat astra tumultu.
ut rapidus torrens, animos cui verna ministrant flamina et exuti concreto frigore montes, cum vagus in campos frustra prohibentibus exit obicibus, resonant permixto turbine tecta, arva, armenta, viri, donee stetit improbus alto colle minor magnoque invent in aggere ripas:
hae alterna ducum nox interfusa diremit.

At gemitus Argia viri non amplius aequo corde ferens sociumque animo miserata dolorem, sieut erat laceris pridem turpata capillis et fletu signata genas, ad celsa verendi ibat tecta patris, parvumque sub ubere caro Thessandrum portabat avo iam nocte suprema ante novos ortus, ubi sola superstite plaustro Aretos ad oceanum fugientibus invidet astra.

utque fores iniit magnoque adfusa parenti est: “cur tua cum laerimis maestro sine coniuge supplex limina nocte petam, cessem licet ipsa profari,

* See Petronius, frag. 27, where this commonplace of the rhetoricians is developed in verse.

500
take heed of enchantments and prayers of men! Why dost thou affright these sluggish minds? Fear first created gods in the world! a Rave therefore now thy fill in safety; but when the first trumpets bray, and we are drinking from our helms the hostile waters of Dirce and Ismenos, come not then, I warn thee, in my path, when I am yearning for the bugle and the fray, nor by veins or view of winged fowl put off the day of battle; far away then will be thy soft fillet and the crazy alarms of Phoebus: then shall I be augur, and with me all who are ready to be mad in fight." Again out thunders a vast approving shout, and rolls uproarious to the stars. Even as a swift torrent, drawing strength from the winds of spring and from the melting of the frozen cold upon the mountains, when o'er vainly hindering obstacles it bursts its way out upon the plain, then homesteads, crops, cattle, and men roar mingled in the whirling flood, until its fury is checked and baffled by a rising hill, and it finds itself embanked by mighty mounds: even so interposing night set an end to the chieftains' quarrel.

But Argia, no longer able to bear with calm mind her lord's distress, and pitying the grief wherein she shared, even as she was, her face long marred by tearing of her hair and marks of weeping, went to the high palace of her reverend father in the last watch of night ere dawn, when Aretos' wagon sole-surviving envies the ocean-fleeing stars, and bore in her bosom to his loving grandsire the babe Thessander. And when she had entered the door and was clasped in her mighty parent's arms: "Why I seek thy threshold at night, tearful and suppliant, without my sorrowful spouse, thou knowest, father. even were I seis genitor. sed iura deum genialia testor teque pater, non ille iubet, sed pervigil angor; 690 ex quo primus Hymen movitque infausta sinistram Iuno facem, semper lacrimis gemituque propinquuo exturbata quies. non si mihi tigridis horror aequoreasque\textsuperscript{1} super rigeant praeecordia cautes, ferre queam; tu solus opem, tu summa medendi 695 iura tenes; da bella. pater, generique iacentis aspiece res humiles, atque hanc, pater, aspice prolem exsulis; huic olim generis pudor. o ubi prima hospitalia et inunctae testato\textsuperscript{2} numine dextrae!
hic certe est, quem fata dabant, quem dixit Apollo;
non egomet tacitos Veneris furata calores 701 culpatamve faem: tua iussa verenda tuosque dilexi monitus. nunc qua feritate dolentis despemiam questus? neseis, pater optime, neseis, quantus amor castae\textsuperscript{3} misero nupsisse marito. 705 et nunc maesta quidem grave et inlaetabile munus, ut timeam doleamque, rogo; sed eum oscula rumpet maesta dies, cum rauca dabunt abeuntibus armis signa tubae saevoque genas fulgebatis auro, ei mihi! care pater,\textsuperscript{4} iterum fortasse rogabo.” 710

Illius uementi carpens pater oscula vultu:
“non equidem has umquam culparim, nata, querellas;
pone metus, laudanda rogas nec digna negari.
sed mihi multa dei—nec tu sperare, quod urges, desine—, multa metus regnique volubile pondus 715

\textsuperscript{1} aequoreas Klotz: aequoreae P\textsubscript{w}.
\textsuperscript{2} testato w: funesto P: manifesto Baelirens.
\textsuperscript{3} castae P: causae w.
\textsuperscript{4} pater w: parens P.
slow to tell the cause. But I swear by the sacred laws of wedlock and by thee, O sire, 'tis not he that bids me, but my wakeful anguish. For ever since Hymen at the first and unpropitious Juno raised the ill-omened torch, my sleep has been disturbed by my consort's tears and moans. Not if I were a tigress bristling fierce, not if my heart were rougher than rocks on the sea-strand, could I bear it; thou only canst help me, thou hast the sovereign power to heal. Grant war, O father; look on the low estate of thy fallen son-in-law, look, father, here on the exile's babe; what shame for his birth will he one day feel! Ah! where is that first bond of friendship, and the hands joined beneath heaven's blessing? This surely is he whom the fates assigned, of whom Apollo spake; no hidden fires of Venus have I in secret cherished, no guilty wedlock; thy reverend commands, thy counsel have I ever esteemed. Now with what cruelty should I despise his doleful plaint? Thou knowest not, good father, thou knowest not, what deep affection a husband's misery implants in a loyal bride. And now in sadness I crave this hard and joyless privilege of fear and grief; but when the sorrowful day interrupts our kisses, when the clarions blare their hoarse commands to the departing host, and your faces glitter in their stern casques of gold, ah! then, dear father, mayhap I shall crave a different boon."

Her sire, with kisses on her tear-bedewed face: "Never, my daughter, could I blame these plaints of thine; have no fears, praiseworthy is thy request, deserving no refusal. But much the gods give me to ponder—nor cease thou to hope for what thou urgest—much my own fears and this realm's un-
statius
subieunt animo. veniet, qui debitus istis, nata, modus, neque te incassum flevisse quereris. tu solare virum, neu sint dispensia iustae dura morae: magnos cunctamur, nata, paratus. proficitur bello.” dicentem talia nascens lux monet ingentesque iubent adsurgere curae.
certain governance. In due measure shall thy prayers be answered, and thou shalt not complain thy tears were fruitless. Console thy husband and hold not just tarrying cruel waste of time; 'tis the greatness of the enterprise that brings delay. So gain we advantage for the war.” As thus he spoke, the new-born light admonished him, and his grave cares bade him arise.
Tertius horrentem zephyris laxaverat annum Phoebus et angustum eogebat limite verno longius ire diem, cum fracta impulsaque fatis consilia et tandem miseri data copia belli. prima manu rutilam de vertice Larissaeo ostendit Bellona faeem dextraque trabalem hastam intorsit agens, liquido quae stridula caelo fugit et Aoniae celso stetit aggere Direces. mox et eastra subit ferroque auroque coruseis mixta viris turmale fremit; dat euntibus enses, plaudit equos, vocat ad portas; hortamina fortes praeveniunt, timidisque etiam brevis addita virtus. Dicta dies aderat. cadit ingens rite Tonanti Gradivoque pecus, nullisque secundus in extis pallet et armatis simulat sperare sacerdos. iamque suos circum pueri nuptaeque patresque funduntur mixti summisque a postibus obstant, nec modus est lacrimis: rorant elipeique iubaeque triste salutantum, et cunctis dependet ab armis suspiranda domus; galeis iuvat oscula clusis

1 angustum . . . verno ω: augusto . . . vernum P.
Thrice had Phoebus loosened stark winter with the Zephyrs, and was constraining the scanty day to move in its vernal path with a longer course, when counsellings yielded to the shock of fate, and pitiful war was given at last an ample field. First from the Larissaean height Bellona displayed her ruddy torch, and with right arm drove the spear-shaft whirling; hissing, it flew through the clear heaven, and stood fixed on the high rampart of Aonian Dirce. Then to the camp she goes and, mingling with the heroes that glittered in gold and steel, shouts like a squadron: she gives swords to hurrying warriors, claps their steeds and beckons gateward; the brave anticipate her promptings and even the timid are inspired to short-lived valour.

The appointed day had come. A mighty herd falls in due sacrifice to the Thunderer and to Mars; the priest, cheered by no favouring entrails, pales and feigns hope before the host. And now around their kinsmen sons and brides and fathers pour mingled, and from the summit of the gates would fain delay them. No stint is there of tears: bedewed are the shields and helmet-crests of those who make their sad farewell, and the household, the object of their sighs, clings to every weapon: they delight to find entrance for their kisses through the closed visors, inscrere amplexuque truces deducere conos.
illi, quis ferrum modo, quis mors ipsa placebat, dant gemitus fractaque labant singultibus ira.
sic ubi forte viris longum super aequor ituris, cum iam ad vela noti et scisso redit ancora fundo, 25
haeret amica manus : certant innectere collo brachia, manantesque oculos hine oscula turbant, hine magni caligo maris, tandemque relieti stant in rupe tamen ; fugientia carbas visu dulce sequi, patriosque dolent crebrescere ventos. 30 stant tamen, et nota puppim de rupe salutant.¹

Nunc mihi, Fama prior mundique arcana Vetustas, cui meminisse ducum vitasque extendere curae.
pande viros, tuque o nemoris regina sonori,
Calliope, quas ille manus, quae moverit arma 35
Gradivus, quantas populis solaverit urbes.
sublata molire lyra : neque enim altior ulli mens hausto de fonte venit. rex tristis et aeger pondere curarum propiorque abeuntibus annis inter adhortantes vix sponte incedit Adrastus, contentus ferro cingi latus ; arma manipli pone ferunt, volucres portis auriga sub ipsis comit equos, et iam inde iugo lactatur Arion.
hiic armat Larissa viros, hiic celsa Prosymna, aprior armentis Midea pecorosaque Phlius, 45

¹ ll. 29, 30 omitted by w, 31 omitted by P.

⁠a E. H. Alton (Class. Quarterly, xvii. p. 175) interprets, possibly correctly, "content with a bodyguard," and "arma ferunt" as "march, fully armed," comparing vii. 501 "multoque latus praefulgurat ense," also "ferrum" in
i. 148, iv. 145.
and to draw down the grim helmet-peaks to their embrace. They who of late took pleasure in the sword, yea in death itself, now groan and shake with sobbing, their warlike temper broken. Even so, when men are about to go perchance on some long voyage o'er the sea, and already the south winds are in the sails and the anchor rises from its torn bed, the loving band elings fast and enlaces their necks with eager arms, and their streaming eyes are dimmed, some with kisses, some with the sea's vast haze; at last they are left behind, yet stand upon a rock, and rejoice to follow the swift-flying canvas with their gaze, while they grieve that their native breezes are blowing ever stronger; yet still they stand, and beckon to the ship from the well-known rock.

Now, Fame of olden time, and thou, dark Antiquity of the world, whose care it is to remember princes and to make immortal the story of their lives, recount the warriors, and thou, Calliope, queen of the groves of song, uplift thy lyre and begin the tale, what troops of arms Gradivus roused, what cities he laid waste of their peoples; for to none comes loftier inspiration from the fountain's draught. The king Adrastus, sick with misgiving beneath the burden of his cares, and drawing nigh his life's departure, walked scarce of his own will amongst the applauding people, content to be girt but with his sword;* attendants bear his arms behind him, his charioteer tends the swift horses close by the city gates, and already is Arion struggling against the yoke. To support their king Larissa and high Prosymna arm their men, and Midea, fitter home of herds, and Phlius rich in cattle, and Neris that quaeque pavet longa spumantem valle Charadron Neris, et ingenti turritae mole Cleonae et Lacedaemonium Thyrea lectura\textsuperscript{1} cruorem. iunguntur memores transmissi ab origine regis, qui Drepani scopulos et oliviferae Sicyonis culta serunt, quos pigra vado Strangilla\textsuperscript{2} tacenti lambit et anfractu riparum incurvus Elisson. saevis honos fluvio : Stygias lustrare severis Eumenidas perhibetur aquis ; hue mergere suetae ora et anhelantes poto Phlegetonte cerastas, seu Thraeum vertere domos, seu teeta Myceones impia Cadmeumve larem ; fugit ipse natantes amnis, et innumeris livescunt stagna venenis. it comes Inoas Ephyre solata querellas Cenchreaeque manus, vatum qua conscius amnis Gorgoneo percussus equo, quaque obiacet alto Isthmos et a terris maria inclinata repellit. haee manus Adrastum numero ter mille secuti exsulant ; pars gaesa manu, pars robora flammis indurata diu—non unus namque maniplis mos neque sanguis—habent, teretes pars vertere\textsuperscript{3} fundas adsueti vacuoque diem praecingere gyro.

\textsuperscript{1} Thyrea lectura Weber : thyla electura P : thyre lectura o.
\textsuperscript{2} Strangilla P : stagilla D : Langia o (but Langia is near Nemea) ; various conjectures have been made.
\textsuperscript{3} vertere o : vertice P. Garrod reads teretis . . . fundae here, and conj. vacuomque.

\textsuperscript{a} A district on the borders of Argolis and Laconia, which was the subject of constant fighting between Argives and Spartans down to as late as a hundred years after Statius's time.

\textsuperscript{b} Adrastus was originally ruler of Sicyon, having fled thither from Argos owing to a feud, but subsequently returned to Argos; cf. ii. 179.
quails at Charadros foaming down his valley’s length, Cleonae with her piled mass of towers, and Thyrea destined one day to reap a harvest of Spartan gore. To them are joined men who remember the king sent thence in early days, men who cultivate the rocky heights of Drepanum and olive-bearing Sicyon, and whom Strangilla laves with lazy, silent stream, and Elisson winding through his curving banks. An awful privilege has that river: it cleanses, so ’tis said, with its austere waters the Stygian Eumenides; here are they wont to dip their faces and the horned snakes that gasp from drinking Phlegethon, whether they have ruined Thracian homes or Myeenae’s impious palace or Cadmus’ dwelling; the river itself flees from them as they bathe, and its pools grow livid with countless poisons. Ephyre, who consoled the weeping Ino, lends her company, and Cenchreae, where the river, struck by the Gorgon-quelling steed, owns the presence of the bard, and where Isthmos lies athwart the deep and wards off from the land the sloping seas. This troop, in all three thousand, followed in Adrastus’ train exultant; some bore pikes in their hand, some stakes long hardened in the fire—for neither blood nor custom are shared by all their bands—some are wont to whirl firmly-woven slings and gird the air with a trackless circle.

\(^{c}\) Probably refers to the madness sent upon Lycurgus, king of Thrace, by Dionysus.

\(^{d}\) She bewailed her son Palaemon at Lechaeum, port of Corinth (Ephyre). Cenchreae was the port on the Saronic Gulf; the spring struck out by the hoof of Pegasus was usually placed on Helicon (Hippocrene), but was sometimes identified with Pirene, the fountain at Corinth, cf. Silvae, ii. 7. 2.
ipse annis sceptrisque subit venerabilis aeque:
ut possessa diu taurus meat arduus inter pascua iam laxa cervice et inanibus armis, dux tamen: haud illum bello adtemptare iuvencis sunt animi; nam trunca vident de vulnere multo cornua et ingentes plagarum in pectore nodos.

Proxima longaevo profert Dircaeus Adrasto signa gener, cui bella favent,1 cui commodat iras cuncta cohors: huic et patria de sede volentes advenere viri, seu quos movet exsul et haesit tristibus aucta fides, seu quis mutare potentes praecipuum, multi, melior quos causa querenti conciliat; dederat nee non ipse regendas Aegion Arenenque, et quas Theseia Troezen addit opes, ne rara movens inglorius iret agmina, neu raptos patriae sentiret honores.

idem habitus, eadem arma viro, quae debitus hospes hiberna sub nocte tulit: Teumesius implet terga leo et gemino luceint hastilia ferro, aspera volnifico subter latus ense riget Sphinx.
iam regnum matrisque sinus fidasque sorores spe votisque tenet, tamen et de turre suprema attonitam totoque exstantem corpore longe respicit Argian; haec mentem oculosque reducit coniugis et dulees avertit pectore Thebas.

Ecce inter medios patriae ciet agmina gentis fulmineus Tydeus, iam laetus et integer artus,

1 favent Pw: gerit Bentley.

---

a He was born there, at the home of his mother Aethra, whose father Pittheus was king of Troezen.
b See i. 482.
The king himself moves venerable alike in years and rank: as a tall bull goes amid the pastures he has long possessed, his neck and shoulders now drooping and void of strength, yet the leader still; no courage have the steers to try him in the fight, for they see the horns that many a blow has broken, and huge scars of wounds upon his breast.

Next to the aged Adrastus his Diraean son-in-law brings forth his standards; to his cause the war does service, to him the whole army lends its martial ire, for him even from his native home have men eome gladly, whether those whom his exile moves, and in whom loyalty has stood sure strengthened by adversity, or those in whom desire to change their ruler is uppermost, many again whom the better cause makes favourable to his complaint. Moreover, his father-in-law had given him Aegion and Arene to rule, and all the wealth that Troezen, famous for Thesens, brings, lest with scant following he should go inglorious, and feel the loss of his native honours. The hero wears the same dress and carries the same arms as on that winter's night, when he owed the duty of a guest: a Teumesian lion covers his back, and the twin points of javelins glitter, while by his side a cruel Sphinx rises stiff on his wound-dealing sword. Already in his hopes and prayers he is master of his realm, and holds his mother and faithful sisters in his embrace, yet he looks back upon distraught Argia as she stands on the high tower against the sky; she draws back to herself her husband's eyes and thoughts, and drives pleasant Thebes from out his mind.

Lo! in their midst Tydeus flashing bright leads on his native squadrons, glad already and hale of ut primae strepue tubae: cee lubricus alta anguis humo verni blanda ad spiramina solis erigitur liber senio et squalentibus annis exutus laetisque minax interviret herbis:
a miser! agrestum si quis per gramen hianti obvius et primo fraudaveri^ ora veneno.

95 huic quoque praesentes Aetolis urbibus adfert belli fama viros: sensit scopolosa Pylene fretaque cognatis avibus Meleagria Pleuron et praeeeps Calydon, et quae Love provocat Iden Olenos, Ioniis et fluctibus hospita portu

100 Chalcis et Herculea turpatus gymnade vultus amnis; adhuc imis vix truncam adtollere frontem ausus aquis glaucoque caput submersus in antro maeret, anhelantes aegrescunt pulvere ripae. omnibus aeratae propugnant pectora crates,

105 pilaque saeva manu, patrius stat casside Mavors. undique magnanimum pubes delecta coronant Oeniden, hilarem bello notisque decorum vulneribus; non ille minis Polynicis et ira inferior, dubiumque adeo, cui bella gerantur.

110 Maior at inde novis it Doricus ordo sub armis, qui ripas, Lyricie, tuas, tua litora multo vomere suspendunt, fluviorum ductor Achivum, Inache—Persea neque enim violentior exit amnis humo, cum Taurum aut Pleiadas hausit aquosas ommnes aegrescunt pulvere ripae.

115 1 fraudaverit P: siccaverit w.

\[a\] i.e., after his wounds received at Thebes in the ambush.

\[b\] The sisters of Meleager wept for him until Artemis turned them into guinea-fowl, hence called "meleagrides."

\[c\] Olenos was an Aetolian town called after a king of that name who was a son of Zeus. The Ida referred to is the mountain in Crete, which boasted of having given birth to Zeus.

\[d\] The Achetous.
limb," so soon as the first bugles sounded; even so a slippery snake raises itself from the deep earth at the coaxing breath of the vernal sun, freed of its eld and the unsightly years put off, and gleams, a bright green danger, in the lush herbage; unhappy the husbandman who meets its gaping mouth in the grass, and spoils its fangs of their new venom! To him also the rumour of war brings present help of warriors from the Aetolian cities; rocky Pylene heard the tidings, and Pleuron of Meleager, wept for by his sister-birds; steep Calydon, and Olenos whose Jove doth challenge Ide, and Chalcis, welcome haven from Ionian billows, and the river whose face the athlete Hercules did mar: even yet scarce dares he raise his stricken visage from the waters' depth, but mourns with head sunk far below in his green cave, while the river-banks pant and sicken with dust. All these defend their bodies with bronze-bound targes, and bear fierce halberds in their hands, while native Mars stands erect upon their helms. Chosen youths surround the great-hearted son of Oeneus, high-spirited for battle and in all the glory of his well-known scars; no meaner he in threatening ire than Polynices; 'tis doubtful even for whom the war is waged.

But mightier comes thereon the Dorian array new-armed, they whose numerous ploughs turn up thy banks, Lyrcius, and thy shores, Inachus, prince of Achaean streams—for no more tempestuous torrent flows forth from Persean land, when he has drunk deep of Taurus or the watery Pleiades, foam-

---

* i.e., Peloponnesian.
* i.e., Argive.
* Taurus, the sign of the Zodiac, mentioned as rainy, because the Hyades were in it (cf. Plin. N.H. ii. 110).
spumeus et genero tumuit Iove—quos celer ambit 121 Asterion Dryopumque trahens Erasinus aristas, et qui rura domant Epidauria—dexter Laccho collis, at Hennaeae Cereri negat—; avia Dyme mittit opem densasque Pylos Neleia turmas; 125
nondum nota Pylos iuvenisque aetate secunda Nestor, et ire tamen peritura in castra negavit.
hos agitat pulchraeque docet virtutis amorem arduus Hippomedon; capiti tremit aerea cassis ter niveum scandente\(^1\) iuba, latus omne sub armis ferrea suta terunt, umeros ac pectora late flammeus orbis habet, perfectaque vivit in auro nox Danai: sones Furiarum lampade nigra quinquaginta ardent thalami; pater ipse cruentis in foribus laudatque nefas atque inspicit enses. 130 illum Palladia sonipes Nemeaeus ab arce devehit arma pavens umbraque immane volanti implet agros longoque attollit pulvere campum.
non aliter silvas umerus et utroque refringens pectore montano duplex Hylaeus ab antro 140 praecipitat: pavet Ossa vias, pecudesque feraeque procubuere metu; non ipsis fratribus horror afuit, ingenti donec Peneia saltu stagna subit magnumque obiectus detinet amnem.
Quis numerum ferri gentisque et robora dictu 145
ae quarit mortale sonans? suus excit in arma

---
\(^1\) ter niveum scandente P\(\omega\): nivea N, candente Heinsius.
D\('s Schol. has "triplici ordine.""

---
\(a\) Jupiter was the lover of Io, daughter of Inachus, and
"Jove" is used for "rain"; cf. Virg. \textit{Georg.} ii. 419
"maturis metuendus Jupiter arvis."

\(b\) Where Proserpine was carried off by Pluto.

\(c\) Danaus planned the murder of the fifty suitors of his daughters, who slew their husbands on the wedding night.
ing high and swollen with Jove, his daughter's lover—a they too whom swift Asterion encircles and Erasinus sweeping on his flood Dryopian harvests, and they who tame the fields of Epidaurus—favourable to Iacchus are those hill-sides, but they give denial to Ceres of Henna—desolate Dyme sends aid, and Neleian Pylos her swarming squadrons; not yet renowned was Pylos, and Nestor was as yet in the prime of his second age, but would not join a host doomed to perish. These doth tall Hippomedon excite and teach the love of glorious valour; on his head a brazen helm doth shake with triple tier of snow-white plume, beneath his armour iron mail fits close upon his flanks, his shoulders and breast a wide flaming circle covers, whereon the night of Danaus lives in the gold handiwork: the fifty guilty chambers blaze with the Furies' murky torch, the sire himself on the blood-stained threshold praises the crime and views the swords. A Nemean steed in terror of the fight bears the hero from the citadel of Pallas, and fills the fields with the huge flying shadow, and the long trail of dust rises upon the plain. Not otherwise, crashing through the forests with shoulders and either breast, does twy-formed Hylaeus speed headlong from his mountain cave; Ossa trembles at his going, and beasts and cattle fall in terror; yea, even his brethren are affrighted, till with a great leap he plunges into the waters of Peneus, and with thwarting bulk dams back the mighty flood.

Who could describe in mortal speech that numerous armament, its peoples and their valiant might?

---

\[a\] There was a temple of Athena on the acropolis of Argos (Paus. ii. 24. 4).
\[e\] One of the Centaurs.
antiquam Tirynthia deus; non fortibus illa infecunda viris famaque\(^1\) immanis alumni degenerat, sed lapsa sita fortuna, neque addunt robur opes; rarus vacuis habitator in arvis monstrat Cyclopum ductas sudoribus arees.
dat tamen haec iuvenum tercentum pectora, vulgus innumerum bello, quibus haud ammenta nec enses triste micant: flvae capiti tergoque leonum exuviae gentilis honos, et pineus armat stipes, inexhaustis artantur tela pharetris.
Herculeum paeana canunt, vastataque monstris omnia; frondosa longum deus audit ab Oeta dat Nemea comites, et quas in proelia vires sacra Cleonaei cogunt vineta Molorchi.
gloria nota casae, foribus simulata salignis hospitis arma dei, parvoque ostenditur arvo, robur ubi et laxos qua reclinaverit artus ilice, qua cubiti sedeant vestigia terra.
   At pedes et toto despectans vertice bellum quattuor indomitis Capaneus erepta iuvencis terga superque rigens inieetu molis aenae versat onus; sqalet tripli ramosa corona Hydra recens obitu: pars anguibus aspera vivis argento caelata micat, pars arte reperta\(^2\) conditur et fulvo m oriens nigrescit\(^3\) in auro;
circum annis torpens et ferro caerula Lerna.

\(^1\) famaque P\(\omega\) : famaeve Baehrens, on the ground that this verb is never found with the ablative.

\(^2\) reperta P\(\omega\) : reposta Deiter, retorta, repressa, etc., edd.
Alton conj. pars aere perempta (i.e. "dead" as opp. to "dying"). Garrod conj. pars altera reptans. reperta must be corrupt, but no emendation seems convincing.

\(^3\) nigrescit P: ignescit w, pallescit D.

\(^a\) Hercules.  \(^b\) The scene of his apotheosis.

518
Ancient Tiryns is roused by her own god to arms, not barren of brave men, nor degenerate from her tremendous son's renown, but desolate and her day of fortune past, nor hath she the power that wealth can give; the scanty dweller in her empty fields points out the towers raised by the sweat of Cyclopean brows. Yet she sends three hundred manly hearts, a company undisciplined for war, without javelin-thongs or the surly gleam of swords; on their heads and shoulders the tawny spoil of lions, their tribe's adornment, a pinewood stake their weapon, and shafts crammed tight in inexhaustible quivers. They sing the paean of Hercules and the world swept clear of monsters: the god listens from afar on leafy Oeta. Nemea gives them comrades and all the might that the sacred vineyards of Cleonaean Molochrus summon to war. Well known is the glory of that cottage; pictured upon its willow doors are the arms of the god who was its guest, and in the humble field 'tis shown where he laid his club, and under what holm-oak he reposed his limbs at ease, and where yet the ground bears traces of his lying.

But Capaneus, on foot and looking down by a whole head's height upon the host, wields the burden of four hides torn from the backs of untamed steers and stiffened above with a covering of massy bronze; there lies the Hydra with triple-branching crown, lately slain and foul in death: part, embossed in silver, glitters fierce with moving snakes, part by a cunning device is sunken, and grows dark in the death agony against the tawny gold; around, in dark-blue steel runs the torpid stream of Lerna.

\[c\] The cottage of Molochrus at which Hercules stayed on the night before the slaying of the Nemean lion.
at laterum tractus spatiosaque pectora servat nexilis innumero Chalybum subtemine thorax, horrendum, non matris, opus; galeaeque cornsca 175 prominet arce gigans; atque uni missilis illi cuspide praefixa stat frondibus orba cupressus.
Huic parere dati, quos fertilis Amphigenia planaque Messene montosaque nutrit Ithome, quos Thryon et summis ingestum montibus Aepy, 180
quos Helos et Pteleon, Getico quos flebile vati Dorion; hic fretus doctas anteire canendo Aonidas mutos Thamyris damnatus in annos ore simul citharaque—quibus obvia numina tenenat?— conticuit praeceps, qui non certamina Phoebi 185
nosit et inlustres Satyro pendente Celaenhas.
Iamque et fatidici mens expugnata fatiscit auguris; ille quidem casus et dira videbat signa, sed ipsa manu cunctanti inieverat arma Atropos obrueratque deum, nec coniugis absunt 190 insidia, vetitoque domus iam fulgurat auro.
hoc aurum vati fatata exitiale monebant Argolico; scit et ipsa¹—nfas!—sed perfida coniunx donatio vira mortare velit, spoliisque potestis imminet Argiae raptoque excellere culta. 195 illa libens—nam regum animos et pondera belli haec nutare videt, pariter ni providus heros militet—ipsa sacros gremio Polynicis amati exuerat cultus² haud maesta atque insuper addit:

¹ ipsa Sandstroem: ipse P₂.
² exuerat cultus P: deposuit nexus ὦ.

² Marsyas, who strove with Phoebus on the flute, but,
being defeated, was hung up and flayed by him.
His long flanks and spacious breast are guarded by a corselet woven of iron threads innumerable, a work inspiring terror, no mother's task; a giant rises from the summit of his flashing helm; his spear, that he alone can throw, is a cypress standing stripped of leaves and pointed with iron. Assigned in fealty to him are they whom fertile Amphigenia nourishes, and Messene's plain and mountainous Ithome, Thryon and Aepy high-piled on mountain-tops, Helos too and Pteleon and Dorion that bewails the Getic bard: here Thamyris made bold to surpass in song the skilled daughters of Aonia, but doomed to a life of silence fell on the instant mute with voice and harp alike—who may despise deities met face to face?—for that he knew not what it was to strive with Phoebus, nor how the hanging Satyr brought Celaenae fame.

And now even the fate-foretelling augur's resolve begins to weaken under strong assault; he saw indeed what should befall and the dread signs thereof, but Atropos herself had made violent attack upon his doubting will, and overwhelmed the god within him, nor is wifely treachery absent, and already the house sparkles with the forbidden gold. From that gold did the fates bode destruction to the Argive seer, yea, and she knew it—ah, impious crime!—but the perfidious wife would fain barter her husband for a gift, and yearns to gain the spoils of the princes Argia, and to excel her in the stolen finery. She not unwilling—for she sees that the spirit of the princes and the resolve for war must fail, should not the foreseeing hero join their enterprise—herself put off from her bosom the fatal ornament of her beloved Polynices, nor grieved thereat, but saith moreover:
"non haec apta mihi nitidis ornatibus" inquit,
"tempora, nee miserae placeant insignia formae te sine: sat dubium coetu solante timorem fallere et incultos aris adverrere crines, scilicet—infandum\(^1\)!—. cum tu cludare minanti casside ferratusque sones, ego divitis aurum Harmoniae dotale geram? dabit aptior ista fors deus. Argolicasque habitu praestabo maritas, cum regis coniunx, cum te mihi sospite templa votivis implenda chorus: nunc induat illa, quae petit et bellante potest gaudere marito."
sic Eriphylaeos aurum fatale penates inrupit scelerumque ingentia semina movit, et grave Tisiphone risit gavisa futuris.

Taenariis hic celsus equis, quam dispare coetu Cyllarus ignaro generarat Castore prolem, quassat humum: vatem cultu Parnassia monstrant vellera: frondenti crinitur cassis oliva, albaque puniceas interuplicat infula cristas.
arma simul pressasque iugo moderatur habenas.
hine atque inde morae iaculis, et ferrea curru silva tremit; procul ipse gravi metuendus in hasta eminet et clipeo victum Pythona coruscat.
huius Apollineae currum comitantur Amyclae, quos Pylos\(^2\) et dubiis Malea vitata carinis plaudentique habiles Caryae resonare Dianae, quos Pharis volucrumque parens Cythereia Messe, Taygetique phalanx et oloriferi Eurotae

\(^1\) infandum \(P\): heu superi \(\omega\).
\(^2\) Pylos \(P\omega\): Helos Kölnmann, \textit{who op. Hom.} II. ii. 584: Pylos has already been mentioned i. 125.
"No fit times these to deck myself in shining jewelry, nor without thee let me take delight in adorning my hapless beauty; enough to beguile my doubts and fears with the solace of my maidens, and trail my unkempt tresses at the altars. Shall I—oh! thought unspeakable!—shall I wear rich Harmonia's dower of gold, while thou art shut within thy threatening helmet, and dost clang in arms of steel? More fitly mayhap will heaven grant me that boon, and I outdo the Argolic brides in apparel, when I am queen indeed, and must fill the temples with votive choirs, upon thy safe return. Now let her put it on who desires it, and can rejoice while her husband is at war." Thus the fatal gold made entry to the chambers of Eriphyle, and set in motion the beginnings of great crimes, and Tisiphone laughed loud, exulting in what should come to pass.

Aloft behind Taenarian steeds, whom Cyllarus unknown to Castor had begotten on mares of meaner stock, he makes earth tremble; the adornment of Parnassian wool betrays the prophet, sprays of olive wreath his helmet, and the white fillet intertwines the scarlet crest. He handles at once his weapons and the reins held tight upon the yoke. On either side there is a shelter from darts, and an iron forest trembles on his chariot; far seen he stands, conspicuous and terrible with stern spear, and flashes the conquered Python on his shield. Amyclae, Apollo's town, bears his car company, and the bands of Pylos, and Malea shunned by doubting keels, and Caryae skilled to raise the hymn that wins Diana's applause, and Pharis and Cytherean Messe, mother of doves, the phalanx of Taygetus, and the hardy troop of swan-nurturing Eurotas. The dura manus. deus ipse viros in pulvere crudo Arcas alit nudaque modos virtutis et iras ingenerat; vigor inde animis et mortis honorae dulce sacrum. gaudent natorum fata parentes hortanturque mori, deflent iamque omnis ephebum turba, coronato contenta est funere mater.
frena tenent duplexque inserto missile nodo, exserti ingentes umeros, chlamys horrida pendet, et cono Ledaeus apex. non hi tibi solum,
Amphiarae, merent: auget resupina maniplos Elis, depressae populus subit incola Pisae, qui te, flave, natant terris, Alpheee, Sicanis advena, tam longo non umquam infecte profundo.
curribus innumeris late putria arva lacesunt et bellis armenta domant: ea gloria genti infando de more et fractis durat ab usque axibus Oenomai; strident spumantia morsu vincula, et effossas niveus rigat imber harenas.
Tu quoque Parrhasias ignara matre catervas—
a rudis armorum, tantum nova gloria suadet!—, Parthenopaeae, rapis; saltus tune forte remotos torva parens—neque enim haec iuveni foret ire potestas—
pacabat cornu gelidique aversa Lycaei.
pulchrior haud ulli triste ad discrimen ituro vultus et egregiae tanta indulgentia formae;
nec desunt animi, veniat modo fortior aetas. quas non ille duces nemorum fluviisque dicata

a Mercury, cf. Hor. C. i. 10. 4. b i.e., a crest of swan's feathers.
c King of Elis, who challenged the suitors of his daughter Hippodamia to a chariot-race, and slew them when he defeated them; he was finally defeated and slain himself by Pelops.
d i.e., Arcadian.
Arcadian god himself trains them in the dust of combat, and implants in them the ways of naked valour and warlike temper; hence dauntless courage and the welcome consecration of a glorious death. Their parents rejoice in their children’s fate and urge them on to die; and while the whole band of youths makes lamentation, the mother is content with the wreath that crowns the victim. They hold the reins and two javelins with thong attached, bared are their mighty shoulders, from which a rough cloak hangs; a Ledaean crest is on their helms. Not these alone, Amphiaraus, are in thy service: the slopes of Elis swell thy array, and low-lying Pisa’s folk, who swim thy waters, yellow Alpheus, thou who fairest to Sicanian lands, yet art never tainted by so long a passage through the deep. Countless chariots vex their crumbling fields far and wide, their beasts are broken to war: that glory of the race endures even from the impious ways and broken axles of Oenomaus; the champed bits foam between the jaws, and the white spume bedews the churned earth.

Thou too, Parthenopaeus, unknown to thy mother—unschooled alas! in arms, such lure hath young ambition—speedest onward thy Parrhasian cohorts. Thy warlike parent, so it chanced—not otherwise could the boy have left her—was bringing peace with her bow to distant glades, and the farther slopes of cool Lycaeus. No fairer face was there of any marching to the grim hazard of war, none wins such favour for pre-eminent beauty; nor lacks he courage, so he but come to sterner years. What forest-queens and spirits

---

\(^{a}\) Atalanta, a comrade of Diana, and so vowed to virginity, but Diana “forgave her the crime” of becoming the mother of Parthenopaeus (l. 258).
numina, quas magno non abstulit\(^1\) igne Napaeas? 255 ipsum. Maenalia puerum cum vidit in umbra, Dianam, tenero signantem gramina passu, ignovisse ferunt comiti. Dictaeaque tela ipsum et Amyclaeas umeris aptasse pharetras prosilit audaci Martis percussus amore, 260 arma, tubas audire calens et pulvere belli flaventem sordere comam captoque referri hostis equo: taedet nemorum, titulumque nocentem sanguinis humani pudor est nescire sagittas, igneus ante omnes auro micat, igneus ostro, 265 undantemque sinum nodis inrugat Hiberis, imbelli parma pictus Calydonia matris proelia: trux laeva sonat arcus, et aspera plumis terga Cydonea corytos harundine pulsat electro pallens et iaspide clarus Eoa. 270 cornipedem trepidos suetum praevertere cervos, velatum geminae deiecta lyncis et arma mirantem gravioris eri, sublimis agebat, dulce rubens viridique genas spectabilis aevo. Arcades huic veteres astris lunaque priores, 275 agmina fida datis, nemorum quos stirpe rigenti firma satos, cum prima pedum vestigia tellus admirata tulit; nondum arva domusque nec urbes conubiiisve modus; quercus laurique ferebant cruda puerperia, ac populos umbrosa creavit 280

\(^1\) abstulit \(P\): impulit \(\omega\).

\(a\) i.e., Cretan: Crete was famous for bows and arrows.

\(b\) The reference may, however, be to a steel cuirass (cf. Hor. C. i. 29. 15) fitting tightly upon a full undergarment.

\(c\) The Arcadians were the most primitive people of ancient Greece, and were supposed to have been born originally from rocks or trees (cf. l. 340). For the quaint idea of ll. 282 sqq.
enshrined in rivers, what nymphs of the glade hath he not fired with consuming passion? Diana herself, when she saw the boy beneath the shade of Maenalus stepping youthful o'er the grass, forgave her comrade, so they say, and with her own hand fitted to his shoulders the Dictean shafts and Amyclean quiver. Smitten by dauntless love of war he dashes to the front, burning to hear the clash of arms and bray of trumpets, to soil his fair hair with the dust of battle, and to ride home on a foeman's captive steed. He is weary of the woodlands, and ashamed that he knows not the arrows' baneful boast of human blood. Foremost he shines, ablaze with purple and gold, his streaming cloak furrowed by Iberian eords, and his innocent shield adorned with his mother's Calydonian battles; fierce sounds the bow at his left side, and on his back, plumed with feathery shafts, rattles the quiver set with pale electrum and brilliant Eastern jasper, full of Cydonian arrows. His charger, accustomed to outstrip the flying stags, was covered with two lynxes' hides, and marvelled at his armed master's heavier weight; him he loftily bestrode, comely to look upon from the pleasant flush of youth upon his cheeks. To him the Arcadians an ancient people, older than the moon and stars, give trusty cohorts; they were born, 'tis said, of the hard trunks of forest trees, when the wondering earth first bore the print of feet; not yet were fields or houses or cities or ordinance of marriage: oaks and laurels suffered rude child-birth, and the shady

\[\text{cf. Lucretius, v. 973—}\]
\[\text{nec plangore diem magno solemque per agros quarebant pavidi palantes noctis in umbris,}\] \[\text{i.e., wandered about in search of the sun that had set below the horizon.}\] fraxinus, et feta viridis puer excidit orno.
hi lucis stupuisse vices noetisque feruntur nubila et oeciduum longe Titana secuti desperasse diem. rarescunt alta colonis Maenala. Parthenium fugitur nemus, agmina bello Rhipeque et Stratie ventosaque donat Enispe.
on Tegea, non ipsa deo vacat alite felix Cyllene templumque Aleae nemorale Minervae et rapidus Clitor et qui tibi, Pythie, Ladon paene socer, candensque ingis Lampa nivosis et Pheneos nigro Styga mittere credita Diti.
venit et Idaeis ululatibus aemulus Azan Parrhasiique duces, et quae risistis, Amores, grata pharetrato Nonacria rura Tonanti, dives et Orchomenos pecorum et Cynosura ferarum.
Aepytyos idem ardor agros Psophidaque celsam vastat et Herculeo vulgatos robore montes monstriferumque Erymanthon et aerisonum Stym-phalon.

Arcades hi, gens una viris, sed dissona cultu scinditur: hi Paphias myrtos a stirpe recurvant et pastorali meditantur proelia trunco, his arcus, his tela sudes, his cassida crines integit, Arcadii morem tenet ille galeri, ille Lycaoniae rictu caput asperat ursae.
hos belli coetus iurataque pectora Marti

\(a\) He was father of Daphne.
\(b\) A lake near the town of that name in Arcadia; the underground channels of the rivers were supposed to lead down to Hades.
\(c\) Because there too Cybele was worshipped.
\(d\) When he assumed the shape of Diana to gain the favours of Callisto.
mountain-ash peopled the earth, and the young babe fell from the pregnant ash-tree's womb. 'Tis said that, struck with terror at the change from light to murky darkness, they followed far the setting Titan, despairing of the day. The husbandmen grow few on high Maenalus, the forests of Parthenius are deserted, Rhipe and Stratie and windy Enispe give their troops to aid the war. Neither Tegea nor Cyllene blest by the winged god stand idle, nor Alea, woodland shrine of Minerva, nor swift Clitor, nor Ladon, almost, O Pythian, the father of thy bride; nor yet Lampia with her shining snow-white ridges, nor Pheneos, believed to send down Styx to swarthy Dis. Azan, that can rival the howling mobs of Ida, came, and the Parrhasian leaders, and the Nonaerian countryside, wherein the Thunderer quiver-clad took delight, and furnished laughter for you, ye Loves, and Orehomenos rich in eattle, and Cynosura abounding in wild beasts. The same ardour lays bare the fields of Aepytus and lofty Psophis and the mountains famed for Hercules' might, Erymanthos home of monsters, and Stymphalos with its clanging bronze. All Arcadians these, one race of men, but sundered by differing customs: these bend back Paphian myrtle-saplings, and practise warfare with pastoral staves; some have bows, some pikes for weapons; some cover their hair with helmets, while that one keeps the fashion of the Arcadian hat, and another makes his head terrible with the jaws of a Lycaonian she-bear. This warlike gathering of hearts sworn true to Mars

\[\text{Refers to the brazen rattle with which Hercules frightened the Stymphalian birds.}\]

\[\text{Such as Callisto, daughter of Lycaon, was turned into.}\] milite vicinae nullo iuvere Mycenae;
funeræae tune namque dapes mediique recursus solis, et hic alii miscebant proelia fratres.

Ianque Atalantæas implerat numtius aures, ire ducem bello totamque impellere natum Arcadium: tremuere gradus, elapsaque iuxta tela: fugit silvas pernicior alite vento saxa per et plenis obstantia flumina ripis, qualis erat, correpta sinus et vertice flavum crinem sparsa noto: raptis velut aspera natis praedatoris equi sequitur vestigia tigris.

ut stetit adversisque impegit pectora frenis
—ille ad humum¹ pallens—: "unde haec furibunda cupido,
nate, tibi? teneroque unde improba pectore virtus?
tu bellis aptare viros, tu pondera ferre Martis et ensiferas inter potes ire catervas?
quamquam utinam quires²! nuper te pallida vidi, dum premis obnixo venabula comminus apro, poplite succiduo resupinum ac paene ruentem.
et ni curvato torsissem spicula cornu, nunc ubi bella tibi? nil te mea tela iuvabunt nec teretes arcus, maculis nec discolor atris hie, cui fidis, equus: magnis conatibus instas, vix Dryadem thalamis Erymanthiadumque furori Nympharum mature puer. sunt omen vera:
mirabar, cur templæ mihi tremuisse Dianæ nuper et inferior vultu dea visa, sacrisque exuviae cecidere tholis; hoc segnior arcus dificilesque manus et nullo in vulnere certae.

¹ ille ad humum Pw: illa ad eum Peyrared.
² quires Postgate: vires Pw: vidi Bentley.

a Atreus and Thyestes.
Mycenae, neighbour though she was, helped with no soldiery; for then was the deadly banquet and the sun’s midday withdrawing, and there, too, was a feud of warring brothers.

And now the tidings had filled the ears of Atalanta, that her son was going a captain to the war, and rousing all Arcadia; her steps faltered and the darts fell by her side; swifter than the winged wind she fled from the woodland, o’er rocks and brimming rivers that would stay her, just as she was, with snatched-up raiment and fair hair streaming behind her on the breeze; even as a tigress, bereft of her cubs, fiercely tracks the horse of him that robbed her. When she halted and pressed her bosom on the reins that met her (he pale, with eyes downcast): “Whence comes this mad desire, my son, whence this reckless valour in thy young breast? Canst thou drill men to war, canst thou bear the burdens of Mars and go among the sword-bearing companies? Yet would that thou wert able! Lately I paled to see thee plying thy hunting-lance in close conflict with a struggling boar, forced back upon bent knee and almost fallen, and had I not drawn my bow and sped an arrow, where now would be thy wars? Nought will my shafts avail thee, nor my shapely bows, nor this black-spotted steed in whom thou trustest; mighty are the endeavours to which thou hastenest, and thou a boy scarce ripe for the embraces of Dryads or the passions of Erymanthian Nymphs. Omens tell true: I wondered why Diana’s temple seemed to me of late to tremble, and the goddess herself to frown upon me, and why the votive spoils fell from her roof; this it was that made my archery slack and my hands to falter and never to strike sure. Nay, exspecta, dum maior honos, dum firmius aevum, 335
dum roseis venit umbra genis vultusque recedunt ore mei; tune bella tibi ferrumque, quod ardes, ipsa dabo, et nullo matris revocabere fletu.
nunc refer arma domum! vos autem hunc ire sinetis, Arcades, o saxis nimirum et robose nati?" 340 plura cupit; fusi circum natusque ducesque solantur minuuntique metus, et iam horrida clangunt signa tubae. nequit illa pio dimittere natum complexu multumque duci commendat Adrasto.

At parte ex alia Cadmi Mavortia plebes, 345
maesta ducis furiis nec molli territa fama, quoando his vulgatum descendere viribus Argos.
tardius illa quidem regis causaque pudore, verum bella movet. nulli destringere ferrum impetus, aut umeros elipeo clausisse paterno dulce nec alipedum iuga comere, qualia belli gaudia; deiecti trepidas sine mente, sine ira promisere manus; hic aegra in sorte parentem unanimum, hic dulces primaevae coniugis annos ingemit, et gremio miseris adcrescere natos. 350 bellator nulli caluit deus; ipsa vetusto moenia lapsa situ magnaeque Amphionis arces iam fessum senio nudant latus, et fide sacra aequatos caelo surdum atque ignobile muros firmat opus. tamen et Boeotis urbibus ultrix adspirat ferri rabies, nec regis iniqui subsidi, quantum socia pro gente moventur.

\[a\] For the legend see l. 275 n.

532
wait till thy prowess be greater, thy years more firm, till the shadow come upon thy rosy cheeks and my likeness fade from off thy face. Then I myself will give thee the battles and the sword for which thou dost burn, and no mother's tears shall call thee back.
Now take back thy weapons home! But you, will you suffer him to go to war, ye Arcadians, O born assuredly of rock and oak? a " More would she fain entreat; her son and the chieftains thronging round console her and lessen her fears, and already the bugles' horrid signal blares forth. She cannot loose her son from her loving embrace, and commends him earnestly to his leader Adrastus.

But in another region the Martian folk of Cadmus, dismayed by the madness of the king and terrified by news that is grave indeed—for 'tis spread abroad how Argos is making descent in force—tardily in truth for shame of the monarch and his cause, nevertheless prepare for war. None rush to draw the sword, or take pleasure in covering their shoulders with their father's shield or making trim the harness of wing-footed horses, delights such as war affords; despondent, without resolve or warlike temper, they vouchsafe a timorous aid; this one bewails a loving parent in his evil case, another his wife's pleasant youth and the hapless babes ripening in her womb.
In none does the war-god wax hot; even the walls crumbling with age-long neglect and Amphion's mighty towers lay bare their worn and ancient sides, and a mean and unresponsive toil repairs those parapets once raised to heaven by the inspired harp.
Yet the Boeotian cities are moved by the avenging lust of battle, and are stirred in behalf of their kindred race rather than to aid the unjust king.
ille velut pecoris lupus expugnator opimi, pectora tabenti sanie gravis hirtaque saetis ora cruentata deformis hiantia lana, decedit stabulis hue illuc turbida versans lumina, si duri comperta clade sequantur pastores, magnique fugit non inscius ausi.

Adecumulat crebros turbatrix Fama pavores:
hic iam dispersos errare Asopide ripa Lernaeos equites; hic te, bacchate Cithaeron, ille rapi Teumeson ait noetisque per umbras nuntiat excubiis vigiles arsisse Plataeas.
nam Tyrios sudare lares et sanguine Direen invriguam fctusque novos iterumque locutam Sphinga petris, cui non et scire licentia passim et vidisse fuit: novus his super anxia turbat corda metus: sparsis subito correpta canistris silvestris regina chori decurrit in aequum vertex ab Ogygio trifidamque hue tristis et illuc lumine sanguineo pinum disiectat et ardens erectam attonitis impet clamoribus urbem:
"omnipotens Nysaeae pater, cui gentis avitae pridem lapsus amor, tu nune horrente sub areto bellica ferrato rapidus quatis Ismara thyrso pampineumque iubes nemus inreptare Lyceurgo, aut tumidum Gangen aut claustra novissima Rubrae Tethyos Eoasque domos flagrante triumpho perfuris, aut Hermi de fontibus aureus exis:

\[a\] i.e., Theban: so also "Ogygian," line 380.
\[b\] The leader of the Bacchanals, or women that in Bacchic frenzy roamed the hills round about Thebes.
\[c\] A mountain-city in India, according to some legends the birthplace of Bacchus; Oriental triumphs play a large part in the Dionysian legend.
\[d\] King of Thrace, who resisted Bacchus and his vines.

534
Like is he to a wolf that has forced an entrance to a rich fold of sheep, and now, his breast all clotted with foul corruption and his gaping bristly mouth unsightly with blood-stained wool, hies him from the pens, turning this way and that his troubled gaze, should the angry shepherds find out their loss and follow in pursuit, and flees all conscious of his bold deed.

Disturbing Rumour heaps panic upon panic: one says that scattered cavalry of Lerna wander upon Asopus’ bank, one tells of thy capture, Cithaeron of the revels, another reports Teumesos taken, and Plataeae’s watch-fires burning through the darkness of the night. And to whom throughout the land hath not knowledge, yea sight been granted, of the Tyrian walls a-sweat and Dirce stained with blood, of monstrous births and Sphinx yet once more speaking from her rock? And to crown all, a new fear confounds their anxious hearts: of a sudden the queen of the woodland dance is seized by frenzy, and scattering the sacred baskets runs down to the plain from the Ogygian heights, and bloodshot-eyed waves fiercely to and fro a triple pine-torch, and fills the alarmed city with wild distracted cries: “Almighty Sire of Ñysa, who long hast ceased to love thy ancestral nation, swift-borne beneath the frozen North thou art shaking warlike Ismara now with thine iron-pointed thyrsus, and bidding the vine-groves creep over Lycourgus’ realm, or thou art rushing in mad and flaring triumph by swelling Ganges and the farthest confines of red Tethys and the Eastern lands, or issuing golden from the

\(^{a}\) i.e., what the ancients called the Red Sea, viz. the Persian Gulf.
at tua progenies, positis gentilibus armis quae tibi festa\(^1\) litant, bellum lacrimasque metumque cognatumque nefas, iniusti munera regni, pendimus. aeternis potius me, Bacchē, pruinis trans et Amazoniis ululatum Caucasōn armis siste feren; quam monstra ducum stirpemque profanam eloquar. en urges; alium tibi, Bacchē, furorem iuravi: similes video concurre ere tauros;
 idem amobus honus unusque ab origine sanguis;
ardua conlatis obnixi cornua miscent frontibus alteraque truces moriuntur in ira.
tu peior. tu cede,\(^2\) nocens qui solus avita gramina communemque petis defendere montem.
a miseri morum! bellastis sanguine tanto, et saltum dux alter habet.’’ sic fata gelatis vultibus et Baccho iam demigrante quievit.

At trepidus monstro et variis terroribus impar longaevi rex vatis opem tenebrasque sagaces Tiresiae, qui mos incerta paventibus, aeger consulit. ille deos non larga caede iuvenecum, non alaeri pinna aut verum salientibus\(^3\) extis, nec tripodе implicitо numerisque sequentibus astra, turea nec supra volitante altaria fumo tam penitus, duae quam Mortis limite manes elicitos patuisse refert, Lethaeaque sacra et mersum Ismeni subter confinia ponto

\(^1\) festa \(P\omega\) : bella \(D\).
\(^2\) cede \(P\omega\) : caede \(Bachrens\).
\(^3\) salientibus \(P\) : spirantibus \(\omega\).

\(^a\) i.e., the thyrsus. “Thy progeny,” because Bacchus was the guardian deity of Thebes.
\(^b\) “parat” must be taken both with “Lethaeaque sacra”
and with “ducem,” i.e., Laius; “miscentis” is intrans.
springs of Hermus. But we, thy progeny, have laid aside our country’s weapons that do thee festal honour, and have our portion of war and tears, and terror and kindred crime, the cruel burdens of this unrighteous reign. Rather, O Bacchus, take and set me among the eternal frosts, beyond Caucasus that rings with the war-cry of the Amazons, than that I should tell the horrors of our rulers and their unnatural brood. Lo! thou drivest me! far different was the frenzy I vowed to thee, O Bacchus: I behold two similar bulls engage, alike in honour and sharing one inherited blood; with butting foreheads and lofty horns they close in fierce struggle, and perish in the violence of their mutual wrath. Thou art the villain! do thou give way, who wrongfully seekest all alone to hold ancestral pastures and the hills ye both do own. Ah! miserable and wicked! such bloodshed have your wars cost you, and another champion is master of your meadow.” So spake she, and as the god withdrew his presence fell mute with ice-cold face.

But the king, affrighted by the portent and a prey to various terrors, in sick despair—such is the way of those who fear they know not what—seeks aid from the long-lived seer and the clear-sighted blindness of Tiresias. He replies that heaven shows not its will so clearly by lavish slaughter of steers or nimble feathered wing or the truthful leap of entrails, not by means of garlanded tripod or star-determined numbers, or by the smoke that hovers about the altar’s frankincense, as by the ghosts called up from Death’s stern barrier; then he prepares the rites of Lethe, and makes ready beforehand to evoke the monarch sunk below the confines of Ismenos where miscentis parat ante ducem, circumque bidentum visceribus laceris et odori sulphuris aura graminibusque novis et longo murmure purgat.

Silva capax aevi validaque incurva senecta, aeternum intonsae frondis, stat pervia nullis solibus; haud illam brumae minuere, Notusve ius habet aut Getica Boreas impactus ab Ursa.
subter operta quies, vacuusque silentia servat horror et exclusae palmet male lucis imago.
nee caret umbra deo: nemor Latonia cultrix additur; hanc piceae cedrique et robore in omni effectam sanctis occultat silva tenebris.
huius inaspectae luco stridere sagittae nocturnique canum gemitus, ubi limina patrui effugit inque novae melior redit ora Dianae;
aut ubi fessa iugis, dulcisque altissima somnos lux movet, hic late iaculis circum undique fixis effusam pharetra cervicem excepta quiescit.
extra immane patens tellus Mavortia campi, fetus ager Cadmo. durus qui vomere primo post consanguineas acies sulcosque nocentes ausus humum versare et mollia sanguine prata eruit; ingentes infelix terra tumultus lucis adhuc medio solaque in nocte per umbras exspirat, nigri cum vana in proelia surgunt terrigenae; fugit incepto tremibundus ab arvo agricola insanique domum rediere iuvenci.

538
it mingles with the deep, and makes purgation all around with the torn entrails of sheep and the strong smell of sulphur, and with fresh herbs and the long mutterings of prayers.

There stands a wood, enduring of time, and strong and erect in age, with foliage aye unshorn nor piered by any suns; no cold of winter has injured it, nor has the South wind power thereon nor Boreas swooping down from the Getic Bear. Beneath is sheltered quiet, and a vague shuddering awe guards the silence, and the phantom of the banished light gleams pale and ominous. Nor do the shadows lack a divine power: Latonia’s haunting presence is added to the grove; her effigies wrought in pine or cedar and wood of every tree are hidden in the hallowed gloom of the forest. Her arrows whistle unseen through the wood, her hounds bay nightly, when she flies from her uncle’s threshold and resumes afresh Diana’s kindlier shape. Or when she is weary from her ranging on the hills, and the sun high in heaven invites sweet slumber, here doth she rest with head flung back carelessly on her quiver, while all her spears stand fixed in the earth around. Outside, of vast extent, stretches the Martian plain, the field that bore its harvest to Cadmus. Hardy was he who first after the kindred warfare and the crime of those same furrows dared with the plough-share till the soil and upturned the blood-soaked meads; even yet the accursed earth breathes mighty tumults at midday and in the lonely night’s dim shadows, when the black sons of earth arise to phantom combat: with trembling limbs the husbandman flees and leaves the field unfinished, and his oxen hie them to their stalls, distraught.
STATIUS

Hic senior vates—Stygiis adcommoda quippe terra sacris, vivoque placent sola pinguia tabo—velleris obscuri pecudes armentaque sisti atra monet, quaecumque gregum pulcherrima cervix ducitur; ingemuit Diæe maestusque Cithaeron, et nova clamosae stupuere silentia valles.
tum fera caeruleis intexit cornua sertis ipse manu tractans, notaeque in limite silvae principio largos noviens tellure cavata inclinat Bacchi latices et munera verni lactis et Actaeos imbres suadumque cruorem manibus; adgeritur, quantum bibit arida tellus.
trunca dehinc nemora advolvunt, maestusque sacerdos tris Hecatae totidemque satis Acheronte nefasto virginibus iubet esse focos; tibi, rector Averni, quamquam infossus humo superat tamen agger in auras
pineus; hunc iuxta cumulo minor ara profunda erigitur Cereri; frontes atque omne cupressus intexit plorata latus. iamque ardua ferro signati capita et frugum libamine puro in vulnus cecidere greges; tunc innuba Manto exceptum pater is praelibat sanguen, et omnes ter circum acta pyras sancti de more parentis semineces fibras et adhuc spirantia reddit viscera, nec rapidas cunctatur frondibus atri subiectare faces. atque ipse sonantia flammis virgulta et tristes crepuisse ut sensit acervos Tiresias—illi nam plurimus ardor anhelat ante genas impletque cavos vapor igneus orbes,— exclamat—tremuere rogi et vox terruit ignem:

1 terruit P: impulit ω.

a Honey, for which Hymettus in Attica was famous.
Here the aged seer—for well suited is the ground to Stygian rites, and the soil, rich with living gore, delighted him—bids dark-fleeced sheep and black oxen be set before him, all the finest heads that the herds can show; Dirce and gloomy Cithaeron wailed aloud, and the echoing valleys shuddered at the sudden silence. Then he entwined their fierce horns with wreaths of dusky hue, handling them himself, and first at the edge of that well-known wood he nine times spills lavish draughts of Bacchus into a hollowed trench, and gifts of vernal milk and Attic rain\textsuperscript{a} and propitiatory blood to the shades below; so much is poured out as the dry earth will drink. Then they roll tree trunks thither, and the sad priest bids there be three altar-fires for Heeart and three for the maidens born of cursed Acheron; for thee, lord of Avernus, a heap of pinewood though sunk into the ground yet towers high into the air; next to this an altar of lesser bulk is raised to Ceres of the underworld; in front and on every side the cypress of lamentation intertwines them. And now, their lofty heads marked with the sword and the pure sprinkled meal, the cattle fell under the stroke; then the virgin Manto, catching the blood in bowls, makes first libation, and moving thrice round all the pyres, as her holy sire commands, offers the half-dead tissues and the yet living entrails, nor delays to set the devouring fire to the dark foliage. And when Tiresias heard the branches crackling in the flames and the grim piles roaring—for the burning heat surges before his face, and the fiery vapour fills the hollows of his eyes—he exclaimed, and the pyres trembled, and the flames cowered at his voice.
"Tartareae sedes et formidabile regnum Mortis inexpletae, tuque, o saevissime fratrum, cui servire dati manes aeternaque suntum supplicia atque ini famulatur regia mundi, solvite pulsanti loca muta et inane severae Persephones vulgusque cava sub nocte repostum elicite. et plena redeat Styga portitor alno.
ferte simul gressus, nec simplex manibus esto in lucem remear modus; tu separe coetu Elysios, Persei, pios, virgaque potenti nubilus Arcas agat; contra per crimina functis, qui plures Erebo pluresque e sanguine Cadmi,
anguet ter excusso et flagranti praevia taxo.
Tisiphone, dux pande diem. nec lucis egentes Cerberus occursu capitum detorqueat umbras."

Dixerat, et pariter senior Phoebeaque virgo ereexere animos: illi formidine nulla, quippe in corde deus, solum timor obruit ingens Oedipodioniden, vatisque horrenda canentis nune umeros nune ille manus et vellera pressat anxius ineptisque velit desistere sacris.
qualis Gaetulae stabulantem ad confraga silvae venator longo motum clamore leonem exspectat firmans animum et sudantia nisu tela premens: gelat ora pavor gressusque tremiscunt,

1 Persei Q: persae (-saee) Pw.

\(^{a}\) Hades, or Pluto, was the brother of Zeus and Poseidon; they obtained sky and sea respectively, while he had to be content with the underworld.
"Abodes of Tartarus and awful realm of insatiable Death, and thou, most cruel of the brothers,a to whom the shades are given to serve thee, and the eternal punishments of the damned obey thee, and the palace of the underworld, throw open in answer to my knocking the silent places and empty void of stern Persephone, and send forth the multitude that lurk in hollow night; let the ferryman row back across the Styx with groaning bark. Haste ye all together, nor let there be for the shades but one fashion of return to the light; do thou, daughter of Perses,b and the cloud-wrapt Arcadian with rod of power lead in separate throng the pious denizens of Elysium; but for those who died in crime, who in Erebus, as among the seed of Cadmus, are most in number, be thou their leader, Tisiphone, go on before with snake thrice brandished and blazing yew-branch, and throw open the light of day, nor let Cerberus interpose his heads, and turn aside the ghosts that lack the light."

He spoke, and together the aged man and Phoebus' maiden waited in rapt attention. Nought feared they, for their hearts were inspired of the god; only the son of Oedipus was overcome by a great terror, and in agony he grasps, now the shoulders, now the hands and sacred fillets of the seer as he chants his awful strain, and would fain leave the rites unfinished. Even so a hunter awaits a lion roused by long shouting from his lair in the brushwood of a Gaetulian forest, steeling his courage and holding his spear in a perspiring grip; his face is frozen in terror and his steps tremble; "what beast approaches?" he

b He was brother of Circe and Aeetes. Perseis is Hecate.
quis veniat quantusque, sed horrida signa frementis accipit et caeca metitur murmura cura. 499

1 medicata P: armata ω.

a i.e., if I care not to practise evil rites.

b It is not clear whom or what Statius means by this mysterious phrase. Cf. Lucan, Phars. vi. 743, where a similar Power is appealed to. The Scholiast identifies with the Demiurgus, or Creator, who appears in some philosophical systems (Orphic, Gnostic, Plato’s Timaeus), but more probably Statius is using the language of magical formulae, in which such invocations as “highest,” “greatest,” “king,” without any particular application are common. Cf. the 544 wonders, and "how mighty?" and he hears the roar that gives ominous signal, and measures the growing sound in blind anxiety.

Then Tiresias, as the ghosts did not yet draw nigh: "I bear you witness, goddesses, for whom we have drenched these flames and poured propitious goblets upon the rent earth, I can endure delay no further. Am I heard in vain, priest though I be? Or, if a hag of Thessaly bid you with her frenzied chant, will ye then go, or so often as a Colchian witch drives you with Scythian drugs and poisons, will Tartarus grow pale and stir affrighted: but of me have ye less regard, if I care not to raise bodies from the tomb, and bring forth urns crammed with ancient bones, and profane the gods of heaven and Erebus alike, or hunt with the sword the bloodless faces of the dead and pluck out their sickly tissues?" * Despise not these frail years nor the cloud that is upon my darkened brow, despise it not, I warn you! I, too, can vent my wrath. I know the name whose knowing and whose speaking ye so dread, even Hecate I can confound, feared I not thee, O Thymbraean, and the high lord of the triple world, who may not be known. Him—but I am silent; peaceful old age forbids. Now will I——" but Manto, votary of Phoebus, eagerly cries: "Thou art heard, O father, the pale host draws nigh. The Elysian void is flung open, the spacious shadows of the hidden region are rent, the groves and black rivers lie clear to view, and Acheron belches forth noisome mud. Smoky Phleggethon

---

Gracco-Egyptian magic spells edited by Wessely (Griech. Zauberpapyri, 1888), or by Eitrem (Pap. Osloenses, 1925). Typhon (= Seti) is frequently called on in similar language.
fumidus atra vadis Phlegethon incendia volvit, et Styx discretis interflua manibus obstat. ipsum pallentem solio circumque ministras funestorum operum Eumenidias Stygiaeque severos Iunonis thalamos et torva cubilia cerno. in speculis Mors atra sedet dominoque silentes adnumerat populos; maior superimminet ordo. ipsum pallentem solio circumque ministras arbiter hos dura versat Cortynius urna vera minis poseens adigitque expromere vitas usque retro et tandem poenarum lucra fateri.

quid tibi monstra Erebi, Scyllas et inane furentes Centauros solidoque intorta adamante Gigantum vincula et angustam centeni Aegaeonis umbram?"

"Immo" ait. "o nostrae regimen viresque senectae, ne volgata mihi. quis enim remeabile saxum fallentesque lacus Tityonque alimenta volucrum et caligantem longis Ixiona gyris nesciat? ipse etiam, melior cum sanguis, opertas inspexi sedes, Hecate ducente, priusquam obruit orae deus totamque in pectora lucem detulit. Argolicas magis hue adpelle precando Thebanasque animas; alias avertere gressus lacte quater sparsas maestoque excedere luco, nata, iube; tum qui vultus habitusque, quis ardo sanguinis adfusi, gens utra superbior adsit. die agedum nostramque mone per singula noctem."

Inssa facit carmenque serit, quo dissipat umbras, quo reciet sparsas: qualis, si criminum demas.

\[a\] i.e., Proserpine. \[b\] Minos.
rolls down his streams of murky flame, and Styx interfluent sets a barrier to the sundered ghosts. Himself I behold, all pale upon his throne, with Furies ministering to his fell deeds about him, and the remorseless chambers and gloomy eouch of Stygian Juno.\(^a\) Black Death sits upon an eminence, and numbers the silent peoples for their lord; yet the greater part of the troop remains. The Gortynian judge\(^b\) shakes them in his inexorable urn, demanding the truth with threats, and constrains them to speak out their whole lives' story and at last confess their extorted gains. Why should I tell thee of Hell's monsters, of Scyllas and the empty rage of Centaurs, and the Giants' twisted chains of solid adamant, and the diminished shade of hundredfold Aegaeon?'' "Even so," said he, "O guide and strength of my old age, tell me not things well known. Who knows not the aye-returning rock, and the deceiving waters, and Tityos food of vultures, and Ixion swooning on the long circlings of the wheel? I myself in the years of stronger manhood beheld the hidden realms with Hecate as my guide, before heaven whelmed my vision, and drew all my light within my mind. Rather summon thou hither with thy prayers the Argive and the Theban souls; the rest, my daughter, bid thou with milk four times sprinkled to avert their steps, and to leave the dreary grove. Then tell me, pray, the dress and countenance of each, how great their desire for the spilled blood, which folk draw nigh more haughtily, and thus of each several thing inform my darkness."

She obeys, and weaves the charm wherewith she disperses the shades and calls them back when scattered; potent (but without their crimes) as the Colchis et Aeaco simulatrix litore Circe.
tunc his sacrificum dictis adfata parentem:
"primus sanguineo submittit inertia Cadmus ora lacu, iuxtaque virum Cythereia proles insequitur. geminusque bibit\(^1\) de vertice serpens. 555 terrigenae comites illos. gens Martia, eingunt, qui\(^2\) aevi mensura dies, manus omnis in armis, onnis et in capulo; prohibent obstantque ruuntque spirantum rabie. nec tristi incumbere fossae cura. sed alternum sitis exhaure cruorem.
proxima natarum manus est fletique nepotes.
hie orbam Autonoen et anhelam cernimus Ino respectantem arcus et ad ubera dulce prementem pignus et oppositis Semelen a ventre lacertis.
Penthea iam fractis genetrix Cadmeia thyrsis iamque remissa deo pectusque adaperta\(^3\) cruentum insequitur planctu: fugit ille avia Lethes et Stygius super usque lacus. ubi mitior\(^4\) illum flet pater et lacerum componit corpus Echion.
tristem nosco Lycum dextramque in terga reflexum Aeoliden, umero iactantem funus onusto. 571 necdum ille aut habitus aut versae crimina formae mutat Aristaeo genitus: frons aspera cornu, tela manu, reicitque canes in vulnus hiantes.

\(^1\) insequitur geminusque bibit\(^P\): effluat amborum geminus \(\omega\).  Cf. x. 134, xi. 490.
\(^2\) quis\( L Nauke\): his\( P\omega\).
\(^3\) adaperta\( Gronovius\): adoperta\( P\omega\).
\(^4\) mitior\( \omega\): ianitor\( P\): Garrod conj. inaniter.

\(^a\) Referring to her power of changing men into beasts (lit.
"disguising" them as beasts).
\(^b\) Harmonia, wife of Cadmus. They were changed into serpents.

548
Colchian maiden, or the enchantress\(^{a}\) Circe on the Acaean strand. Then with these words she addressed her priestly sire: "First from the blood-red lake doth Cadmus raise his strengthless head, and the daughter of Cytherea\(^{b}\) follows hard upon her spouse, and from their head twin serpents drink. The earth-born company, seed of Mars, throng round them, whose span of life one day did measure, and every hand is on its weapon, yea, on the sword-hilt; they repel and bar approach, and rush to combat with the fury of living men, nor care they to stoop to the gloomy trench, but thirst to drain each other's blood. Near by is a band of Cadmus' daughters and the sons they mourned. Here we behold bereaved Autonoë\(^{c}\) and panting Ino, looking back at the bow and pressing her sweet pledge to her bosom, and Semele with arms held out to protect her womb. With shivered wands and bosom bare and bleeding, the frenzy of the god now spent, doth his mother, Cadmus' daughter, follow Pentheus with wailing cries; but he fleeth by Lethe's pathless region even beyond the Stygian lakes, where his kindlier sire Echion weeps over him and tends his mangled body. Sad Lycus\(^{d}\) too, I recognize, and the son of Aeolus,\(^{e}\) his right arm bent behind him, and a corpse thrown upon his laden shoulder. Nor yet doth that one change his appearance or the reproach of his transformation, even Aristaeus' son\(^{f}\): the horns roughen his brow, while spear in hand he repels the hounds agape to

\(^{a}\) Mother of Actaeon (iii. 201). She and Ino, Semele and Agave (565) were all daughters of Cadmus.

\(^{b}\) A Theban king, slain by Hercules.

\(^{c}\) Athamas, who slew his son Learchus.

\(^{f}\) Actaeon
ecce autem magna subit invidiosa caterva Tantalis et tumido percenset funera luctu, nil deiecta malis; invat effugisse deorum numina et insanae plus iam permettere linguae.”

Talia dum patri canit intemerata sacerdos, illius elatis tremefacta adsurgere vittis canities tenuesque impelli sanguine vultus, nec iam firmanti baculo nec virgine fida nititur, erectusque solo “desiste canendo.
nata” ait, “externae satis est mihi lucis, inertes discedunt nebulae, et vultum niger exsilit aer.

umbrisne an supero dimissus Apolline complet spiritus? en video quaecumque audita. sed ecce maerent Argolici deiecto lumine manes!
torvus Abas Proetusque noeens mitisque Phoroneus truncatusque Pelops et saevo pulvere sordens Oenomaus largis umectant imbris ora, auguror hine Thebis belli meliora. Quid autem hi grege condenso, quantum arma et vulnera monstrant.
pugnae animae, nobis in sanguine multo oraque pectoraque et falsa clamore levatas intendunt sine pace manus? rex, fallor, an hi sunt quinquaginta illi? cernis Chthoniumque Chrominque Phegeaque et nostra praesignem Maeona lauro.
ne saevite, duces, nihil hic mortalibus ausum, credite, consiliis: hos ferrea neverat annos

1 exsilit Alton: exuit Pw, exserit Lachmann, who cp.
Silv. v. 3. 104.

\[a\] Niobe.

\[b\] Pelops was said to have been cut up and boiled by his father Tantalus as a dish for the gods; they, however, put 550
rend him. But lo! with numerous train comes the jealous Tantalid, and proud in her grief counts o'er the bodies, nought humbled by her woes; she rejoices to have escaped the power of heaven, and now to give freer rein to her mad tongue."

While the chaste priestess thus recounts the tale to her father, his hoary locks trembling rise erect with lifted chaplet, and his pale visage throbs with a rush of blood. No longer rests he on the supporting staff or faithful maiden, but standing upright cries: "Cease thy song, my daughter, enough have I of external light, the sluggish mists depart, black night flees from my face. Comes it from the shades or from Apollo on high, this flooding inspiration? Lo! I behold all that thou didst tell me of. Behold! there mourn the Argive ghosts with eyes downcast! grim Abas, guilty Proetus and gentle Phoroneus, and Pelops maimed and Ocnomaus soiled with cruel dust, all bedew their faces with plenteous tears. Hence do I prophesy for Thebes a favouring issue of the war. But what means this dense throng of warrior-souls, for such their wounds and weapons prove them? Why show they gory faces and breasts, and with unsubstantial clamour raise and shake at me threatening arms? Do I err, O king, or are these that band of fifty? Chthonius thou dost behold, and Chromis and Phegeus and Maeon distinguished by my laurel. Rage not, ye chieftains, no mortal, believe me, dared that enterprise; 'twas iron Atropos span you those destined years.

him together again, with the exception of one shoulder, which was replaced by one of ivory.

\[c i.e., the fifty who were sent by Eteocles to lie in wait for Tydeus, but slain by him, cf. ii. 527 ff.\]
Atropos. existis casus: bella horrida nobis, atque iterum Tydeus, dicit. vittaque ligatis frondibus instantes abigit monstratque cruorem.

Stabat inops comitum Cocytii in litore maesto Laius, immitti quem iam deus ales Averno reddiderat. dirumque tuens obliqua nepotem—noscit enim vultu—non ille aut sanguinis haustus, cetera eeu plebes, aliumve accedit ad imbrems, immortale odium spirans. sed proleit ultro Aonius vates: "Tyriae dux inclyte Thebes, cuius ab interitu non ulla Amphionis arces vidit amica dies, o iam satis utle cruuentum exitium et multum placata minoribus umbra, quos miseranda fugis? iacet ille in funere longo. quem fremis, et iunctae sentit confinia mortis. obsitus exhaustos paedore et sanguine vultus eiectusque die: sors leto durior omni, crede mihi! quaenam immernitum vitare nepotem causa tibi? confer vultum et satiare litanti sanguine venturasque vices et funera belli pande vel infensus vel res miserate tuorum. tune ego te optata vetitam transmittere Lethen puppe dabo placidumque pia tellure reponam et Stygiis mandabo deis," mulcetur honoris muneribus tingitque genas, dein talia reddit; "eun tibi versanti manes, aequaeve sacerdos,

\[a\] The ghosts were to drink of the blood which would enable them to speak of the future. In fact only Laius drinks; cf. line 625, where "tingit genas" means that the invigorating blood makes his cheeks ruddy and lifelike.

\[b\] Laius in Bk. ii. (init.) had been brought from the underworld to appear to Eteocles in a dream.

\[c\] i.e., Oedipus, his son, who slew him.

552
Ye have fulfilled your fate; for us cruel war remains, and Tydeus yet again." He spake, and as they swarmed upon his wool-bound chaplets he drove them off and pointed them to the blood.

Reft of his comrade ghosts stood Laius on Cocytus' dreary strand—for already had the winged god restored him to unpitying Avernus—and glancing sidelong at his dire grandson, for he knew him by his face, came not like the rest of the multitude to drink the blood or the other outpourings, but breathed immortal hatred. But the Aonian seer delays not to lure him forward: "Renowned prince of Tyrian Thebes, since whose death no day has looked with kindly aspect on Amphion's citadel, O thou who hast now enough avenged thy bloody murder, O shade to whom thy issue have made full atonement, whom dost thou fly, unhappy one? He against whom thou ragest lies a living corpse, and feels Death joined with him in linked companionship, his sunken visage besmeared with blood and filth, and all the light of day put out. Trust me, 'tis a fate far worse than any dying! What cause hast thou to shun thy innocent grandson? Turn thy gaze hither, and take thy fill of sacrificial blood; then tell the chances that shall be, and the war's victims, whether thou art in hostile mood or pityest thy kindred's fortunes. Then will I grant thee to cross forbidden Lethe in the bark thou dost desire, and set thee again at peace in the blessed land, in the safe keeping of the gods of Styx." Soothed is he by the proffered honour, and brings the colour to his cheeks, then thus replies: "Why, when thou wert marshalling the spirits, O prophet equal to me

See note a.
lectus ego augurio tantisque potissimus umbriis, qui ventura loquar? satis est meminisse priorum, nostrane praecelari, pudeat, consulta nepotes poseitis? illum, illum saeris adhibete nefastis. qui laeto foidit ense patrem, qui semet in ortus vertit et indignae regerit sua pignora matri. et nunc ille deos Furiarumque atra fatigat concilia et nostros rogat haec in proelia manes. quodsi adeo plaui deflenda in tempora vates, dicam equidem, quo me Lachesis, quo torva Megaera usque sinunt: bellum, innumero venit undique bellum agmine. Lernaeosque trahit fatalis alumnos Gradivus stimulis; hos terrae monstra deumque tela manent pulchrique obitus et ab igne superno sones lege morae. certa est victoria Thebis. ne trepida, nee regna ferox germanus habebit, sed Furiae geminumque nefas, miserisque per enes. ei mihi! crudelis vincit pater.” haec ubi fatus, labitur et flexa dubios ambage relinquit.

Interea gelidam Nemeen et conscia laudis Hereuleae dumeta vaga legione tenebant Inachidae; iam Sidonias avertere praedas, sternere, ferre domos ardent instantque. quis iras flexerit, unde morae, medius quis euntibus error, Phoebe, doce: nos rara manent exordia famae.

a i.e., the Argives.
b Oracular reference to the fate of Amphiaraus (swallowed up by the earth), Capanens (struck by lightning), and the other heroes, and to Eteocles’ decision to refuse burial to the Argive slain.  Cf. Iph. i. 526.
in years, why was I chosen, first out of so many shades, to speak augury and to foretell what shall befall? 'Tis enough to have remembrance of the past. Seek ye my counsel, illustrious grandsons? nay, shame upon you! Him summon ye, him, to your unhallowed rites, who gladly pierces his father with the sword, who turns him to the place of his begetting, and casts back upon his innocent mother her own dear pledge of love. And now he wearies the gods and the dark councils of the Furies, and suppelicates my shade for the coming strife. But if I have found such favour as a prophet of these times of woe, I will speak, so far as Lachesis and grim Megaera suffer me: War cometh from every side, war of countless hosts. Gradivus sweeps on the sons of Lerna\(^a\) before the goads of fate; them there await portents of the earth, and weapons of heaven, and glorious deaths, and unlawful withholdings from the final fire.\(^b\) Victory is sure for Thebes, doubt it not, nor shall thy fierce kinsman have thy realm; but Furies shall possess it, and twofold impious crime, and alas, in your unhappy swords your cruel father triumphs." So speaking he faded from their sight, and left them in doubt at his mazy riddling words.

Meanwhile the sons of Inachus with scattered troop had reached cool Nemea and the glades that witness to Hercules' renown; already they burn with eagerness to drive off Sidonian plunder, to destroy and ravage homesteads. Say thou, O Phoebus, who turned them from their path of anger, whence came their staying, and how in mid course they wandered from the way; to us but scant beginnings of the tale remain.
Marcidus edomito bellum referebat ab Haemo Liber; ibi armiferos geminae\(^1\) iam sidera\(^2\) brumae orgia ferre Getas canumque virescere dorso Othryn et Icaria Rhodopen adsueverat umbra, et iam pampineos materna ad moenia currus promovet; effrenae dextra laevaque secuntur lynæus, et uda mero lambunt retinacula tigres. post exsultantes spolia armenta portant seminecesque lupos seccasque Mimallones ursas. 660 nee comitatus iners: sunt illic Ira Furoque et Metus et Virtus et numquam sobrius Ardor succiduique gradus et castra simillima regi. isque ubi pulsera Nemeen effervere nube conspicit et solem radiis ignescere ferri.\(^3\) needum comitas bellis in certamina Thebas, concussus visis, quamquam ore et pectore marceæ, acraque tympanaque et biforem reticere tumultum imperat, attonitas qui circum plurimus aures, atque ita: "me globus iste meamque exseindere gentem apparat: ex longo recalet furor; hoc mihi saevum Argos et indomita bellum ciet ira novereac. usque adeone parum cineri data mater iniquo natalesque rogi quæque ipse micantia sensi fulgura? relliquias etiam fusaeque sepulcrum paelicis et residem ferro petit impia Theben.

\(^1\) geminae \(\omega\) : gelidae \(P\). \(^2\) sidera \(P\) : sidere \(\omega\). \(^3\) solem radiis ignescere ferri \(P\omega\) : solis . . . ferrum Madvig, silvam Koestlin, frondem Slater, pallescere Garrod (cf. 171), etc. A similar phrase occurs x. 844.

\(^a\) That of the vine, which Icarus of Sparta was taught by Bacchus to cultivate.
\(^b\) "Mimallones," i.e., Bacchanals.

556
In drunken languor Liber was bringing back his array of war from conquered Haemus; there had he taught the warrior Getae, two winters through, to hold the orgies, and white Othrys to grow green along his ridges and Rhodope to bear Icarian shade;\(^a\) already he draws nigh in his chariot decked with vine-leaves to his mother's city; wild lynxes bear him company to right and left, and tigers lick the wine-soaked reins. In his train exulting Bacchanals\(^b\) carry their spoil of beasts, half-dead wolves and mangled she-bears. No sluggish retinue is his: Anger and Fury are there, and Fear and Valour, and Ardour never sober, and steps that stagger, an army most like to its prince. But when he sees the cloud of dust surge up from Nemea, and the sun kindling on the flashing steel, and Thebes not yet marshalled for battle, horror-struck at the sight, though faint and reeling, he commands the brazen cymbals and the drums and the noise of the double pipe, screaming loudest about his astonished ears, to be silent, and thus speaks: "Against me and my race doth that host plan destruction; after long time their rage gains violence anew; savage Argos and my stepmother's indomitable wrath are stirring up this war. Doth it not even yet suffice—my mother's cruel burning, the natal pyre, and the lightning-flash that I myself perceived? Nay, even against the relies and the tomb of her consumed rival, against idle Thebes doth she make impious attack.\(^c\)

\(^a\) The reference is to Semele, mother of Bacchus, to whom she gave birth when struck by Jove's lightning. "residem" seems to mean "unwarlike," often a taunt in the mouths of enemies of Thebes, here a reproach against Argos for attacking her, as she is doing Argos no harm.

557
nectam fraude moras; illum, illum tendite campum, tendite, io, comites.”  Hyrcanae ad signa iugaes intumuere iubas, dicto prius adstitit arvis.

Tempus erat, medii cum solem in culminamundi 680 tollit anhela dies, ubi tardus hiantibus arvis stat vapor atque omnes admittunt aethera luci. undarum vocat ille deas mediusque silentum incipit: “agrestes fluviorum numina Nymphae et nostri pars magna gregis, perferte laborem, 685 quem damus. Argolicos paulum mihi fontibus amnes stagnaque et errantes obducite pulvere rivos, praecipuam Nemeen, qua nostra in moenia bellis nune iter, ex alto fugiat liquor; adiuvat ipse Phoebus adhuc summo, cesset ni vestra voluntas, 690 limite: vim coeptis indulgent astra, meaeque aestifer Erigones spumat canis. ite volentes, ite in operta soli; post vos ego gurgite pleno eliciam, et quae dona meis amplissima saeris, vester habebit honos, nocturnaque furta licentum 695 cornipedum et cupidas Faunorum areebo rapinas.” dixerat: ast illis tenuis peremrere visus ora situs, viridisque comis exhorruit umor.
protinus Inachios haurit sitis ignea campos:
diffugere undae, squalent fontesque lacusque, 700 et cava ferventi durescent flumina limo.
aegra solo inacies, tenerique in origine culmi inclinata seges, deceptum margine ripae

\(^a\) The Hyrcanians were a people on the Caspian; the name is often used by the poets= “wild, savage.”
\(^b\) Because the sun pierces through them.
\(^c\) Named Maera, and set in the heavens as the Dog-star, after the death of Erigone from grief for her father Icarius.

558
By craft will I contrive delay; hasten then thither, ho! my comrades, thither to yon plain!" At the signal the Hyrcanian team pricked up their crests, and, the word scarce spoken, he halted at his goal.

It was the hour when panting day uplifts the sun to the mid summit of the world, when the languid heat hangs over the gaping fields, and all the groves let in the sky. He summons the spirits of the waters, and as they throng round him in silence he begins: "Ye rustic Nymphs, deities of the streams, no small portion of my train, fulfil the task that I now do set you. Stop fast with earth awhile the Argolic river-springs, I beg, and the pools and running brooks, and in Nemea most of all, whereby they pass to attack our walls, let the water flee from the depth; Phoebus himself, still at the summit of his path, doth aid you, so but your own will fail not; the stars lend their strong influence to my design, and the heat-bringing hound of my Erigone is foaming. Go then of your goodwill, go into the hidden places of earth; afterwards will I coax you forth with swelling channels, and all the choicest gifts at my altar shall be for your honour, and I will drive afar the nightly raids of the shameless horn-footed ones, and the lustful rapine of the Fauns."

He spoke, and a faint blight seemed to overspread their features, and the moist freshness withered from their hair. Straightway fiery thirst drains dry the Inachian fields: the streams are gone, fountains and lakes are parched and dry, and the scorched mud hardens in the river-beds. A sickly drought is upon the soil, the crops of tender springing wheat droop low; at the edge of the bank the flock stands stat pecus, atque amnes quaeque armenta natatos. sic ubi se magnis refulus suppressit in antris Nilus et Eoae liquentia pabula brumae ore premit, fumant desertaet gurgite valles et patris undosi sonitus exspectat hiulca Aegyptos, donec Phariis alimento rogatus donet agris magnumque inducit messibus annum. Aret Lerna nocens, aret Lyreius et ingens Inachus advolvensque natantia saxa Charadrus et numquam in ripis audax Erasinus et aequus fluctibus Asterion, ille alta per avia notus audiri et longe pastorum rumpere somnos.\(^1\) una tamen tacitas sed iussu numinis undas haec quoque secreta nutrit Langia sub umbra, nondum illi raptus dederat lacrimabile nomen Archemorus, nee fama deae; tamen avia servat et nemus et fluvium; manet ingens gloria Nympham, cum tristem Hypsipyle dueibus sudatus Achaeis ludus et atra sacrum recolet trieteris Ophelten.
 STATIUS

Ergo nee ardentes elipeos vectare nee artos thoracum nexus—tantum sitis horrida torret—sufficiunt: non ora modo angustisque perusti fauceibus, interior sed vis qua tit; aspera pulsu corda, gelant venae, et siccis crur aeger adhaeret visceribus; tune solo putris, tune pulvere tellus exhalat calidam nubem. non spumeus imber

\(^1\) Seven lines, only found in L and regarded as spurious by all edd., are here omitted.

\(^a\) i.e., Nile, as source of Egypt’s fertility; so Tib. i. 7. 24 “Nile pater.”

\(^b\) The name means “Beginner of Doom,” and denoted the beginning of doom for the Argive host. * Cf. v. 647. Elsewhere the infant is called Opheltes.

\(^c\) i.e., when the Nemean festival is established with its 560 baffled, and the cattle seek in vain the rivers where they bathed. Even so, when ebbing Nile buries itself in mighty caverns and gathers into its mouth the life-giving streams of Eastern winters, the flood-deserted valleys steam, Egypt gapes wide and waits expectant for the roar of her sire's waves, till by dint of many prayers he give sustenance to the Pharian fields and bring on a great year of harvest.

Dry is guilty Lerna, dry Lyreins and great Inachus, and Charadrus that rolls down boulders on his stream, bold Erasinus whom his banks ne'er contain, and Asterion like a billowy sea; oft hath he been heard on pathless uplands, oft known to break the repose of distant shepherds. But Langia alone—and she by the god's command—preserves her waters in the silence of a secret shade. Not yet had slaughtered Archemorus brought her sorrowful renown, no fame had come to the goddess; nevertheless, in far seclusion, she maintains her spring and grove. Great glory awaits the nymph, when the toiling contests of Achaean princes and the four-yearly festival of woe shall do honour to sad Hypsipyle and holy Opheltes.

So then neither burning shields nor close-fitting breastplates have they power to carry—so fiercely doth fiery thirst sear them—not only their mouths and the throat's passage are parched, but a fever rages within, their hearts beat heavily, the veins are thick congealed, and the tainted blood cleaves to the dried-up tissues; then the crumbling, sunburnt earth exhales a hot vapour. No rain of games in honour of Opheltes (the infant whom Hypsipyle nursed, and who was slain by the serpent).

\[ a \] For other descriptions of thirst cf. iii. 328, vi. 471.
manat equum: siccis inlidunt ora lupatis, ora catenatas procul exserrantia linguas;
nec legem dominosve pati, sed perfurit arvis flammatum pecus. hic illue impellit Adrastus exploratores, si stagna Licymnia restent.
si quis Amymones superet liquor: omnia caecis ignibus hausta sedent, nec spes uementis Olympi, cen flavam Libyen desertae pulveris Afri conlustrent nullaque umbratam nube Syenen.
Tandem inter silvas—sic Euhius ipse pararat—errantes subitam pulchro in maerore tuentur Hypsipyle; illi quamvis et ad ubera Opheltes non suus. Inachii proles infausta Lycurgi, dependet—neglecta comam nec dives amictu—regales tamen ore notae, nec mersus acerbis exstat honos. tunc haec adeo stupefactus Adrastus:
"'diva potens nemorum—nam te vultusque pudorque mortali de stirpe negant—, quae laeta sub isto igne poli non quaeris aquas, succurre propinquis gentibus: Arquitenens seu te Latonia casto de grege transmisit thalamis, seu lapsus ab astris non humilis fecundat amor—neque enim ipse deorum arbiter Argolidum thalamis novus—, aspice maesta agmina. nos ferro meritas exseindere Thebas mens tulit, imbelli sed nunc sitis aspera fato submittitque animos et inertia robora carpit da fessis in rebus opem, seu turbidus amnis.
seu tibi foeda palus: nihil hae in sorte pudendum,

a King of Nemea. Hypsipyle was daughter of Thoas, king of Lemnos. For her story see her own narrative in Bk. iv.

b Adrastus mistakes her for Diana.
foam falls from the horses’ mouths, their jaws close on dry bits, and far out hang their bridled tongues; no restraint of their masters do they suffer, but seour the plain, maddened by the fiery heat. This way and that Adrastus sends scouts to discover if the Licymnian lakes yet remain, or aught of Amymone’s waters, but all lie drained by fire unseen, nor is there hope of moisture from Olympus, as though they ranged yellow Libya and Africa’s desert sand and Syene shaded by no cloud.

At length wandering in the woodland—for so had Euhius himself devised—they behold on a sudden Hypsipyle, beauteous in her grief; at her breast Opheltes hangs, not her own child, but the ill-starred offspring of Inachian Lycurgus; dishevelled is her hair and poor her raiment, yet in her countenance are marks of kingly birth, and a dignity not overwhelmed by a bitter lot. Then Adrastus, awe-struck, thus addressed her: “Goddess, queen of the woodlands—for thy countenance and honourable bearing proclaim thee of no mortal birth—thou who beneath this fiery vault art blest in needling not to search for water, succour a neighbouring people; whether the Wielder of the Bow or Latona’s daughter hath set thee in the bridal-chamber from her chaste company, or whether it be no lowly passion but one from on high doth make thee fruitful—for the ruler of the gods himself is no stranger to Argive bowers—look upon our distressed ranks. Us hath the resolve to destroy guilty Thebes with the sword brought hither, but the unwarlike doom of cruel drought doth bow our spirits and drain our exhausted strength. Help thou our failing fortunes, whether thou hast some turbid river or a stagnant marsh; nought is nil humile est: tu nune Ventis pluvioque rogaris pro Iove, tu refugas vires et pectora bellis exanimata reple: sic hoe tibi sidere dextro creseat onus, tantum reduces det flectere gressus Iuppiter, o quanta belli donabere praeda!
Direaeos tibi, diva, greges numerumque rependam sanguinis, et magna lueus signabitur ara.” dixit, et orantis media inter anhelitus ardens verba rapit, cursuque animae labat arida lingua;
idem omnes pallorque viros flatusque soluti oris habet. reddit demisso Lennia vultu: “diva quidem vobis, etsi caelestis origo est, unde ego? mortales utinam hauud transgressa fuissem lustibus! altricem mandati cernitis orbam pignoris; at nostris an quis sinus uberaque ulla, seit dens, et nobis regnum tamen et pater ingens—sed quid ego haece, fessosque optatis demoratis undis?
meum age nune, si forte vado Langia perennes servat aquas; solet et rabidi sub limite Cancri semper, et Iarari quamvis inba fulguret astri, ire tamen.” simul haerentem, ne tarda Pelasgis dxu foret, a! miserum vicino caespite alunnum—sie Parcae volvere—locat ponique negantis floribus adgestis et amico murmure dulces solatur lacrimas: qualis Berecyntia mater.

1 sanguinis et P: plebis et hic o.
2 ponique negantis L Schol, Gronovius Bentley: ponitque negantem P o.

See note on line 692.
to be held shameful, nought too mean in such a pass as ours. Thee now in place of the Winds and rainy Jupiter do we supplicate, do thou restore our ebbing might and fill again our spiritless hearts; so may thy charge grow under suspicious stars! Only let Jupiter grant us to return, what high-piled booty of war shalt thou be given! With the blood of numerous herds of Dirce will I recompense thee, O goddess, and a mighty altar shall mark this grove.” He spoke, but a fevered gasping makes havoc of his words even in mid-utterance, and with the rush of breath his dry tongue stutters; a like pallor holds all his warriors, and like panting of the hollow cheeks. With downcast eyes the Lemnian makes answer: “No goddess indeed am I, to help you, though of heaven be my descent; would that my griefs were not more than mortal! ’Tis an entrusted pledge you behold me nursing, and a nurse herself bereaved. But whether my sons found any lap or breasts to suckle them, heaven knoweth,—and yet I had once a kingdom and a mighty father. But why do I speak thus, and stay you in your weariness from the waters ye desire? Come now with me, perchance Langia’s stream yet runs unfailing: for even beneath the path of the furious Crab ’tis ever wont to flow, yea, though the shaggy hide of the Icarian star a be blazing.” Forthwith, lest she prove a tardy guide to the Pelasgians, she sets down the clinging infant—alas! poor child!—on the grass near by —so willed the Fates—and when he would not be put down consoled his pretty tears with flowers heaped around and coaxing murmurs: like the Berecyntian mother, while she bids the Curetes
STATIUS

... parvum circa iubet exsultare Tonantem Curetas trepidos; illi certantia plaudunt orgia, sed magnis resonat vagitibus Ide.

At puer in gremio verna\textsuperscript{1} telluris et alto gramine nune faciles sternit procursibus herbas in vultum nitens, caram modo egeno nutricem plangore ciens iterumque renidens et teneris meditans verba inluctantia labris miratur nemorum strepitus aut obvia carpit aut patulo trahit ore diem nemorique malorum inscius et vitae multum securus inerrat. sic tener Odrysia Mavors nive, sic puer ales vertice Maenalio, talis per litora reptans improbus Ortygiae latus inclinabat Apollo.

Illi per dumos et opaca virentibus umbris devia; pars cingunt, pars arta plebe sequuntur praecelerantque ducem. medium subit illa per agmen non humili festina modo; iamque amne propinquu rauca sonat vallis, saxosunque impulit aures murmur: ibi exsultans conclamat ab agmine primus, sicut erat levibus tollens vexilla maniplis Argus "aquae!" longusque virum super ora cucurrit clamor "aquae!" sic Ambracii per litora ponti nauticus in remis iuvenum monstrante magistro fit sonus inque vicem contra percussa reclamat terra, salutatus cum Leucada pandit Apollo, incubuere vadis passim discriminate nullo turba simul primique, nequit sescernere mixtos \textsuperscript{1} verna\textsuperscript{e}e P\textsubscript{W}: tenerae conj. Garrod: variae Klotz.

\textsuperscript{a} Delos.

\textsuperscript{b} The temple of Apollo at Actium on the Ambracian Gulf.

566
leap in excited dance around the infant Thunderer; their cymbals clash in emulous frenzy, but Ida resounds with his loud wailings.

But the child, lying in the bosom of the vernal earth and deep in herbage, now crawls forward on his face and crushes the soft grasses, now in clamorous thirst for milk cries for his beloved nurse; again he smiles, and would fain utter words that wrestle with his infant lips, and wonders at the noise of the woods, or plucks at aught he meets, or with open mouth drinks in the day, and strays in the forest all ignorant of its dangers, in carelessness profound. Such was the young Mars amid Odrysian snow, such the winged boy on the heights of Maenalus, such was the rogue Apollo when he crawled upon Ortygia's shore, and set her side atilt.

They go through the coppices and by devious dusky ways of shadowy green; some cluster round their guide, some throng behind, others outstrip her. In the midst of the band she moves with proud mien and hurrying step; and now the vale echoes loud as they approach the stream, and the i)ashing of water upon rocks assails their ears; then first from the column's head, just as he was, with banner raised high for the nimble companies, Argus exultant cries "Water!" and through the warrior's mouths ran the long-drawn shout of "Water!" Even so, along the shores of the Ambracian sea, sounds forth at the helmsman's prompting the shout of the seamen at the oars, and in turn the smitten land sends back the echo, when Apollo at their salutation brings Leucas into view. Into the stream the host plunged, indiscriminate and disordered, chieftains alike and common soldiers;
aequa sitis, frenata suis in curribus intrant armenta, et pleni dominis armisque feruntur quadripedes; hos turbo rapax, hos lubrica fallunt saxa, nee implicitos fluvio reverentia reges proterere aut mersisse vado clamantis amici ora. fremunt undae, longusque a fontibus amnis diripitur. modo lene virens et gurgite puro perspicuus nunc sordet aquis egestus ab imis alveus: inde tori\(^1\) riparum et proruta turbant gramina: iam crassus caenoque et pulvere sordens, quamquam expleta sitis, bibitur tamen. agmina bello decertare putas iustumque in gurgite Martem perfurere aut captam tolli victoribus urbem.

Atque aliquis regum medio circumfluus amni: silvarum, Nemea, longe regina virentum, lecta Iovis sedes, quam tu non Herculis actis dura magis, rabidi cum colla comantia monstri angeret et tumidos animam angustaret in artus! hac saevisse tenus populum in coepta\(^2\) tuorum sufficiat: tuque o cunctis insuete domari solibus, aeternae largitor corniger undae, lactus eas, quacumque domo gelida ora resolvis immortale tumens; neque enim tibi cana repositas Bruma nives raptasque alio de fonte refundit Arcus aquas gravidive indulgent nubila Cori, sed tuus et nulli ruis expugnabilis astro.

\(^1\) tori \(P\): toros \(\omega\) (sc. alveum).
\(^2\) in coepta Schrader: incepta \(PD\), incoepa \(BQN\).

\(a\) The river here is addressed in the masculine, as distinct from its nymph.

\(b\) The idea of the rainbow sucking up moisture is common in Latin writers, \(e.g.\) “bibit ingens Arcus,” Virg. \(G\), i. 380, and \(Theb\). ix. 405: the present passage is an original application of the idea.

\(c\) The north-west wind.
levelling thirst makes no distinction in their confused ranks; bridled horses with their chariots, chargers with armed riders all dash madly in. Some the flood whirs away, some lose their footing on the slippery rocks, nor have they shame to trample their princes as they wrestle with the torrent, or to sink beneath the stream the face of a friend who cries for succour. Loud roar the waves, while far from the fountain-head is the river plundered, that once flowed green and clear, with gentle lucid waters, but now from the depths of its channel is muddied and befouled. Then the sloping banks and torn herbage are mingled with the stream; and now, though it be stained and filthy with mire and earth, and though their thirst be quenched, yet they drink still. One would think armies strove in fight, or a pitched battle raged in the flood, or the conquerors were looting a captured city.

And one of the princes, standing in the midst of the streaming river, cried: "Nemea, noblest by far of verdant glades, chosen seat of Jove, not even to the toils of Hercules wert thou more cruel, when he strangled the furious monster's shaggy neck, and throttled the breath within its swollen limbs. So far let it suffice thee to have vexed thy people's enterprise. And thou, whom no suns are wont to tame, O horned one, so lavish of never failing waters, flow with prosperous current, from whatsoever storehouse thou settest free thy cooling springs, immortally replenished: for hoary Winter pours not out for thee her laid-up snows, nor doth the rainbow shed waters stolen from another fount, nor do the pregnant storm-clouds of Corus show thee favour, but thou flowest all thine own, and no star te nee Apollineus Ladon nec Xanthus uterque Spercheusque minax Centaureusque Lycormas praestiterint; tu pace mihi, tu nube sub ipsa armorum festasque super celebrabere mensas—

a love primus honos—bellis modo laetus ovantes accipias fessisque libens iterum hospita pandas flumina defensasque velis agnoscere turmas.”

\[\text{\textsuperscript{a}}\] \textit{i.e.}, in the Troad or in Lycia.

\[\text{\textsuperscript{b}}\] A river in Aetolia. As there is no known connexion between the river and any Centaur, the epithet may mean “Centaur-like,” \textit{i.e.}, as furious as a Centaur. can overcome thee or destroy. Thee neither Ladon, Apollo's river, shall surpass, nor either Xanthus, nor threatening Spercheus, nor Lycomas of Centaur's fame; thee will I celebrate in peace, thee beneath the very cloud of war, and at the festal banquet, ay, honour thee next to Jove himself—so but thou gladly receive our triumphing arms, and again be pleased to give the welcome of thy streams to our tired warriors, and recognize of thy grace the host thou once didst save."